3 Moreover he *burnt incense in [f]the valley of the son of Hinnom,[1] and [g]burnt his children in the fire, [h]after the abominations of the heathen whom the LORD had cast out before the children of Israel.

4 He [i]sacrificed also and burnt incense in the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

5 Wherefore the LORD [k]his God[2] [l]delivered him into the hand of the king of Syria; and they smote him, and carried away a great multitude of them captives, and brought them to †Damascus. And he was also delivered into the hand of the king of Israel, who smote him with a great slaughter.

6 For [m]Pekah the son of Remaliah slew in Judah [n]an hundred and twenty thousand in one day, which were all ‡valiant men; [o]because they had forsaken the LORD God of their fathers.

7 And Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim, slew Maaseiah the king's son, and Azrikam the governor of the house, and Elkanah that was §next to the king.

8 ¶ And the children of Israel [p]carried away captive of their [q]brethren two hundred thousand, women, sons, and daughters, and took also away much spoil from them, and brought the spoil to Samaria.

9 But a prophet of the LORD was there, whose name was Oded: and [r]he went out before the host that came to Samaria, and said unto them,[3] Behold, [s]because the LORD God of your fathers was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage that [t]reacheth up unto heaven.

10 And now ye purpose to [u]keep under the children of Judah and Jerusalem for bondmen and bondwomen unto you: but are there [x]not with you, even with you, sins against [y]the LORD your God?

11 Now hear me therefore, and [z]deliver the captives again, which ye have taken captive of your brethren: for [a]the fierce wrath of the LORD is upon you.

12 Then certain of [b]the heads of the children of Ephraim, Azariah the son of Johanan, Berechiah the son of Meshillemoth, and Jehizkiah the son of Shallum, and Amasa the son of Hadlai, [c]stood up against them that came from the war,

13 And said unto them, Ye shall not bring in the captives hither: for whereas we have offended against the LORD already, ye intend to [d]add more to our sins and to our and prosperous a monarch,) forms no inconsiderable proof of his repentance, and gives a confidence that his retirement was well improved, and his death happy.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVII. JOTHAM.—Ver. 1, 2. Jotham imitated his father in the best part of his conduct; but did not attempt to enter the temple, or to burn incense, as Uzziah had done. Ver. 3. Ophel. This seems to have been a cliff, or high rock, where a tower and wall were built, to fortify the city. These Jotham greatly strengthened and improved. Ver. 5. It is probable that at the end of three years the Ammonites recovered strength, and refused to pay the tribute. Ver. 6. It has been observed that most, if not all the pious kings of Judah, have some evil thing laid to their charge: but Jotham has not, except as "the people did corruptly," and the high places were not demolished. Ver. 7. It is supposed that Jotham's deeds so attracted attention, that they were recorded in the chronicles of Israel, as well as in those of Judah: though but little has been transmitted to us concerning him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The severest judgments of God have mercy connected with them, either to the persons themselves, or to others, who thence learn caution and circumspection.—It ought to be the constant aim of every one of us to imitate the faith, piety, equity, kindness, self-denial, patience and meekness, of those servants of God with whom we have acquaintance; and carefully to avoid their failings, and the sins into which they have been betrayed: but the reverse of this is general and natural to mankind.—If we would attain to eminence in godliness or usefulness, we must diligently "prepare our ways before the LORD our God;" acting habitually as under his inspection, and depending on his assistance and merciful acceptance, from love to his name and zeal for his glory.—Many pious men have not fortitude or vigour to combat the difficulties which must be expected by those who attempt reformation, in opposition to inveterate prejudices, errors, superstitions, and immoralities; yet all in public stations should remember that this is incumbent upon them, and forms that improvement of their talents which God requires. They should therefore "arise and be doing," according to the duties of their situations, "and the LORD will be with them for good."—But even when the most unexceptionable example is united to the most strenuous and persevering endeavours, the success of pious reformers will not answer their desires and expectations.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVIII. AHAZ—SINNER AND SUFFERER.—Ver. 1—5. Never surely had a man greater opportunity of doing well than Ahaz had, finding things in a good posture, the kingdom rich and strong, and religion established; and yet here we have him, in these few verses, 1. Wretchedly corrupted and debauched. He had had a good education given him, and a good example set him; but parents cannot give grace to their children: all the instructions he had were lost upon him, "he did not that which was right in the sight of the Lord," ver. 1; nay, he did a great deal that was wrong, a wrong to God, to his own soul and to his people; he walked in the way of the revolted Israelites, and the devoted Canaanites, made molten images and worshipped them, contrary to the second commandment; nay, he made them for Baalim, contrary to the first commandment. He forsook the temple of the Lord, and sacrificed and burnt incense on the hills, as if those would place him nearer heaven; and under every green tree, as if those would signify the protection and influence of heaven by their shade and dropping. To complete his wickedness, as one perfectly divested of all natural affection as well as religion, and perfectly devoted to the service and interest of the great enemy of mankind, he "burnt his children in the fire to Moloch," ver. 3, not thinking it enough to dedicate them to that infernal fiend by causing them to pass through the fire. See what an absolute sway the prince of the power of the air bears among the children of disobedience. 2. Wretchedly spoiled and made a prey of. When he forsook God, and at a vast expense put himself under the protection of false gods, God, who of right was his God, delivered him into the hands of his enemies, ver. 5. (1.) The Syrians insulted him, and triumphed over him, beat him in the field, and carried away a great many of his people into captivity. (2.) The king of Israel, though an idolater too, was made a scourge to him, and "smote him a great slaughter." The people suffered by these judgments, their blood was shed, their country wasted, their families ruined; for when they had a good king, though "they did corruptly," chap. xxvii. 2, yet then his goodness sheltered him; but now, that they had a bad one, all their defence was departed from them, and an inundation of judgments broke in upon them. They that knew not their happiness in the foregoing reign, were taught to value it by the miseries of this reign.

ODED'S MESSAGE.—Ver. 9. 1. He tells them how they came by this victory, of which they were so proud; it was not because God favoured them, or that they had merited it at his hand, but "because he was wroth with Judah," and made them the rod of his indignation. "Not for your righteousness," be it known to you, but "for their wickedness," Deut. ix. 5, "they are broken off;" therefore "be not ye high-minded, but fear, lest God also spare not you," Rom. xi. 20, 21. 2. He charges them with the abuse of the power God had given them over their brethren. They understand not what victory is, who think it gives them authority to do what they will, and that the longest sword is the clearest claim to lives and estates: (Jusque datum sceleri—Might is right:) no, as it is impolitic not to use a victory, so it is impious to abuse it. The conquerors are here trespass: for our trespass is great, and there is fierce wrath against Israel.

14 So the armed men left the captives [a] and the spoil before the princes and all the congregation.

15 And the men which were [c]expressed by name rose up, and took the captives, and with the spoil [f]clothed all that were naked among them, and arrayed them, and shod them, and [g]gave them to eat and to drink, and anointed them, and carried all the feeble of them upon asses, and brought them to Jericho, [h]the city of palm trees, to their brethren: then they returned to Samaria.

16 ¶ At that time [i]did king Ahaz send unto the kings of Assyria to help him.

17 For again [k]the Edomites had come and smitten Judah, and carried away ‖captives.

18 The [l]Philistines also had invaded the cities of the low country, and of the south of Judah, and had taken [m]Beth-shemesh, and [n]Ajalon, and [o]Gederoth, and [p]Shocho with the villages thereof, and [q]Timnah with the villages thereof, Gimzo also and the villages thereof: and they dwelt there.

19 For [r]the LORD brought Judah low [s]because of Ahaz king of [t]Israel;[5] for he [u]made Judah naked, and transgressed sore against the LORD.

20 And [x]Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria came unto him, and [y]distressed him, but strengthened him not.

21 For [z]Ahaz took away a portion out of the house of the LORD, and out of the house of the king, and of the princes, and gave it unto the king of Assyria: but he helped him not.

22 ¶ And [a]in the time of his distress did he trespass yet more against the LORD: [b]this is that king Ahaz.[6]

23 For [c]he sacrificed unto the gods of [*]Damascus, which smote him: and he said, [d]Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, therefore will I [e]sacrifice to them, that they may help me. But [f]they were the ruin of him, and of all Israel.

24 And Ahaz gathered together the vessels of the house of God, and [g]cut in pieces the vessels of the house of God, and [h]shut up the doors of the house of the LORD, and [i]he made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem.

25 And in every several city of Judah he made high places to [†]burn incense unto other gods, and provoked to anger the LORD God of his fathers.

26 ¶ Now [k]the rest of his acts, and of all his ways, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

27 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city, even in Jerusalem: but [l]they brought him not into the sepulchres of the kings of Israel: and Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XXIX.

Hezekiah's good reign, 1: he restoreth religion, 3. The house of God cleansed, 12.

HEZEKIAH [a] began to reign when he was five and twenty years old, and he reigned nine and twenty years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Abijah, the daughter of [b]Zechariah.

2 And he [c]did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that David his father had done.

3 ¶ He [d]in the first year of his reign, in the first month, [e]opened the doors of the house of the LORD, and repaired them.

4 And he brought in the priests and the Levites, and gathered them together into the [f]east street,

5 And said unto them, [g]Hear me, ye Levites; sanctify now yourselves, and [h]sanctify the house of the LORD God of your fathers, and carry forth the filthiness[1] out of the holy place.

6 For [i]our fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD our God, and [k]have forsaken him, and have [l]turned away their faces from the habitation of the LORD, and [*]turned their backs.[2]

7 Also [m]they have shut up the doors of the porch, and put out the lamps, and have not burned incense, nor offered burnt offerings in the holy place unto the God of Israel.

8 [n]Wherefore the wrath of the LORD was upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he hath delivered them to [†]trouble, [o]to astonishment, and to hissing, as ye see with your eyes.

9 For, lo, [p]our fathers have fallen by the sword, and our sons and our daughters and our wives are in captivity for this.

10 Now [q]it is in mine heart [r]to make a covenant[3] with the LORD God of Israel, [s]that his fierce wrath may turn away from us.

11 My sons, be not now [‡]negligent: for [t]the LORD hath chosen you to stand before him, to serve him, and that ye should minister unto him, and [§]burn incense.

12 ¶ Then the Levites arose, Mahath the son of Amasai, and Joel the son of Azariah, of the sons of the [u]Kohathites: and [x]of the sons of Merari, Kish the son of Abdi, and Azariah the son of Jehalelel: and [y]of the Gershonites; Joah the son of Zimmah, and Eden the son of Joah:

13 And of the sons of [z]Elizaphan; Shimri, and Jeiel: and of the sons of [a]Asaph; Zechariah, and Mattaniah:

14 And of the sons of [b]Heman; Jehiel, reproved. (1.) For the cruelty of the slaughter they had made in the field. They had indeed "shed the blood of war in war;" we suppose that to be lawful, but it turned into sin to them, because they did it from a bad principle of enmity to their brethren, and after a bad manner, with a barbarous fury, "a rage reaching up to heaven," that is, that cries to God for vengeance against such bloody men, that delighted in military execution. They that serve God's justice, if they do it with rage, and a spirit of revenge, make themselves obnoxious to it, and forfeit the honour of acting for him: "for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. (2.) For the imperious treatment they gave their prisoners. "'Ye now purpose to keep them under,' to use them and sell them as slaves, though they are your brethren and freeborn Israelites." God takes notice of what men purpose, as well as of what they say and do. 3. He reminds them of their own sins, by which they also were obnoxious to the wrath of God. "Are there not with you, even with you, sins against the Lord your God?" He appeals to their own consciences, and to the notorious evidence of the thing.

GROWING WICKEDNESS OF AHAZ.—Ver. 21. He added to his guilt by making court to strange gods, in hopes they would relieve him. In this distress, instead of repenting of his idolatry, which he had reason enough to see the folly of, "he trespassed yet more," ver. 22, was more mad than ever upon his idols: a brand of infamy is here set upon him for it. "This is that king Ahaz," that wretched man who was the scandal of the house of David, and the curse and plague of his generation. Note, Those are wicked and vile indeed that are made worse by their afflictions, instead of being made better by them; who, "in their distress, trespass yet more," have their corruptions exasperated by that which should mollify them, and their hearts more "fully set in them to do evil." Let us see what his trespass was. 1. He abused the house of God; for he "cut in pieces the vessels" of it, that the priests might not perform the service of the temple, or not as it should be, for want of vessels; and at length "shut up the doors," that the people might not attend it, ver. 24. This was worse than the worst of the kings before him had done. 2. He confronted the altar of God, for he "made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem;" so that, as the prophet speaks, they were like "heaps in the furrows of the field, Hos. xix. 11. And in the cities of Judah, either by his power or by his purse, or by both, he erected high places for the people to burn incense to what idol they pleased, as if on purpose to "provoke the God of his fathers," ver. 25. 3. He cast off God himself; for he "sacrificed to the gods of Damascus," ver. 23, not because he loved them, for he thought they smote him; but because he feared them, thought that they helped his enemies, and that if he could bring them into his interest, they would help him. Foolish man! It was his own God that smote him, and strengthened the Syrians against him, not the gods of Damascus; had he sacrificed to him, and to him only, he would have helped him. But no marvel that men's affections and devotions are misplaced, when they mistake the author of their trouble and their help, and what comes of it? The gods of Syria befriend Ahaz no more than the kings of Assyria did; they were the "ruin of him and of all Israel." This sin provoked God to bring judgments upon them, to cut him off in the midst of his days, when he was but 36 years old; and it debauched the people so, that the reformation of the next reign could not prevail to cure them of their inclination to idolatry, but they retained that root of bitterness till the captivity in Babylon plucked it up.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIX. HEZEKIAH.—Ver. 1. Here is, 1. Hezekiah's age when he came to the crown; he was 25 years old. Joash, who came to the crown after two bad reigns, was but seven years old; Josiah, who came after two bad reigns, was but eight; which occasioned the delay of the reformation. But Hezekiah was come to years, and so applied himself immediately to it. We may well think with what a sorrowful heart he beheld his father's idolatry and profaneness, how it troubled him to see the doors of the temple shut up, though while his father lived he durst not open them. His soul, no doubt, wept in secret for it, and he vowed that, when he should receive the congregation, he would redress these grievances, which made him do it with more readiness and resolution. 2. His general character. He "did that which was right, like David," ver. 2. Of several of his predecessors it had been said, that they did that which was right, "but not like David," not with David's integrity and zeal. But here was one that had as hearty an affection for the ark and law of God as ever David had. 3. His speedy application to the great work of restoring religion. The first thing he did was, to "open the doors of the house of the Lord," ver. 3. We are willing to hope his father had not quite suppressed the temple service; for then the holy fire on the altar must have gone out, which we do not read of the re-kindling of; but he had hindered the people from attending it, and the priests, except such of them as were of his own party, 2 Kings xvi. 15. But Hezekiah immediately threw the church doors open, and "brought in the priests and Levites." He found Judah low and naked, yet did not make it his first business to revive the civil interests of his kingdom, but to restore religion to its good posture again. Those that begin with God, begin at the right end of their work, and it will prosper accordingly.

REFORMATION.—Ver. 12. We have here busy work, good work, and needful work, the cleansing of the house of the Lord. 1. The persons employed in this work were the priests and Levites, who should have kept it clean, but not having done their part [illegible] and Shimei: and of the sons of [c]Jeduthun; Shemaiah, and Uzziel.

15 And they gathered their brethren, and [d]sanctified themselves, and came, according to the commandment of the king, ‖by the words of the LORD, [e]to cleanse the house of the LORD.

16 And the priests went into [f]the inner part[4] of the house of the LORD, to cleanse it, and brought out [g]all the uncleanness that they found in the temple of the LORD, into the court of the house of the LORD. And the Levites took it, to carry it out abroad into the brook [h]Kidron.

17 Now they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify, and on the eighth day of the month came they to [i]the porch of the LORD: so they sanctified the house of the LORD in eight days; and in [k]the sixteenth day of the first month they made an end.

18 Then they went in to Hezekiah the king, and said, We have cleansed all the house of the LORD, and [l]the altar of burnt offering, with all the vessels thereof, and [m]the shewbread table, with all the vessels thereof.

19 Moreover [n]all the vessels, which king Ahaz in his reign did cast away in his transgression, have we prepared and sanctified, and, behold, they are before the altar of the LORD.

20 ¶ Then Hezekiah the king [o]rose early, and gathered the rulers of the city, and went up to the house of the LORD.

21 And they brought [p]seven bullocks, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he goats, for [q]a sin offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary,[5] and for Judah. And he commanded the priests the sons of Aaron to offer them on the altar of the LORD.

22 So they killed the bullocks, and the priests received the blood, and [r]sprinkled it on the altar: likewise, when they had killed the rams, they sprinkled the blood upon the altar: they killed also the lambs, and they sprinkled the blood upon the altar.

23 And they brought *forth the he goats for the sin offering before the king and the congregation; and [s]they laid their hands upon them:

24 And the priests killed them, and they made [t]reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, to make an atonement for all Israel: for the king commanded that the burnt offering and [u]the sin offering should be made for all Israel.

25 And [x]he set the Levites in the house of the LORD with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, [y]according to the commandment of David, and of [z]Gad the king's seer, and [a]Nathan the prophet: [b]for so was the commandment [†]of the LORD by his prophets.

26 And the Levites stood with [c]the instruments of David, and [d]the priests with the trumpets.

27 And Hezekiah commanded to offer the burnt offering upon the altar. And ‡when the burnt offering began, [e]the song of the LORD[6] began also with the trumpets, and with §the instruments ordained by David king of Israel.

28 And [f]all the congregation worshipped, and ‖the singers sang, and the trumpeters sounded: and all this continued until the burnt offering was finished.

29 And when they had made an end of offering, the king and all that were *present with him [g]bowed themselves, and worshipped.

30 Moreover Hezekiah the king and the princes commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the LORD [h]with the words of David, and of Asaph the seer. And [i]they sang praises with gladness, and they bowed their heads and worshipped.

31 Then Hezekiah answered and said, Now ye have †consecrated yourselves unto the LORD, come near and bring [k]sacrifices and [l]thank offerings into the house of the LORD. And the congregation brought in sacrifices and thank-offerings;[7] and [m]as many as were of a free heart burnt offerings.

32 And [n]the number of the burnt offerings, which the congregation brought, was threescore and ten bullocks, an hundred rams, and two hundred lambs: all these were for a burnt offering to the LORD.

33 And the [o]consecrated things were six hundred oxen and three thousand sheep.

34 But [p]the priests were too few,[8] so that they could not flay all the burnt offerings: wherefore [q]their brethren the Levites ‡did help them, till the work was ended, and until the other priests had sanctified themselves: [r]for the Levites were more [s]upright in heart to sanctify themselves than the priests.

35 And also [t]the burnt offerings were in abundance, with [u]the fat of the peace-offerings, and [x]the drink-offerings for every burnt offering. [y]So the service of the house of the LORD was set in order.

36 And [z]Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people, that [a]God had prepared the people: for [b]the thing was done suddenly.

CHAP. XXX.

Hezekiah proclaimeth a passover, 1. The assembly destroy the altars of idolatry, 13.

AND Hezekiah sent [a]to all Israel and Judah,[1] and wrote letters [b]also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come [c]to the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, [d]to cerned to make it clean. Several of the Levites are here named; two of each of the three principal houses, Kohath, Gershon, and Merari, ver. 12. And two of each of the three families of singers, Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun, ver. 13. We cannot think these are named merely because they were chief in place, for then surely the high priest, or some of the heads of the courses of the priests, would have been mentioned; but because they were more zealous and active than the rest. When God has work to do, he will raise up leading men to preside in it. And it is not always that the first in place and rank are most fit for service, or most forward to it. These Levites not only bestirred themselves, but "gathered their brethren," and quickened them to do "according to the commandment of the king by the words of the Lord." Observe, They did according to the king's command, but with an eye to God's word; the king commanded them what was already their duty by the word of God, and, in doing it, they regarded God's word as a rule to them, and the king's commandment as a spur to them. 2. The work was "cleansing the house of God," (1.) From the common dirt it had contracted while it was shut up, dust and cobwebs, and the rust of the vessels. (2.) From the idols and idolatrous altars that were shut up in it, which, though kept ever so neat, were a greater pollution to it than if it had been made the common-sewer of the city. The priests were none of them mentioned as leading men in this work, yet none but they durst go "into the inner part of the house, no not to cleanse it," which they did, and perhaps the high priest into the holy of holies, to cleanse that. And though the Levites had the honour to be the leaders in the work, they did not disdain to be servitors to the priests according to their office; for what filth the priests brought into the court, the Levites carried to the brook Kidron. Let not men's usefulness, be it ever so eminent, make them forget their place.

RE-CONSECRATION OF THE TEMPLE.—Ver. 20—31. The temple being cleansed, we have here an account of the good use that was immediately made of it. A solemn assembly was called to meet the king at the temple the very next day, ver. 20; and very glad, no doubt, all the good people in Jerusalem were, when it was said, "Let us go up to the house of the Lord," Ps. cxxii. 1. As soon as Hezekiah heard that the temple was ready for him, he lost no time, but made it appear that he was ready for it. He rose early to go up to the house of the Lord, earlier on that day than on other days, to show that his heart was upon his work there. Now this day's work was to look two ways; 1. Atonement must be made for the sins of the last reign. They thought it not enough to lament and forsake those sins, but they brought a sin-offering. Even our repentance and reformation will not obtain pardon but in and through Christ, who was made sin, that is, a sin-offering, for us. No peace but through his blood, no not for penitents. Observe, (1.) The sin-offering was "for the kingdom, the sanctuary," and "for Judah," ver. 21; that is, to make atonement for the sins of princes, priests, and people, for they had all corrupted their way. The law of Moses appointed sacrifices to make atonement for the sins of the whole congregation, (Lev. iv. 13, 14; Num. xv. 24, 25,) that the national judgments, which their national sins deserved, might be turned away: for this, we must now have an eye to Christ the great Propitiation, as well as for the remission and salvation of particular persons. (2.) The law appointed only one goat for a sin-offering, as on the day of atonement, Lev. xvi. 15, and on such extraordinary occasions as this, Num. xv. 24. But they here offered seven, ver. 21, because the sins of the congregation had been very great, and long continued in. Seven is a number of perfection: our great Sin-offering is but one, yet that one "perfects" for ever "them that are sanctified." (3.) The king and the "congregation" (that is, the representatives of the congregation) "laid their hands on the heads of the goats" that were for the "sin-offering," ver. 23, thereby owning themselves guilty before God, and expressing their desire that the guilt of the sinner might be transferred upon the sacrifice. By faith we lay our hands on the Lord Jesus, and so "receive the atonement," Rom. v. 11. (4.) Burnt-offerings were offered with the sin-offerings, "seven bullocks, seven rams," and "seven lambs." The intention of the burnt-offerings was to give glory to the God of Israel, whom they own as the only true God, which it was proper to do at the same time that they were by the sin-offering making atonement for their offences. The blood of those, as well as of the sin-offering, was "sprinkled upon the altar," ver. 22, to make reconciliation "for all Israel," ver. 24, and not for Judah only; Christ is a Propitiation not for the sins of Israel only, but "of the whole world," 1 John ii. 1, 2. The solemnities of this day did likewise look forward; the temple service was to be set up again, that it might be continually kept up; and this Hezekiah calls them to, ver. 31, "Now that ye have 'consecrated yourselves to the Lord,' have both made an atonement and made a covenant by sacrifice, are solemnly reconciled and engaged to him; now 'come near, and bring sacrifices.'" Note, Our covenant with God must be pursued and improved in communion with him. Having consecrated ourselves, in the first place, to the Lord, we must bring the sacrifices of prayer, and praise, and alms, to his house.—Henry.

CHAP. XXX. NATIONAL INVITATION TO THE PASSOVER.—Ver. 2—4. Hezekiah and his counsellors justly concluded, that the regulation of the fourteenth day of the second month, which had been made for individuals who were hindered from eating the passover at the appointed season, might, in their present circumstances, be extended to the keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel.

2 For [e]the king had taken counsel, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem, to keep the passover [f]in the second month.

3 For they could not keep it [g]at that time, [h]because the priests had not sanctified themselves sufficiently, neither had the people gathered themselves together to Jerusalem.

4 And the thing *pleased the king and all the congregation.

5 So they [i]established a decree [k]to make proclamation[2] throughout all Israel, [l]from Beer-sheba even to Dan, that they should come to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel at Jerusalem: [m]for they had not done it of a long time in such sort as it was written.

6 So [n]the posts went with the letters from the [†]king and his princes throughout all Israel and Judah, and according to the commandment of the king, saying, Ye children of Israel, [o]turn again unto the LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, and he will return to the remnant of you, that are [p]escaped out of the hand of the kings of Assyria.

7 And be not ye [q]like your fathers, and like your brethren, which trespassed against the LORD God of their fathers, who therefore gave them up to desolation, [r]as ye see.

8 Now [‡]be ye not stiff necked as your fathers were, but [§]yield yourselves unto the LORD, and [s]enter into his sanctuary, [t]which he hath sanctified for ever: and [u]serve the LORD your God, that the [x]fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you.

9 For [y]if ye turn again unto the LORD, your brethren and your children shall find compassion before them that lead them captive, [z]so that they shall come again into this land: for [a]the LORD your God is gracious and merciful, and [b]will not [c]turn away his face from you, if ye return unto him.

10 So [d]the posts passed from city to city through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh even unto Zebulun: but [e]they laughed them to scorn,[3] and mocked them.

11 Nevertheless [f]divers of Asher and Manasseh and of Zebulun [g]humbled themselves, and came to Jerusalem.

12 Also in Judah [h]the hand of God was to give them one heart to do [i]the commandment of the king and of the princes, [j]by the word of the LORD.

13 ¶ And there assembled at Jerusalem much people to keep the feast of unleavened bread in [k]the second month, a very great congregation.[4]

14 And they arose, and took away the [l]altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense took they away, and cast them into [m]the brook Kidron.

15 Then they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the second month: and the priests and the Levites [n]were ashamed, [o]and sanctified themselves, and brought in the burnt offerings into the house of the LORD.

16 And [p]they stood in their ‖place [q]after their manner, according to the law of [r]Moses the man of God: [s]the priests sprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites.

17 For there were many in the congregation that were not sanctified: therefore [t]the Levites had the charge of [u]the killing of the passovers for every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the LORD.

18 For a multitude of the people, even [x]many of Ephraim and Manasseh, Issachar and Zebulun, [y]had not cleansed themselves, yet did they eat [z]the passover otherwise than it was written. But Hezekiah [a]prayed for them, saying, [b]The good LORD pardon every one

19 That [c]prepareth his heart to seek God, the LORD God of his fathers, [d]though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary.

20 And the LORD hearkened to Hezekiah, and [e]healed the people.[5]

21 And the children of Israel that were *present at Jerusalem kept [f]the feast of unleavened bread seven days with [g]great gladness: and the Levites and [h]the priests praised the LORD day by day, singing with †loud instruments unto the LORD.

22 And Hezekiah spake ‡comfortably unto all the Levites [i]that taught [k]the good knowledge of the LORD: and they did eat throughout the feast seven days, offering peace offerings, [l]and making confession to the LORD God of their fathers.

23 And the whole assembly [m]took counsel [n]to keep other seven days: and they kept other seven days with gladness.

24 For Hezekiah king of Judah §did [o]give to the congregation a thousand bullocks and seven thousand sheep; and the princes gave to the congregation a thousand bullocks and ten thousand sheep: and [p]a great number of priests sanctified themselves.

25 And all the congregation of Judah, with the priests and the Levites, and all the congregation that came out of Israel, and [q]the strangers[6] that came out of the land of Israel, and that dwelt in Judah, [r]rejoiced.

26 So there was great joy in Jerusalem: for [s]since the time of Solomon the son of David king of Israel there was not the like in Jerusalem.

whole congregation. A sufficient number of the priests had not been duly sanctified, to prepare the temple for that ordinance at the stated time, or to officiate in it; the people, long disused from attendance, were not generally assembled; they who were present seemed well disposed to celebrate that solemn and significant ordinance: and it might have an abiding good effect, if the favourable opportunity were seized. For these reasons, it was determined to summon the people to attend, and to keep the passover in the second month. Ver. 6—9. Hoshea was king of Israel at this time, and it does not appear that he attempted to hinder his subjects from resorting to Jerusalem to worship, if they chose it. In the preceding reign, Israel had made a dreadful slaughter of the men of Judah; yet Hezekiah considered the Israelites as brethren, and greatly desired to bring them back, by kind treatment, to the religion of their fathers; therefore he sent his proclamation, or letters, into the parts of the land belonging to the ten tribes, as well as throughout his own dominions.—The word rendered "posts" signifies runners: for men were then, and still are in many places, trained, and kept on purpose, to convey despatches speedily by running.—Even then, the Israelites were but a remnant, which had escaped from the ravages of Pul and Tiglath-pileser: and far heavier judgments awaited them for their apostacy and idolatry; which could not be averted, except by turning again to the God of their fathers. Hezekiah, however, most affectionately and plainly cautioned them not to copy the crimes of their fathers and brethren, whose miseries they had witnessed: he warned them not to be "stiff-necked," or "obstinate in rebellion;" and he exhorted them to "yield themselves unto the LORD;" that is, to yield the victory to him, to submit to his authority, to lay down their rebellious arms, to implore mercy, and to become his servants. He entreated them also to "enter into his sanctuary, which he had sanctified for ever:" that is, to renounce their idolatries and self-invented worship, and to resort with their sacrifices to the temple at Jerusalem, and there to keep the solemn feasts.—The temple was not only the centre of God's worship, and the pledge of his gracious presence with his people, but likewise the type of those spiritual blessings which are from everlasting to everlasting upon all true believers.—Hezekiah also encouraged those whom he addressed to hope, from the mercy and grace of God to the penitent, that if thus they turned to him, the fierceness of his wrath would be turned away from them; and that they might expect the restoration of their brethren and children, who were already in captivity; for God, having all hearts in his hand, could and would make the enemies of those who pleased him to be at peace with them, and to show them compassion. In this he evidently referred to the promises contained in the books of Moses.—It is observable that these letters carefully avoided all mention of the claim of David's family to dominion over all Israel; and of former injuries and quarrels, or whatever could give any shadow of offence, either to the prince or his subjects, except in the immediate concerns of religion. Ver. 10, 11. The nation of Israel was almost ripe for destruction; and it is by no means wonderful, that most of them insulted and mocked the messengers, who conveyed these invitations: indeed we may rather wonder that they met with no harsher treatment. Some, however, out of the several tribes were prevailed on; and, humbling themselves for former sins, resorted to Jerusalem; so that Hezekiah's pious design was not ineffectual, though not so successful as he had wished it to be.

OBSERVANCE OF THE PASSOVER.—Ver. 16—20. Either the Levites, or the offerers, might receive the blood of the victims; but the priests alone might sprinkle it.—It is evident from this passage, that in ordinary cases, the persons who brought the paschal lambs slew them; or this exception would not have been stated: and it is at least probable, that the case was at first the same with other sacrifices. But many of the ten tribes, having come at a short warning, and being destitute of instruction, were ceremonially unclean, and therefore not regularly prepared to eat the passover. But it would have greatly discouraged them, had they been excluded from that sacred ordinance, to which they had been invited: they appeared sincere and earnest in returning to the Lord, and there was a prospect of important usefulness. They were therefore allowed to eat the passover, when the Levites had killed it for them, notwithstanding their ceremonial disqualification: and Hezekiah, sensible that there was danger in this deviation, earnestly prayed to the good and merciful LORD, "to pardon every one that prepared his heart to seek the LORD, though not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary." To this prayer the Lord granted a favourable answer, "and healed the people." Perhaps he had visited them with some sickness for their irregular attendance, which he then graciously healed. Or, he gave peace to their consciences, and healed their souls. Ver. 21, 22. The sacrifices, psalmody, and supplications of the people, were accompanied by the reading and expounding of the law: some of the Levites were thus employed in instructing the people, in the good, the profitable, and pleasant knowledge of the Lord: and the king peculiarly noticed and encouraged them in this useful work, which was very much wanted. This would excite others to apply themselves to the study of the law, that they too might be qualified for this service.—By "making confession," may be meant, either confessing their sins, or acknowledging the unmerited goodness of the Lord. Ver. 23—25. This passover must have been nearly about the time of harvest: but the hearts of the people were so enlarged with holy affections, that they were neither weary of the sacred service, nor in haste to return to their secular business. Ver. 26, 27. The observance of this passover, and the solemnities that attended

CHAP. XXXI.

The people forward in destroying idolatry, 1. Hezekiah appointeth officers to dispose of the tithes, 11: his sincerity of heart, 20.

NOW [a]when all this was finished, [b]all Israel that were *present went out to the cities of Judah, and [c]brake the †images in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high places and the altars [1]out of all Judah and Benjamin, [d]in Ephraim also and Manasseh, ‡until they had utterly destroyed them all. Then all the children of Israel returned, every man to his possession, into their own cities.

2 ¶ And Hezekiah appointed [e]the courses of the priests and the Levites after their courses, every man according to his service, the priests and Levites for burnt offerings and for peace offerings, to minister, and [f]to give thanks, and to praise in the gates of the tents of the LORD.

3 He appointed also [g]the king's portion[2] of his substance for the burnt offerings, to wit, [h]for the morning and evening burnt offerings, and [i]the burnt offerings for the sabbaths, and [j]for the new moons, and for [k]the set feasts, as it is written in the law of the LORD.

4 Moreover he commanded the people that dwelt in Jerusalem to give [l]the portion of the priests and the Levites, [m]that they might be encouraged in [n]the law of the LORD.

5 ¶ And [o]as soon as the commandment §came abroad, the children of Israel brought in abundance [p]the firstfruits of corn, wine, and oil, and ‖honey, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly.

6 And concerning [q]the children of Israel and Judah, that dwelt in the cities of Judah, they also brought in [r]the tithe of oxen and sheep, and the tithe of holy things which were consecrated unto the LORD their God, and laid them by *heaps.

7 In [s]the third month they began to lay the foundation of the heaps, and finished them in the seventh month.

8 And when Hezekiah and the princes came and saw the heaps, they [t]blessed the LORD, [u]and his people Israel.

9 Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps.

10 And [v]Azariah the chief priest of the house of Zadok answered him, and said, [x]Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the LORD, [y]we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty: for [z]the LORD hath blessed his people; and that which is left is this great store.

11 ¶ Then Hezekiah commanded to prepare †chambers in the house of the LORD; and they prepared them,

12 And brought in the offerings and the tithes and the dedicated things faithfully: [a]over which Cononiah the Levite was ruler, and Shimei his brother was the next.

13 And Jehiel, and Azaziah,[3] and Nahath, and Asahel, and Jerimoth, and Jozabad, and Eliel, and Ismachiah, and Mahath, and Benaiah, were overseers ‡under the hand of Cononiah and Shimei his brother, [b]at the commandment of Hezekiah the king, and [c]Azariah the ruler of the house of God.

14 And Kore the son of Imnah the Levite, [d]the porter toward the east, was over [e]the free-will offerings of God, to distribute the oblations of the LORD, and [f]the most holy things.

15 And §next him were Eden, and Miniamin, and Jeshua, and Shemaiah, Amariah, and Shecaniah, in [g]the cities of the priests, in their ‖set office, to give to their brethren by courses, [h]as well to the great as to the small:

16 Beside their genealogy of males, from three years old and upward, even unto every one that entereth into the house of the LORD, [i]his daily portion for their service in their charges according to their courses;

17 Both to the [k]genealogy of the priests by the house of their fathers, and the Levites from [l]twenty years old and upward, in their charges [m]by their courses;

18 And to the genealogy[4] of all their little ones, their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, through all the congregation: for in their *set office [n]they sanctified themselves in holiness:

19 Also of the sons of Aaron the priests, which were in [o]the fields of the suburbs of their cities, in every several city, [p]the men that were expressed by name, to give portions to all the males among the priests, and to all that were reckoned by genealogies among the Levites.

20 ¶ And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, and [q]wrought that which was good and right and truth before the LORD his God.

21 And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law,[5] and in the commandments, to seek his God, [r]he did it with all his heart, and [s]prospered.

it, were crowned with a peculiar blessing: many of the priests and people were brought to a serious sense of religion, and an important revival was introduced among them; even superior to any that had taken place since the days of Solomon.—As this occurred in the first year of Hezekiah's reign, and he reigned twenty-nine years, we may be sure that he witnessed the effects of so good a beginning to the end of his life.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXI. REFORMATION CONTINUED.—Ver. 1. They applied themselves with vigour to destroy all the monuments of idolatry. The king had done what he could of this kind, 2 Kings xviii. 4, but the people could discover those profane relics which escaped the eyes of the king's officers, and therefore they went out to see what they could do, ver. 1. This was done immediately after the passover. Note, The comfort of communion with God should kindle in us a holy zeal and indignation against sin, against every thing that is offensive to God. Their zeal here in destroying the "images and groves, the high places and altars," appeared, 1. In that they did this, not only in the cities of Judah and Benjamin, but in those of Ephraim and Manasseh; some think that those cities are meant, which were come under the protection and the jurisdiction of the kings of Judah; others think, that, Hoshea king of Israel not forbidding it, their zeal carried them out to the destruction of idolatry, even in many parts of his kingdom. At least, those that came out of Ephraim and Manasseh to keep the passover, (as many did, chap. xxx. 18,) destroyed all their own images and groves, and did the like for as many more as they had influence upon, or could make interest in for leave to do it: we should not only reform ourselves, but do all we can to reform others too. 2. They destroyed all, they utterly destroyed all, they spared none for favour or affection either to the images or to their worshippers; though ever so ancient, ever so costly, ever so beautiful, and so well patronised, yet they must all be destroyed. Those that sincerely set themselves against sin, will set themselves against all sin. 3. They would not return to their houses, though they had been long absent, till this was done.

HONEST TITHING.—Ver. 5—7. The people brought in their tithes very readily; they wanted nothing but to be called upon; and therefore, "as soon as the commandment came abroad," the first-fruits and all the holy things were duly brought in, ver. 5, 6. What the priests had occasion for, for themselves and their families, they made use of, and the overplus was "laid in heaps," ver. 6. All harvest-time, they were increasing these heaps, as the fruits of the earth were gathered in, for God was to have his dues out of them all. Though a prescription may be pleaded for a modus decimandi—tithing modus; yet it cannot be pleaded pro non decimando—for the omission of tithing. When harvest ended, they finished their heaps, ver. 7. Now here we have, 1. The account given to Hezekiah concerning those heaps. He "questioned with the priests and Levites" concerning them, why they did not use what was paid in, but hoarded it up thus, ver. 9. To which it was answered, that they had made use of all they had occasion for, for the maintenance of themselves and their families, and for their winter store, and that this was that which was left over and above, ver. 10. They did not hoard these heaps for covetousness, but to show what plentiful provision God by his law had made for them, if they could but have it collected and brought in; and that they who conscientiously give God his dues out of their estates, bring a blessing upon all they have; "Since they began to bring in the offerings, the Lord has blessed his people." See for this Hag. ii. 19. "Try me," says God, "if you will not otherwise trust me, whether, upon your bringing the tithes into the storehouse, you have not a blessing poured out upon you," Mal. iii. 10, 11; Ezek. xliv. 30. 2. The acknowledgment which the king and princes made of it, ver. 8. They gave thanks to God for his good providence, which gave them something to bring, and his good grace, which gave them hearts to bring it. And they also "blessed the people," that is, commended them for their doing well now, without reproaching them for their former neglects. It is observable, that, after they had tasted the sweetness of God's ordinance in the late comfortable passover, they were thus free in maintaining the temple service. They that experience the benefit of a settled ministry, will not grudge the expense of it.—Henry.

SACERDOTAL ARRANGEMENT.—Ver. 15—19. The priests and Levites, as they attended in course, had a certain portion allotted to them, according to their office and charge. The sons of the priests, who attended with them, as it seems, from three years of age, to learn the work of the sanctuary, previously to the time of their officiating, had a provision made for them. A list was taken of the wives, and of the other children, of the priests and Levites, and a proportionable allowance was assigned them: as also to those who were excluded or excused from attendance: and for all of those who were absent from the temple, employed as magistrates and teachers, in their several districts. Thus none appropriated an exorbitant proportion, and none wanted a suitable provision: "for in their set office, they sanctified themselves in holiness;" they separated themselves from other employments, and devoted themselves to serve God in their proper office, in a holy and believing expectation that he would provide for them; (for so the words seem to mean:) nor were they disappointed. And this regular provision kept them from the temptation of entangling themselves in worldly cares to the neglect of their ministry.—Scott.

encamped against the fenced cities, and thought to *win them for himself.[1]

2 And when Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib was come, and that †he was purposed to fight against Jerusalem,

3 He [c]took counsel with his princes and his mighty men [d]to stop the waters of the fountains which were without the city: and they did help him.

4 So there was gathered much people together, who stopped all the fountains,[2] and ‡the brook[3] that ‖ran through the midst of the land, saying, Why should the [f]kings of Assyria come, and [g]find much water?

5 Also [h]he strengthened himself, and built up all the wall [i]that was broken, and raised it up to the towers, and [k]another wall without, and repaired [l]Millo in the city of David, and made §darts and shields in abundance.

6 And [m]he set captains of war over the people, and gathered them together to him [n]in the street of the gate of the city, and spake ‖comfortably to them, saying,

7 Be [o]strong and courageous, [p]be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him: [q]for there be more with us than with him:

8 With him is [r]an arm of flesh; but [s]with us is the LORD our God to help us, and [t]to fight our battles. And the people *rested themselves upon the words of Hezekiah king of Judah.

9 ¶ After this did [u]Sennacherib king of Assyria send his servants to Jerusalem, (but he himself laid siege against [x]Lachish, and all his †power with him,) unto Hezekiah king of Judah, and unto all Judah that were at Jerusalem, saying,

10 [y]Thus saith Sennacherib king of Assyria, Whereon do ye trust, that ye abide in the‡ siege in Jerusalem?

11 Doth not Hezekiah persuade you [z]to give over yourselves to die by famine and by thirst, saying, [a]The LORD our God shall deliver us out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

12 [b]Hath not the same Hezekiah taken away his high places and his altars, and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, saying, [c]Ye shall worship before [d]one altar, and burn incense upon it?

13 Know ye not what [e]I and my fathers have done unto all the people of other lands? [f]were the gods of the nations of those lands any ways able to deliver their lands out of mine hand?

14 Who was there [g]among all the gods of those nations that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of mine hand, that [h]your God should be able to deliver you out of mine hand?

15 Now therefore let not Hezekiah [i]deceive you, nor [k]persuade you on this manner, neither yet believe him: for no god of any nation or kingdom was able to deliver his people out of mine hand, and out of the hand of my fathers: how [l]much less shall your God deliver you out of mine hand?[4]

16 And his servants spake [m]yet more against the LORD God, and [n]against his servant Hezekiah.

17 He [o]wrote also letters [p]to rail on the LORD God of Israel, and to speak against him, saying, [q]As the Gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people out of mine hand, so shall not the God of Hezekiah deliver his people out of mine hand.

18 Then [r]they cried with a loud voice in the Jews' speech unto the people of Jerusalem that were on the wall, [s]to affright them, and to trouble them; that they might take the city.

19 And they [t]spake against [u]the God of Jerusalem as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were [x]the work of the hands of man.

20 ¶ And for this cause [y]Hezekiah the king, and [z]the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, [a]prayed and cried to heaven.

21 And [b]the LORD sent an [c]angel,[5] which [d]cut off all the mighty men of valour, and [e]the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria. So he returned [f]with shame of face to his own land. And when [g]he was come into the house of his god, they that came forth of his own bowels §slew him there with the sword.

22 Thus [h]the LORD saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other, and [i]guided them on every side.

23 And many brought [k]gifts unto the LORD to Jerusalem, [l]and ‖presents to Hezekiah king of Judah: so that [m]he was magnified in the sight of all nations from henceforth.

24 ¶ In those days [n]Hezekiah was sick to the death, and prayed unto the LORD: and he spake unto him, and he *gave him a sign.

25 But Hezekiah [o]rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him; for [p]his heart was lifted up: [q]therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem.

26 Notwithstanding [r]Hezekiah humbled himself for the †pride of his heart, both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so that the wrath of the LORD came not upon them *in the days of Hezekiah.

27 ¶ And Hezekiah had [t]exceeding kingdom, "thus he did throughout all Judah;" every part of the country, and not those only that lay next him, shared in the good fruits of his government. 2. He sincerely designed to please God, and approved himself to him in all he did: he "wrought that which was good before the Lord his God; all his care was to do that which should be accepted of God, which was right, (that is, agreeable to natural equity,) and truth, (that is, agreeable to divine revelation, and his covenant with God,) "before the Lord." 3. What he began, he went through with, prosecuted it with vigour, and "did it with all his heart." 4. All his good intentions were brought to a good issue; whatever he did in the service of the house of God, and in the government of his kingdom, he prospered in it. What is undertaken with a sincere regard to the glory of God, will succeed to our own honour and comfort at last.—Henry.

4 We are not surprised at this boast from a heathen, if we consider the conquests and power of the Assyrian monarchy. It embraced the Caspian Sea, for many of the ten tribes were placed in Armenia, and on the river Gozan, which runs into the Caspian, the whole of Babylon, of Persia, of Damascus or Syria, of Samaria, and Galilee; Troy also once bore its yoke. The seat of empire was, however, not yet transferred to Babylon, but was at Nineveh, a city supposed to have contained at least 500,000 inhabitants.—GILL.

CHAP. XXXII. PIETY IN THE MIDST OF DISTRESS.—Hezekiah gathered the people together in a broad open street, and "spake comfortably to them," ver. 6. He had a good heart on it himself, and was confident it would issue well; he was not like his father, who had much guilt to terrify him, and no faith to encourage him; so that, in a time of public danger, "his heart was moved, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind," and then no marvel that "the heart of his people was so too," Isa. vii. 2. With what he said, he put life into his people, his captains especially, and "spake to their heart," as the word is. 1. He endeavours to keep down their fears. "'Be strong and courageous,' do not think of surrendering the city, or capitulating, but resolve to hold it out to the last man: do not think of losing the city, or of falling into the enemy's hand; there is no danger. Let the soldiers be bold and brave, make good their posts, stand to their arms, and fight manfully, and let the citizens encourage them to do so. 'Be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria.'" The prophet had thus encouraged them from God, Isa. x. 24, "Be not afraid of the Assyrians;" and hear the king from him. Now it was that "the sinners in Zion were afraid," Isa. xxxiii. 14, but the righteous "dwelt on high," ver. 15, 16, and "meditated terror," so as to conquer it, ver. 18, which refers to what is recorded here. 2. He endeavours to keep up their faith, in order to the silencing and suppressing of their fears. "He has a 'multitude with him,' and yet there be 'more with us than with him;' for we have God with us, and how many do you reckon for him? With him is an arm of flesh, which he trusts to; but 'with us is the Lord,' whose power is irresistible; our God, whose promise is inviolable; a God in covenant with us, 'to help us, and to fight our battles,' not only to help us to fight them, but to fight them for us, if he pleases;" and so he did here. Note, A believing confidence in God will raise us above the prevailing fear of man. He that "feareth the fury of the oppressor, forgetteth the Lord his Maker," Isa. li. 12, 13. It is probable that Hezekiah said more to this purport, and that the people rested themselves upon what he said, not merely upon his word, but on the things he said concerning the presence of God with them, and his power to relieve them. The belief of this made them easy. Let the good subjects and soldiers of Jesus Christ rest themselves thus upon his word, and boldly say, "Since God is for us, who can be against us?"

THE CRIME AND CURSE OF BLASPHEMY.—Ver. 9—21. We see 1. The duty and interest of the church's friends; and that is, in the day of distress to pray and cry to heaven. So Hezekiah did, and the prophet Isaiah, ver. 20. It was a happy time, when the king and the prophet joined thus in prayer. Is any troubled? Is any terrified? Let them pray. So we engage God for us, so we encourage ourselves in him. Praying to God is here called "crying to heaven," because we are, in prayer, to eye him as our Father in heaven, whence he beholds the children of men, and where he has prepared his throne. 2. The power and goodness of the church's God. He is able both to control his enemies, be they ever so high, and to relieve his friends, be they ever so low. As the blasphemies of his enemies engage him against them, Deut. xxxii. 27, so the prayers of his people engage him for them; they did so here, (1.) The army of the Assyrians was cut off by the sword of an angel, which triumphed particularly in the slaughter of the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains, who defied the sword of any man. God delights to abase the proud and secure. The Targum says, The word of the Lord (the Eternal Word) sent Gabriel to do this execution, and that it was done with lightning, and in the passover night; that was the night in which the angel destroyed the first-born of Egypt. But that was not all; (2.) The king of the Assyrians, having received this disgrace, was cut off by the sword of his own sons. They that "came forth of his own bowels slew him," ver. 21. Thus was he mortified first, and then murdered; shamed first, and then slain. Evil pursues sinners; and when they escape one mischief, they run upon another unseen. Now, by this work of wonder, [1.] God was glorified, as the Protector of his people. Thus he saved Jerusalem, not only from the hand of Sennacherib, but from the hand "of all other;" for such a deliverance as this was an earnest of much mercy in store; and he guided them, that is, he guarded them, on every side. God defends his people by directing them, shows them what they should do, and so saves them from what is designed or done against them. For this, "many brought gifts unto the Lord," when they saw the great power of God in the defence of his people. Strangers were thereby induced to appreciate his favour. [illegible] enemies to deprecate his wrath, and [illegible] to his temple, in token of their care and desire. [2.] Hezekiah was magnified, or [illegible] favourite and [illegible]

28 [x]Storehouses also for the increase of corn, and wine, and oil; and [y]stalls for all manner of beasts, and [z]cotes for flocks.

29 Moreover he provided him cities, and [a]possessions of flocks and herds in abundance: for [b]God had given him substance very much.

30 This same Hezekiah also [c]stopped the upper watercourse of [d]Gihon,[6] and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David.[7] [e]And Hezekiah prospered in all his works.

31 ¶ Howbeit [f]in the business of the [§]ambassadors of the princes of Babylon, who sent unto him to enquire of [g]the wonder that was done in the land, God [h]left him, [i]to try him, [k]that he might know all that was in his heart.[8]

32 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and his [‖]goodness, behold, they are written [l]in the vision of Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, and [m]in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

33 And Hezekiah [n]slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the [*]chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem [o]did him honour at his death. [p]And Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Manasseh's wicked reign, 1: he is carried into Babylon; where he humbleth himself before God, and is restored to his kingdom, 11: he dieth; Amon succeedeth him, 20: he is slain by his servants, 24: Josiah succeedeth, 25.

[a]MANASSEH was [b]twelve years old when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem:

2 But did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, [c]like unto the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD had cast out before the children of Israel.

3 For [d]he [*]built again the high places [•]which Hezekiah his father had broken down, and [f]he reared up altars for Baalim, and [g]made groves,[1] and worshipped all [h]the host of heaven, and served them.

4 Also [i]he built altars in the house of the LORD, whereof the LORD had said, [k]In Jerusalem shall my name be for ever.

5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven [l]in the two courts[2] of the house of the LORD.

6 And he [m]caused his children to pass through the fire in the valley of the son of Hinnom: also [n]he observed times, and used enchantments, and used witchcraft, and [o]dealt with a familiar spirit, and with wizards: he wrought much evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

7 And he set a carved image, the idol which he had made, [p]in the house of God, of which [q]God had said to David and to Solomon his son, In this house, and in Jerusalem, [r]which I have chosen before all the tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever:

8 Neither [s]will I any more remove the foot of Israel from out of the land which I have appointed for your fathers; [t]so that they will take heed [u]to do all that I have commanded them, according to the whole law and the statutes and the ordinances [x]by the hand of Moses.

9 So Manasseh [y]made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err, and [z]to do worse than [a]the heathen, whom the LORD had destroyed before the children of Israel.

10 ¶ And [b]the LORD spake to Manasseh, and to his people: but they would not hearken.

11 Wherefore [c]the LORD brought upon them [d]the captains of the host [†]of [e]the king of Assyria, which took Manasseh [f]among the thorns,[3] and [g]bound him with [‡]fetters, and carried him to Babylon.

12 And [h]when he was in affliction, [i]he besought [k]the LORD his God, [l]and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, 13 And prayed unto him: and [m]he was entreated of him, and heard his supplication, and [n]brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom. Then Manasseh [o]knew that the LORD he was God.

14 ¶ Now after this [p]he built a wall without the city of David, on the west side of [q]Gihon, in the valley, even to the entering in at [r]the fish gate, and compassed about [*]Ophel, and raised it up a very great height, and [s]put captains of war in all the fenced cities of Judah.

15 And [t]he took away the strange gods,[4] and the idol out of the house of the LORD, and all the altars that he had built in the mount of the house of the LORD, and in Jerusalem, and cast them out of the city.

16 And he [u]repaired the altar of the LORD, and sacrificed thereon [v]peace offerings and [x]thank offerings, and [y]commanded Judah to serve the LORD God of Israel.

17 Nevertheless [z]the people did sacrifice still in the high places, yet unto the LORD their God only.

18 ¶ Now [a]the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and [b]his prayer unto his God, and the words of [c]the seers that spake to him in the name of the LORD God of Israel, behold, they are written [d]in the book of the kings of Israel.

heaven: many "brought presents to him," ver. 22, 23, in token of the honour they had for him, and to make an interest in him. By the favour of God, enemies are lost, and friends gained.—Henry.

HEZEKIAH'S WEAKNESS.—Ver. 30—33. "The princes of Babylon sent to inquire of the wonder that had been done in the land:" but it is not certain that the Chaldeans observed any change in the motion of the heavenly bodies. The report of the miracles which attended Hezekiah's recovery, might suffice for that purpose. Yet, in Isaiah it is said, "The sun returned," &c.—The Lord on this occasion withdrew from Hezekiah the immediate efficacy of his grace, and left him to follow the dictates of his own natural propensity, "to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart." The omniscient God before knew the whole; but, having by the trial made the case evident, he pointed it out to Hezekiah and to all succeeding ages, for their humiliation, warning, and instruction. For it hence appears undeniable, that the best of men, if left to themselves, are prone to pride and ostentation, to idolize themselves and their fellow-creatures, to withdraw their dependence from God, to rob him of his glory, and to be ungrateful for his mercies.—Scott.

HEZEKIAH'S PIETY AND PROSPERITY.—Ver. 27. Here is the honour done to Hezekiah: By the providence of God while he lived. He had "exceeding much riches and honour," ver. 27, replenished his stores, victualled his camps, fortified his city, and did all he wished to do, for God "had given him substance very much," ver. 29. Among his great performances, his turning the water-course of Gihon is mentioned, ver. 30, which was done upon occasion of Sennacherib's invasion, ver. 3, 4. The water had come into that which was called the "old pool," Isa. xxii. 11, and the "upper pool," Isa. vii. 3, but he gathered the waters into a new place, for the greater convenience of the city, called the "lower pool," Isa. xxii. 9. And, in general, he "prospered in all his works," for they were good works.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIII. MANASSEH.—This foolish young prince, in contradiction to the good example and good education his father gave him, abandoned himself to all impiety; transcribed the abominations of the heathen, ver. 2, ruined the established religion, and unravelled his father's glorious reformation, ver. 3, profaned the house of God with his idolatry, ver. 4, 5, dedicated his children to Moloch, and made the devil's lying oracles his guides and his counsellors, ver. 6. In contempt of the choice God had made of Zion to be his rest for ever, and Israel to be his covenant-people, ver. 8, and the fair terms he stood upon with him, he embraced other gods, profaned God's chosen temple, and debauched his chosen people; he "made them to err," and do "worse than the heathen," ver. 9, for if the unclean spirit return, he brings with him "seven other spirits more wicked than himself." That which aggravated the sin of Manasseh, was, that God "spake to him and his people," by the prophets, "but they would not hearken," ver. 10. Now from this let us learn, 1. That it is no new thing, but a very sad thing, for the children of godly parents to turn aside from that good way of God in which they have been trained up. Parents may give many good things to their children, but they cannot give them grace. 2. Corruptions in worship are such diseases of the church, as, even then when they seem to be cured, it is very apt to relapse into again. 3. The God of this world has strangely blinded men's minds, and has a wonderful power over those that are led captive by him; else he could not draw them from God their best Friend, to depend upon their sworn enemy.—Henry.

NATIONAL DEGENERACY.—Ver. 9, 10. "A most prodigious change, from the height of piety in his father's reign, into the sink of iniquity in this!—Victorinus Strigilius, professor of theology at Heidelberg, left this remark in his lectures on this place, near an hundred and forty years ago," (or soon after the establishment of the reformation in Germany:)—"Now we have the word of God abundantly in all wisdom, and pious princes patronize both those who preach and those who learn the gospel. But this plenty of the word we now enjoy, (I tremble to speak it, but I must speak it, because it will come to pass,) shall be taken away: and that sad mourning time will come, when the public assemblies of the church shall be scattered, and a few pious souls shall meet with fear in a corner, to communicate among themselves the fragments of the heavenly doctrine, and to give God thanks for these remainders."—[Vic. Strig.] "Which we have seen fulfilled in that country, and in France, and in other places."—[Bp. Patrick.] This apparent prophecy seems to have been merely a presage grounded on the vicissitudes of things, especially in respect of religion and the tendency of prosperity to induce carnal security.

GOOD FRUIT OF AFFLICTION.—Ver. 12, 13. When Manasseh was deprived of his authority and liberty, and secluded from his evil counsellors and companions, and from all his pleasures; in chains and in a prison; without any other prospect, than of ending his days in that wretched situation; he had leisure to reflect on what had passed. He would then, no doubt, recollect the honour, prosperity, and deliverances, with which his father had been favoured; his own good education, with the instructions and warnings of the prophets; and his atrocious, multiplied and daring crimes: and he would remember that his miseries had been foretold by his faithful monitors. Thus, "by the special grace of God," his solitude and affliction brought him to view his own conduct and character in another light than before; and he began to cry for mercy and deliver-

Josiah's good reign, 1: he destroyeth idolatry, 3: he repaireth the temple, 8: and, causing the law to be read, reneweth the covenant between God and the people, 19.

[a]JOSIAH was [b]eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem one and thirty years.

2 And he did that which was [c]right in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the ways of David his father, and [d]declined neither to the right hand, nor to the left.

3 ¶ For in the eighth year of his reign, [e]while he was yet young, he began [f]to seek after the God of David his father: and in the twelfth year [g]he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from [h]the high places, and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images.

4 And they [i]brake down the altars of Baalim in his presence; and the [*]images that were on high above them[1] he cut down; and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images, he brake in pieces, and [k]made dust of them, and strowed it upon [†]the graves of them that had sacrificed unto them.

5 And [l]he burnt the bones of the priests upon their altars, and [m]cleansed Judah and Jerusalem.

6 And so did he [n]in the cities of Manasseh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even unto Naphtali, with their [‡]mattocks round about.

7 And when he had broken down the altars and the groves, and had [o]beaten the graven images [§]into powder, and cut down all the idols throughout all the land of Israel, [p]he returned to Jerusalem.

8 ¶ Now in [q]the eighteenth year of his reign, when he had purged the land, and the house, he [r]sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, and [s]Maaseiah the governor of the city, and Joah the son of Joahaz the [t]recorder, to repair[2] the house of the LORD his God.

9 And when they came to [u]Hilkiah the high priest, [x]they delivered the money that was brought into the house of God, which the Levites that kept the doors had gathered of the hand of [y]Manasseh and Ephraim, and of all the remnant of Israel, and of all Judah and Benjamin; and [z]they returned to Jerusalem.

10 And they put it [a]in the hand of the workmen[3] that had the oversight of the house of the LORD, and they gave it to the workmen that wrought in the house of the LORD, to repair and amend the house:

11 Even to the artificers and builders gave they it, to buy hewn stone, and timber for couplings, and to [‡]floor the houses[4] which [b]the kings of Judah had destroyed.

12 And the men did the work [c]faithfully: and the overseers of them were Jahath and Obadiah, the Levites, of the sons of Merari; and Zechariah and Meshullam, of the sons of the Kohathites, to set it forward; and other of the Levites, [d]all that could skill of instruments of musick.

13 Also they were [e]over the bearers of burdens, and were overseers of all that wrought the work in any manner of service: and of the Levites there were [f]scribes, and [g]officers, and [h]porters.

14 ¶ And when they brought out the money that was brought into the house of the LORD, [i]Hilkiah the priest found a book of [k]the law of the LORD given by [*]Moses.

15 And Hilkiah answered and said to Shaphan the scribe, I have found the book of the law in the house of the LORD. And Hilkiah delivered the book to Shaphan.

16 And [l]Shaphan carried the book to the king, and brought the king word back again, saying, All that was committed to [†]thy servants, they do it.

17 And [m]they have [‡]gathered together the money that was found in the house of the LORD, and have delivered it into the hand of the overseers, and to the hand of the workmen.

18 Then Shaphan the scribe told the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath given me a book. [n]And Shaphan read [§]it before the king.

ance, "humbling himself greatly before the God of his fathers." He confessed his sins, condemned himself, and was covered with shame before God, abhorring his crimes, and loathing himself for them, as guilty of most aggravated ingratitude, impiety, and iniquity; yet still hoping to be pardoned, through the abundant mercy of the Lord, who had always, in the days of his ancestors, shown himself ready to forgive repenting rebels. These humble supplications the Lord graciously accepted: and he inclined the king of Assyria to liberate his prisoner, and to reinstate him in his authority. "Then Manasseh knew that the LORD he was God," alone able to punish, or to deliver: he likewise became acquainted with him as a God of salvation; and learned to fear, trust, love, and obey him. It is evident that Manasseh, on his return from Babylon, entirely renounced all idolatry; and set himself to suppress it in his kingdom, to revive the worship of God at the temple, and by his example and authority to prevail with the people to attend on it. These were "fruits meet for repentance."—Scott.

AMON.—We have little recorded concerning Amon, but enough, unless it were better. Here is, 1. His great wickedness. He did as "Manasseh had done" in the days of his apostacy, ver. 22. They who think this an evidence that Manasseh did not truly repent, forget how many good kings had wicked sons. Only it should seem that Manasseh was in this defective, that when he "cast out the images," he did not utterly deface and destroy them according to the law, which required them to "burn the images with fire," Deut. vii. 5. How necessary that law was, this instance shows; for the "carved images" being only thrown by, and not burnt, Amon knew where to find them, soon set them up, and sacrificed to them. It is added, to represent him exceeding sinful, and to justify God in cutting him off so soon, (1.) That he out-did his father in sinning; "he trespassed more and more," ver. 23. His father did ill, but he did worse. They that were joined to idols, grew more and more mad upon them, (2.) That he came short of his father in repenting; "he humbled not himself before the Lord, as his father had humbled himself." He fell like him, but did not get up again like him. It is not so much sin, as impenitence in sin that ruins men. 2. His speedy destruction. He reigned but two years, and his servants "conspired against him," and "slew him," ver. 24. Perhaps when Amon sinned, as his father did, in the beginning of his days, he promised himself that he should repent, as his father did in the latter end of his days. But his case shows what a madness it is to presume upon that.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIV. JOSIAH'S EARLY PIETY AND ZEAL.—Ver. 1. Concerning Josiah we are told, 1. That he came to the crown when he was very young, but eight years old; yet his [illegible] did not debar him from his right, and he reigned thirty-one years, a considerable time. I fear, however, that in the beginning of his reign, things went much as they had done in his father's time, because, being a child, he must have left the management of them to others; so that it was not till his 12th year, which goes far in the number of his years, that the reformation began, ver. 3. He could not, as Hezekiah did, fall about it immediately. 2. That he reigned well, ver. 2, approved himself to God, trod in the steps of David, and did not decline either "to the right hand or to the left;" for there are errors on both hands. 3. That while he was young, about sixteen years old, he "began to seek after God," ver. 3. We have reason to think that he had not so good an education as Manasseh had; it is well if those about him did not endeavour to corrupt and debauch him; yet he thus sought God when he was young. It is the duty and interest of young people, and will particularly be the honour of young gentlemen, as soon as they come to years of understanding, to "begin to seek God;" for they that seek him early shall find him. 4. That in his 12th year, when, it is probable, he took the administration of the government entirely into his own hands, he "began to purge his kingdom from the remains of idolatry;" he destroyed the high places, groves, images, altars, all the utensils of idolatry, ver. 3, 4. He not only cast them out as Manasseh did, but brake them to pieces, and made dust of them. This destruction of idolatry is here said to be in his 12th year, but it was said, 2 Kings xxiii. 23, to be in his 18th year; something was done towards it now in his 12th year; then he began to purge out idolatry, but probably, that good work met with opposition, so that it was not thoroughly done till they had found the book of the law six years after; but here the whole work is laid together briefly, which was much more largely and particularly related in the Kings. His zeal carried him out to do this, not only in Judah and Jerusalem, but in the cities of Israel too, as far as he had any influence upon them. Orders are given by the king for the repair of the temple, ver. 8. When he had purged the house of the corruptions of it, he began to fit it up for the services that were to be performed in it. Thus we must do by the spiritual temple of the heart; get it cleansed from the pollutions of sin, and then renewed so as to be transformed into the image of God. Josiah, in this order, calls God "the Lord his God;" they that truly love God, will "love the habitation of his house."

FINDING OF THE BOOK OF THE LAW.—Ver. 14. This whole paragraph we had just as it is here related, 2 Kings xxii. 8—20, and, 1. We may hence take occasion to bless God that we have plenty of Bibles, and that they are, or may be, in all hands; that the book of the law and gospel is not lost, is not scarce; that, in this sense, the "word of the Lord" is not "precious." 20 And the king commanded Hilkiah, and [q]Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and [r]Abdon[6] the son of Micah, and Shaphan the scribe, and [s]Asaiah a servant of the king's, saying, 21 Go, [t]enquire of the LORD for me, and for them [u]that are left in Israel and in Judah, concerning the words of the book that is found: [x]for great is the wrath of the LORD that is poured out upon us, because our fathers have not kept the word of the LORD, to do after all that is written in this book.

22 And Hilkiah, and they that the king had appointed, went to Huldah [y]the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tikvath,[7] the son of [z]Hasrah, keeper of the ‖ wardrobe; (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the *college:) and they spake to her to that effect.

23 ¶ And she answered them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [a]Tell ye the man that sent you to me,

24 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, [b]I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even [c]all the curses that are written in the book which they have read before the king of Judah:

25 Because [d]they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore [e]my wrath shall be poured out upon this place, and [f]shall not be quenched.

26 And [g]as for the king of Judah, who sent you to enquire of the LORD, so shall ye say unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel concerning the words which thou hast heard;

27 Because [h]thine heart was tender, and thou didst [i]humble thyself before God, when thou heardest his words against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, and humbledst thyself before me, and [k]didst rend thy clothes, and weep before me; I have even heard thee also, saith the LORD.

28 Behold, [l]I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave [m]in peace, [n]neither shall thine eye see all the evil that I will bring upon this place, and upon the inhabitants of the same. So they brought the king word again.

29 ¶ Then [o]the king sent and [p]gathered together all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem.

30 And the king went up into the house of the LORD, and all the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests, and the Levites, and all the people, †great and small: and [q]he read in their ears all the words of [r]the book of the covenant that was found in the house of the LORD.

31 And the king stood [s]in his place,[8] and [t]made a covenant before the LORD, to walk after the LORD, and to keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes [u]with all his heart, and with all his soul, to perform the words of the covenant which are written in this book.

32 And [x]he caused[9] all that were ‡present in Jerusalem and Benjamin to stand to it. And the inhabitants of Jerusalem [y]did according to the covenant of God, the God of their fathers.

33 And Josiah [z]took away all [a]the abominations out of all the countries that pertained to the children of Israel, and made all that were present in Israel to serve, even to serve the LORD their God. And [b]all his days they departed not §from following the LORD, the God of their fathers.

streams of it, in all places, "make glad the city of our God:" Usus communis aquarum—These waters flow for general use. What a great deal shall we have to answer for, if the great things of God's law, being thus made common, should be accounted by us as strange things! 2. We may hence learn, whenever we read or hear the word of God, to affect our hearts with it, and to get them possessed with a holy fear of that wrath of God which is there revealed against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, as Josiah's tender heart was. When he heard the words of the law, he "rent his clothes;" ver. 19, and God was well pleased with his doing so, ver. 27. Were the things contained in the scripture new to us, as they were here to Josiah, surely they would make deeper impressions upon us than commonly they do; but they are never the less weighty, and therefore should not be the less considered by us for their being well known. Rend the heart therefore, not the garments. 3. We are here directed, when we are under convictions of sin, and apprehensions of divine wrath, to inquire of the Lord; so Josiah did, ver. 21. It concerns us to ask as they did, Acts ii. 37, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" And more particularly as the jailer, saying, "What must I do to be saved?" Acts xvi. 30. "If ye will thus inquire, inquire ye;" Isa. xxi. 12, and, blessed be God, we have the lively oracles to which to apply ourselves with these inquiries. 4. We are here warned of the ruin that sin brings upon nations and kingdoms. They that forsake God bring evil upon themselves, ver. 24, 25, and kindle a fire "which shall not be quenched;" such will the fire of God's wrath be, when the decree is gone forth against those that obstinately and impenitently persist in their wicked ways. 5. We are here encouraged to humble ourselves before God, and seek unto him as Josiah did: if we cannot prevail thereby to turn away God's wrath from our land, yet we shall deliver our own souls, ver. 27, 28. And good people are here taught to be so far from fearing death as to welcome it, rather, when it "takes them away from the evil to come." See how the property of it is altered, by making it the matter of a promise: "Thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace;" housed in that ark, as Noah, when a deluge is coming. —Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Several years of our lives must pass before we become capable of performing useful services; our earliest youth should therefore be dedicated to God, that we may not waste any of our remaining span. Happy and wise are they who seek the Lord at a period of life when others are pursuing sinful pleasures, contracting bad habits, forming ruinous connexions, and making work for bitter repentance; either gracious repentance in this world, or that which is attended with despair in the regions of misery. None can express the anguish that is prevented by early piety, and its happy consequences. If we would be useful, we must first take heed to ourselves; and when we are established in faith and grace, we shall be fitted for instruments of good to others. In this important work we must expect many opposers, and but few cordial helpers; and the more we look into the world, the church, or our own hearts, by the light of God's word, the more evidently shall we see how very much reformation and renovation are everywhere needed.—The suppression of gross abominations makes way for the pure administration of God's ordinances; and when the filthiness and idols are cleansed out of our hearts, the Lord will prepare his temple there, and gracious come and dwell in it.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXV. GREAT PASSOVER UNDER JOSIAH.—Ver. 1. The king and the prince influenced by his example, gave liberally for the bearing of the charges of this passov The ceremonial services were expensive, which perhaps was one reason why they h been neglected. People had not zeal enough to be at the charge of them, nor we they now very fond of them for that reason. And therefore, 1. Josiah, at his o proper cost, furnished the congregation with paschal lambs and other sacrifices, to offered during the seven days of the feast. He allowed out of his own estate 30,0 "lambs" for "passover-offerings," which the offerers were to feast upon, and 3,000 b locks, ver. 7, to be offered during the following seven days. Note, Those who are se ous in religion, when they persuade others to that which is good, should make it cheap and easy to them as may be. And where God sows plentifully, he expects reap accordingly; it is to be feared that the congregation generally had not come p vided; so that, if Josiah had not furnished them, the work of God must have stood s 2. The chief of the priests, that were men of great estates, contributed toward priests' charges, as Josiah toward the people's. "The princes," ver. 8, that is, the c of the priests, the princes of the holy tribe, "rulers of the house of God," bore priests' charges. And some of the rich and great men of the Levites furnished th also with cattle, both great and small, for offerings, ver. 9. For those that sincer desire to be found in the way of their duty, Providence sometimes raises up friend bear them out in it, beyond what they could have expected. The priests and Lev performed their office very readily, ver. 10. They killed the paschal lambs in the c of the temple, the priests sprinkled the blood upon the altar, the Levites flayed th and then gave the flesh to the people, according to their families, ver. 11, 12, not fe than ten, nor more than twenty to a lamb; they took it to their several apartme roasted it, and ate it, "according to the ordinance," ver. 13. As for the other sacri that were eucharistical, the flesh of them was boiled, according to the law of the pe offerings, and was "divided speedily among the people," that they might feast upo

9 Conaniah also, and Shemaiah and Nethaneel, his brethren, and Hashabiah and Jeiel and Jozabad, chief of the Levites, ‖gave unto the Levites for passover offerings five thousand small cattle, and five hundred oxen.

10 So the service was prepared, and [y]the priests stood in their place, and the Levites in their courses, according to the king's commandment.

11 And they killed the passover, and [z]the priests sprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites [a]flayed them.

12 And they removed the burnt offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the families of the people, to offer unto the LORD, [b]as it is written in the book of Moses. And so did they with the oxen.

13 And they [c]roasted the passover with fire according to the ordinance: but the other holy offerings [d]sod they in pots, and in caldrons, and in pans, and *divided them speedily among all the people.

14 And afterward they made ready for themselves, and for the priests: [e]because the priests the sons of Aaron were busied in offering of burnt offerings and the fat until night; therefore the Levites[4] prepared for themselves, and for the priests the sons of Aaron.

15 And the singers the sons of Asaph were in their †place, [f]according to the commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun the king's seer; and [g]the porters waited at every gate; they might not depart from their service; for their brethren the Levites prepared for them.

16 So all the service of the LORD was prepared the same day, to keep the passover, and to offer burnt offerings upon the altar of the LORD, according to the commandment of king Josiah.

17 And the children of Israel that were ‡present kept the passover at that time, and [h]the feast of unleavened bread seven days.

18 And [i]there was no passover like[5] to that kept in Israel from the days of Samuel the prophet; [k]neither did all the kings of Israel keep such a passover as Josiah kept, and the priests, and the Levites, and all Judah and Israel that were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

19 In the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah was this passover kept.

20 ¶ After all this, when Josiah had prepared the §temple, [l]Necho king of Egypt came up to fight against [m]Carchemish[6] by Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him.

21 But he sent ambassadors to him, saying, [n]What have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? I come not against thee this day, but against the ‖ house wherewith I have war; for [o]God commanded me[7] to make haste: [p]forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not.

22 Nevertheless Josiah would not turn his face from him, [q]but disguised himself, that he might fight with him, and hearkened not unto the words of Necho from [r]the mouth of God, and came to fight in the valley of [s]Megiddo.

23 And [t]the archers shot at king Josiah; and the king said to his servants, Have me away; for I am sore *wounded.

24 His servants therefore took him out of that chariot, and put him in [u]the second chariot that he had; and [x]they brought him to Jerusalem, and [y]he died, and was buried †in one of the sepulchres of his fathers. And [z]all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah.

25 ¶ And [a]Jeremiah lamented for Josiah: and [b]all the singing men and the singing women spake of Josiah in their lamentations[8] to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel: and, behold, they are written in the lamentations.

26 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and his ‡goodness, according to that which was written in the law of the LORD, as a token of their joy in the atonement made, and their reconciliation to God thereby. And lastly, The priests and Levites took care to honour God, by "eating of the passover" themselves, ver. 14. Let not ministers think that the care they take for the souls of others will excuse their neglect of their own; or, that being employed so much in public worship, will supersede the religious exercises of their closets and families. The Levites here "made ready for themselves and for the priests," because the priests were wholly taken up all day in the service of the altar.—Henry.

27 And [c]his deeds, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah.

JOSIAH'S DEATH.—Ver. 20—27. Pharaoh, in marching his army through Josiah's territories against his will, certainly committed an act of hostility. It is evident that Josiah was in possession of the whole land, and not of Judah only: and probably he held the northern parts of it as a grant from the king of Babylon; and was not only in alliance with him, but bound to guard his frontiers against hostile invaders. And doubtless the kings of Judah had been in some measure dependent on the kings of Assyria and Babylon, from the time of Manasseh's captivity and release. Pharaoh declared, indeed, by his ambassadors, that he did not mean to attack Josiah, but to march against a power with which he was at war. He was, however, in the heart of Josiah's kingdom before he sent this embassy, and he avowed his intention of attacking his ally; and therefore Josiah may fairly, on both accounts, be justified from the charge of unjustly meddling with a war that did not belong to him; for no king upon earth would think it unjust to declare war against another prince, who should forcibly march an army into his dominions, in order to attack another that was in alliance with him. It is true the ambassadors assured Josiah that "God had commanded Pharaoh to make haste," and said, "Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not:" and he is therefore said, "not to have hearkened to the words of Necho, from the mouth of God." But Necho produced no proof that he was a prophet of JEHOVAH, and Sennacherib had used similar language to Hezekiah, who had paid no regard to it. The word used by Necho, (Elohim,) may signify gods, or idols: and critics have noted, that the expression, "from the mouth of God," is nowhere used in the Hebrew Bible, for a revelation from the true God; but that it is always "from the mouth of the LORD."—It is not indeed at all probable, that God had commanded Pharaoh by Jeremiah, or by any other prophet, to undertake this expedition: for in that case Josiah would doubtless have been informed, and have submitted. Josiah, however, seems to have been guilty of precipitation, and in not inquiring of the Lord what time warned, before he proceeded to attack so formidable an enemy: his premature and violent death might therefore be a rebuke for his rashness, but it was chiefly a judgment on a hypocritical and wicked generation. Whatever sin Josiah committed, he doubtless repented of it: and the final state of one, who habitually lives a life of repentance, faith, and obedience, cannot be affected by the manner in which he is suddenly taken away.—"The second chariot" seems to have been one that waited for him in case of necessity; into which he was removed, the other being perhaps covered with blood. Though the people would not imitate Josiah's eminent piety, and disliked his reformation; yet they highly respected his character, and were sensible that they had sustained a very great loss.—The book of Lamentations of Jeremiah was written on another occasion: and what that prophet composed on the death of Josiah hath not come down to us. But both the prophet and the people took several methods of doing honour to the memory of their prince; and of perpetuating the lamentations made on the account of his death; it is probable by an annual commemoration of that fatal event.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXVI. LAST KINGS OF JUDAH.—The destruction of Judah and Jerusalem is here coming on by degrees. God so ordered it, to show that he has no pleasure in the ruin of sinners, but had rather they would turn and live, and therefore gives them both time and inducement to repent, and waits to be gracious. The history of these reigns was more largely recorded in the three last chapters of the second of kings. 1. Jehoahaz was set up by the people, ver. 1, but in a quarter of a year was deposed by Pharaoh-Necho, and carried a prisoner to Egypt, and the land fined for setting him up, ver. 2—4. Of this young prince we hear no more; had he trodden in the steps of his father's piety, he might have reigned long, and prospered; but we are told in the Kings that "he did evil in the sight of the Lord," and therefore his triumphing was short, and his joy but for a moment. 2. Jehoiakim was set up by the king of Egypt, an old enemy to their land, gave what king he pleased to the kingdom, and what name he pleased to the king! ver. 4. He made Eliakim king, and called him Jehoiakim, in token of his authority over him. He "did that which was evil," ver. 5; nay, we read of the "abominations which he did," ver. 8, he was very wild and wicked; idolatries generally go under the name of abominations. We hear no more of the king of Egypt, but the king of Babylon came up against him, ver. 6, seized him and bound him, with a design to carry him to Babylon; but it seems he either changed his mind, and suffered him to reign as his vassal, or death released the prisoner before he was carried away. However, the best and most valuable vessels of the temple were now carried away, and made use of in Nebuchadnezzar's temple in Babylon, ver. 7. [illegible] suppose no temple in the world was so richly furnished as that of king of Babylon, and bound him in ‡fetters, to carry him to Babylon.

7 Nebuchadnezzar also carried off [g]the vessels of the house of the LORD to Babylon, and put them in his temple at Babylon.

8 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and his abominations which he did, and that which was found in him, behold, [h]they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah: and [i]Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

9 ¶ Jehoiachin was [k]eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

10 And §when the year was expired, [l]king Nebuchadnezzar sent and brought him to Babylon, with the ‖goodly vessels of the house of the LORD, and made [m]Zedekiah his brother king[2] over Judah and Jerusalem.

11 ¶ Zedekiah was [n]one and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned eleven years in Jerusalem.

12 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD his God, and [o]humbled not himself [p]before Jeremiah the prophet, speaking from [q]the mouth of the LORD.

13 And he also [r]rebelled against king Nebuchadnezzar, [s]who had made him swear by God: but [t]he stiffened his neck, [u]and hardened his heart, from turning unto the LORD God of Israel.

14 ¶ Moreover [x]all the chief of the priests, and the people, transgressed very much [y]after all the abominations of the heathen; and [z]polluted the house of the LORD which he had hallowed in Jerusalem.

15 And [a]the LORD God of their fathers sent to them by *his messengers, rising up †betimes, and sending; [b]because he had compassion on his people, and on his dwelling place:

[4] These last verses of Chronicles are the same as those which begin the ensuing book of Ezra. It seems probable that Ezra having some years before written the book that bears his name, and afterwards writing these books of Chronicles, which contain the genealogies and history ending at the time when the other began, annexed to the end of these books the first paragraph of that.—WALL.

17 Therefore [h]he brought upon them [i]the king of the Chaldees, [k]who slew their young men with the sword [l]in the house of their sanctuary, and had [m]no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age: he gave them all into his hand.

sin of Judah was, that they had brought the idols of the heathen into God's temple; and, now their punishment was, that the vessels of the temple were carried away unto the service of the gods of the nations. If men will profane God's institutions by their sins, it is just with God to suffer them to be profaned by their enemies. 3. Jehoiachin, or Jeconiah, the son of Jehoiakim, attempted to reign in his stead, and reigned long enough to show his evil inclination; but, after three months and ten days, the king of Babylon sent and fetched him away captive, with more of the goodly vessels of the temple. He is here said to be eight years old, but in Kings he is said to be eighteen when he began to reign, so that this seems to be a mistake of the transcriber, unless we suppose that his father took him at eight years old to join with him in the government, as some think.

ZEDEKIAH.—Ver. 11—12. Zedekiah brought evil upon himself by his own folly. For he conducted himself very ill both toward God and toward the king of Babylon. 1. If he had but made God his friend, that would have prevented the ruin. Jeremiah brought him messages from God, which, if he had given due regard to them, might have secured a lengthening of his tranquillity; but it is here charged upon him, that he "humbled not himself before Jeremiah," ver. 12. It was expected that this mighty prince, high as he was, should humble himself before a poor prophet, when "he spake from the mouth of the Lord;" should submit to his admonitions, and be amended by them, to his counsels, and be ruled by them; should lay himself under the commanding power of the word of God in his mouth: because he would not thus make himself a servant to God, he is made a slave to his enemies. God will find some way or other to humble them that will not humble themselves. Jeremiah, as a prophet, was set "over the nations and kingdoms," Jer. i. 10; and, as mean a figure as he made, whoever would not humble themselves before him, found that it was at their peril. 2. If he had but been true to his covenant with the king of Babylon, that would have prevented his ruin; but he "rebelled against him," though he had sworn to be his faithful tributary, and perfidiously violated his engagements to him, ver. 13. This was it that provoked the king of Babylon to deal so severely with him as he did. All nations looked upon an oath as a sacred thing, and on those that durst break through the obligations of it as the worst of men, abandoned of God, and to be abhorred by all mankind; if therefore Zedekiah falsify his oath, "when, lo, he has given his hand," he "shall not escape," Ezek. xvii. 18. Though Nebuchadnezzar was a heathen, an enemy, yet if, having sworn to him, he be false to him, he shall know "there is a God to whom vengeance belongs." The thing that ruined Zedekiah was, not only that he "turned not to the Lord God of Israel," but that he "stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart from turning to him," that is, he was obstinately resolved not to return to him, would not lay his neck under God's yoke, nor his heart under the impressions of his word, and so, in effect, he "would not be healed," he "would not live."

SACK, SLAUGHTER, AND CAPTIVITY.—1. Multitudes were put to the sword, even "in the house of their sanctuary," ver. 17, whither they fled for refuge, hoping that the holiness of the place would be their protection: but how could they expect to find it so, when they themselves had polluted it with their abominations? ver. 14. Those that cast off the dominion of their religion, forfeit all the benefit and comfort of it. The Chaldeans not only paid no reverence to the sanctuary, but showed no natural pity either to the tender sex, or to venerable age. They forsook God, who had compassion on them, ver. 15, and would have none of him; justly therefore are they given up into the hands of cruel men, that had no compassion on young man or maiden. 2. All the remaining vessels of the temple, great and small, and all the treasures, sacred and secular, the treasures of God's house, and of the king and his princes, were seized, and brought to Babylon, ver. 18. 3. The temple was burnt, the walls of Jerusalem demolished, the houses (called here the palaces, as Ps. xlviii. 3, so stately, rich, and sumptuous were they) laid in ashes, and all the furniture, called here "the goodly vessels thereof," destroyed, ver. 19. Let us see here what woful havock sin makes, and, as we tender the comfort and continuance of our estates, keep that worm from the root of them. 4. The remainder of the people that escaped the sword were carried captive to Babylon, ver. 20, impoverished, enslaved, insulted, and exposed to all the miseries, not only of a strange and barbarous land, but of an enemy's land, where those that hated them bare rule over them. They were servants to those monarchs, and, no doubt, were ruled with rigour so long as that monarchy lasted. Now they sat down by the rivers of Babylon, with the streams of which they mingled their tears, Ps. cxxxvii. 1. And though there, it should seem, they were cured of idolatry; yet, as appears by the prophet Ezekiel, they were not cured of mocking the prophets. 5. The land lay desolate while they were captives in Babylon, ver. 21. The fruitful land, the glory of all lands, was now turned into a desert, not tilled nor husbanded. The pastures were not clothed as they used to be with flocks, nor the valleys with corn, but all lay neglected.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—16. When the wickedness of nations provokes God to remove wise and pious princes, and to send others of a contrary character; avowed impiety and desolating judgments may be expected to come in like a flood, and bear down all before them. Indeed Providence often raises up such worthless rulers, one after another, to scourge a guilty land; and then every change proves a step towards more complete destruction.—Scott.

BOOK OF EZRA.

IT is generally agreed that Ezra wrote this book, and also the preceding books of Chronicles. It is likewise recorded by the Jewish writers, that he revised all the preceding parts of Scripture, and published a correct copy of the whole; and, indeed, this account appears highly probable. He is not called a prophet in the sacred Scripture; yet there can be no doubt but he performed these services under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, as no distinction is made in the New Testament between one part and another of that volume, which was then called "The Oracles of God," and as such, sanctioned by our Lord and his apostles. The prophecies of Haggai and Zechariah confirm the history contained in the former part of this book; and as Ezra alone records the rebuilding of the temple, whatever in the New Testament relates to the temple, as then standing, is in some sense a sanction to the authenticity of the narrative, though I do not recollect any express references to it, except in the genealogies. Neither does the book appear to contain any direct prophecies; but it is written in so pious a strain, and so much in the manner of the other Scriptures, that it has strong internal evidences of Divine inspiration. As express mention is made in it of Jeremiah's prophecies, and plain intimations are given of Isaiah's extraordinary prediction concerning Cyrus (i. 1–3), it is evident that the writings of these prophets were then extant; and the constant reference to the law of Moses and the preceding histories in this book, and that of Nehemiah, proves the same respecting them. Ezra was peculiarly had in honour by the ancient Jews, and is so by the modern; and to this we must ascribe the forgery of several other books under his name (especially the two apocryphal books of Esdras or Ezra); for forgeries they undoubtedly are, and of a much later date than the authentic record of Ezra. This history opens with the proclamation of Cyrus, the return of a company of Jews, and their attempts to rebuild the city and temple, and to re-inhabit the land; it proceeds to record the opposition which they met with, the delays this occasioned, and how, after a time, they in part succeeded. At length, about seventy-eight or nine years afterwards (concerning a large part of which nothing is recorded), Ezra himself arrived with a commission, and large powers and grants, from Artaxerxes, and with many attendants; and the narrative closes with an account of the sin of the Jews in marrying heathen wives, Ezra's grief, humble confession, and prayers on that account, and his pious endeavours to separate his people from idolaters. In this and the subsequent history, the Jews no longer appear as an independent prosperous nation, governed by kings of their own race, but a small remnant returned from captivity, by the favour of the Persian kings, and under their protection and dominion, and struggling, often feebly, with many difficulties and enemies; yet in this condition they were enabled to re-establish the worship of God at the temple in Jerusalem, to which they outwardly adhered till the coming of Christ, being effectually cured of gross idolatry, though, in other respects, exceedingly prone to disobedience. During the captivity, nothing is recorded of the history of Israel, except what may be collected from the prophecies of Ezekiel and Daniel; and exceedingly little is contained in the Scripture of their condition, during 536 years, till the birth of Christ, compared with the regular history given of the nation from the days of Moses to the captivity. The old dispensation was about to expire and make way for Christianity; the Spirit of prophecy was about to be withdrawn for a season; and the people had so often and so flagrantly violated their national covenant, that they were not honoured and noticed as they had been in former ages.

CHAP. I. PROCLAMATION OF CYRUS.—Ver. 1. Now here we are told, 1. Whence this proclamation took its rise. "The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus." Note, The hearts of kings are in the hand of the Lord, and, like the rivulets of water, he turneth them which way soever he will. It is said of Cyrus that he knew not God, nor how to serve him; but God knew him, and how to serve himself by him, Isa. xlv. 4. God governs the world by his influence on the spirits of men, and, whatever good is done at any time, it is God that stirs up the spirit to do it, puts thoughts into the mind, gives to the understanding to form a right judgment, and directs the will which way he pleases. Whatever good offices therefore are, at any time, done for the church of God, he must have the glory of them. 2. The reference it had to the prophecy of Jeremiah, by whom God had not only promised that they should return, but had fixed the time, which set time to favour Zion was now come. Seventy years were determined, Jer. xxv. 12; xxix. 10; and he that kept the promise made concerning Israel's deliverance out of "Egypt to a day," Exod. xii. 41, was doubtless as punctual to this. What Cyrus now did, was long since said to be the "confirming of the word of God's servants," Isa. xliv. 26. Jeremiah, while he lived, was hated and despised; yet thus did providence honour him long after, that a mighty monarch shall act in pursuance of the word of the Lord by his mouth. 3. The date of this proclamation. It was in his first year, not the first of his reign over Persia, the kingdom he was born to, but the first of his reign over Babylon, the kingdom he had conquered. Those are much honoured whose spirits are stirred up to begin with God, and to serve him in their first years. 4. The publication of it; this was made by word of mouth, he "caused a voice to pass throughout all his kingdom," like a jubilee trumpet, (a joyful sabbatical year after many melancholy ones,) proclaiming liberty to the captives; the publication was made also by writing, that it might be the more satisfactory, and might be sent to those distant provinces where the ten tribes were scattered, in Assyria and Media, 2 Kings xvii. 6.—Henry.

ITS FIRST RESULTS.—Ver. 5, 6. Some readers may perhaps wonder, that, on this proclamation of Cyrus, the Jews did not assemble in one body, and directly go and take possession of their ancient inheritance: but a little reflection shows the matter in another light.—The city and temple lay a heap of ruins, and it would cost immense labour and expense to rebuild them. The land was either wholly desolate, or occupied by encroaching neighbours; and in either case it would require some time and trouble to procure for themselves habitations and provisions. The journey was long, arduous, and perilous, to those who were attended with families and substance; and many enemies would endeavour to plunder them by the way, as far as they could and dared. None of the Jews had seen Jerusalem or the temple, except such as were above fifty years of age; at which period of life the spirit of enterprise commonly begins to decline. Few were attached to the temple by true piety; and most of them wanted even that attachment which men naturally feel for the land of their nativity; having been born in the places where they were then settled. Some persons of true and eminent piety were so situated, that they did not think it their duty to remove; as Daniel in the court of Cyrus: others would be hindered by the infirmities of old age, and the peculiar circumstances of their families and connections. In short, the difficulties, hardship, and peril were manifest; the success of the attempt would be doubtful to all but those that were "strong in faith:" its temporal advantages were remote and precarious, and not worth the venture; especially to such as had obtained comfortable settlements or occupations in the land of their captivity. Even the spiritual advantages would appear to the pious mind more intended for posterity than for that generation; and to engage in it, in this view, would require vigorous faith, lively hope, and an active zeal for the honour of God, and the benefit of his church, and establishment of his worship in ages to come.—We may conclude, that in consequence of the captivities, many Israelites, and some of the Jews, were finally incorporated with the heathen, among whom they dwelt: yet these calamities seem to have had a very good effect on considerable numbers. The chief fathers of Judah and Benjamin, who had the greatest influence in their tribes, first moved in this undertaking; and they were joined by the leading men among the priests and Levites, which doubtless rendered the design more reputable: and thus a considerable number were encouraged to attend them; whilst others assisted, and sent oblations for the intended temple.—Many more returned than we read of being carried away captive; but as the land had been utterly desolated, all the surviving inhabitants must have been driven into other countries, and most of them into those lands which had been subject to the kings of Babylon, and which were now fallen under the dominion of the kings of Persia: and doubtless many of the ten tribes accompanied the Jews at this time. It is, however, evident that a great majority, even of the latter, chose to continue in the settlements which they had there gained: some of them afterwards returned, but very many never did; and immense numbers of Jews were from that time dispersed in every city and country, over all that part of the world. So that the new settlement in Judea and at Jerusalem, formed but a small part of that people, as they continued to be distinguished from other nations: for they still increased and multiplied very rapidly, according to the promise of God to their fathers. It is worthy of observation, that no Jews who chose to go, were excluded by Cyrus's proclamation: yet the language of the sacred historian implies, that none would actually have gone, if He, who "stirred up the spirit of Cyrus," had not also "stirred up the spirit of the people," to avail themselves of this permission: (the original words are the same in both clauses.) This transaction, (as Archbishop Usher has particularly observed,) furnishes a most striking illustration, or, as I would rather say, representation, of the way in which the gospel is proposed to sinners, and embraced by believers. It is in general set before the ruined descendants of Adam; with the Saviour's most solemn assurance, that "him who cometh—he will in no wise cast out." Yet, "no man can come unto him, except the Father draw him."—Scott.

[2] The numbers mentioned in the ensuing catalogue belonged chiefly to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin; some of them being denominated from the chief ancestors of their families, and others from the places or great towns which they formerly inhabited in those two tribes. It is probable that all who are here set down gave in their names as intending to return to Judea, though some of them might change their intentions, or die by the way; and others, who are not in this register, might afterward join themselves to the number; which is the most probable reason of the differences in the numbers here given by Ezra, and those given by Nehemiah, Neh. vii.—Pyle.

[3] In Nehemiah there is a diversity concerning this number and some other: it may be by reason that these two numberings of Ezra and Nehemiah were not both at one time, whereupon some of them who were numbered might be dead, or some others might be joined to them.—Diodati.

CHAP. II. Census of the Restored Captives—the People.—We may observe here, 1. That an account was kept in writing of the families that came up out of captivity, and the numbers of each family, (1.) For their honour, as part of their recompense for their faith and courage, their confidence in God, and their affection to their own land, and to stir up others to follow their good example. Those that honour God, he will thus honour. The names of all those Israelites indeed, that accept the offer of deliverance by Christ, shall be found, to their honour, in a more sacred record than this, even in "the Lamb's book of life." (2.) For the benefit of posterity, that they might know from whom they descended, and to whom they were allied. 2. That they are called "children of the promise." Judah, that had been an illustrious kingdom, to which other kingdoms had been made provinces, subject to it, and dependent on it, was now itself made a province, to receive laws and commissions from the king of Persia, and to be accountable to him. See how sin diminishes and debases a nation, which righteousness would exalt. But by thus being made servants, (as the patriarchs by being sojourners in a country which was theirs by promise,) they were reminded of the "better country, that is the heavenly." Heb. xi. 16, a "kingdom which cannot be moved," or changed into a province. 3. That they are said to come "every one to his city," that is, the city appointed them, in which appointment an eye, no doubt, was had to their former settlement by Joshua; and to that, as near as might be, they returned, for it does not appear that any others, at least any that were able to oppose them, possessed them in their absence. 4. That the leaders are first mentioned, ver. 2. Zerubbabel and Jeshua were their Moses and Aaron, the former their chief prince, the latter their chief priest. Nehemiah and Mordecai are mentioned here; some think, not the same with the famous men we afterward meet with of those names: probably they were the same; but afterward returned to court, for the service of their country. 5. Some of these several families are named from the persons that were their ancestors, others from the places in which they had formerly resided; as with us many surnames are the proper names of persons, others of places. 6. Some little difference there is, between the numbers of some of the families here, and in Neh. vii. where this catalogue is repeated; which might arise from this, that some who had given in their names at first to come, afterward drew back—said, "I go, Sir, but went not," which would lessen the number of the families they belonged to; others, "that declined" at first, "afterward repented, and went," and so increased the number. 7. Here are two families that are here called "the children of Elam," one, ver. 7, another, ver. 31, and, which is strange, the number of both is the same, 1254. 8. The children of Adonikam, which signifies "a high lord," were 666, just the "number of the beast," Rev. xiii. 18, which is there said to be "the number of a man," which Mr. Hugh Broughton thinks has reference to this man. 9. The children of Bethlehem, ver. 21, were but 123, though it was David's city: for Bethlehem was "little among the thousands of Judah," yet there must the Messiah arise, Mic. v. 2. 10. Anathoth had been a famous place in the tribe of Benjamin, and yet here it numbered but 128, ver. 23, which is to be imputed to the divine curse which the men of Anathoth brought upon themselves by persecuting Jeremiah, who was of their city, Jer. xxi. 23. "There shall be no remnant of them, for I will bring evil upon the men of Anathoth." And see Isa. x. 30, "O poor Anathoth!" Nothing brings ruin on a people sooner than persecution.

Census of the Sacred Order.—Here is, 1. An account of the priests that returned, and they were a considerable number; about a tenth part of the whole company: for the whole were above forty-two thousand, ver. 64, and four families of priests made up above forty-two hundred, ver. 36, 39, thus was the tenth, God's part, a blessed decimation. Three of the fathers of the priests here named were heads of courses, 1 Chron. xxiv. 7, 8, 14. The fourth was Pashur, ver. 38. If these were of the posterity of that Pashur that abused Jeremiah, Jer. xx. 1, it is strange that so bad a man should have so good a seed, and so numerous. 2. Of the Levites; I cannot but wonder at the small number of them, for, taking in both the singers and the porters, ver. 40—42, they did not make 350. Time was, when the Levites were more forward to their duty than the priests, 2 Chron. xxix. 34, but they were not so now. In one place, one family, has the reputation for pious zeal now, another may have it another time. "The wind blows where it listeth," and shifts its points. 3. Of the Nethinims who, it is supposed, were the Gibeonites, given (so their name signifies) by Joshua first, Josh. ix. 27, and again by David, Ezra viii. 20, when Saul had expelled them, to be employed by the Levites in the work of God's house, as hewers of wood and drawers of water; and with them, of the children of Solomon's servants, whom he gave for the like use, (whether they were Jews or Gentiles, does not appear,) and who are here taken notice of among the retainers of the temple, and numbered with the Nethinims of Solomon's servants, were three hundred ninety and two.

59 And these were they which went up from Telmelah, [p]Tel-harsa, Cherub, Addan, and Immer: but they could not shew their father's house, and their [t]seed, whether they were of Israel:

60 The children [q]of Delaiah, the children of Tobiah, the children of Nekoda, six hundred fifty and two.

61 ¶ And of [r]the children of the priests:[7] the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai: which took a wife of the daughters of [s]Barzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their name:

62 These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found: [t]therefore [§]were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.

63 And [‖]the Tirshatha said unto them, that they [u]should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with [x]Urim and with Thummim.

64 ¶ The whole congregation together[8] was [y]forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore.

65 Beside their [z]servants and their maids, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven: and there were among them [a]two hundred singing men and singing women.

66 Their horses were seven hundred thirty and six; their mules, two hundred forty and five;

67 Their camels, four hundred thirty and five; their asses, six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

68 ¶ And some of the chief of the fathers, when they came to the house of the LORD which is at Jerusalem, [b]offered freely for the house of God to set it up [c]in his place:

69 They gave after their ability unto [d]the treasure of the work threescore and one thousand drams of gold, and five thousand pound of silver, and one hundred priests' garments.[9]

70 So [e]the priests, and the Levites, and some of the people, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, dwelt in their cities, and all Israel in their cities.

2 Then stood up [c]Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren the priests, and [d]Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and his brethren, and builded the altar[10] of the God of Israel, to offer burnt offerings thereon, [e]as it is written in the law of Moses the man of God.

3 And they set [f]the altar upon his bases; [g]for fear was upon them because of the people of those countries: and they offered burnt offerings thereon unto the LORD, even [h]burnt offerings morning and evening.

4 ¶ They kept also [i]the feast of tabernacles, as it is written, and offered [k]the daily burnt offerings by number, according to the custom, [*]as the duty of every day required;

ver. 55, 58. Note, It is an honour to belong to God's house, though in the meanest office there.—Henry.

THE TOTAL NUMBER.—Ver. 64. The number of the several families amounts only to twenty-nine thousand eight hundred and eighteen; and those in Nehemiah to thirty-one thousand and eighty-nine: yet the sum total is in both said to be forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty, besides their servants, Neh. vii. 66. The surplus are supposed to have been Levites who could not produce their genealogy, and Israelites from the other tribes, who accompanied their brethren of Judah and Benjamin. "It is remarkable that the two accounts" (of Ezra and Nehemiah) "agree in the total amount; and the sum of the numbers, as separately detailed, will correspond; if to the 29,818, specified by Ezra, we add the 1,765 persons reckoned by Nehemiah, which Ezra has omitted: and on the other hand, to the 31,089 enumerated by Nehemiah, add the 494, which is an overplus in Ezra, not noticed by Nehemiah: both writers including in the sum total 10,777 of the mixed multitude, not particularized in the individual detail."—"Prideaux attributes the difference to alterations made by Nehemiah, in compliance with changes that had happened since the departure from Babylon."—"The accounts unquestionably agreed when they were received into the canon, except where there might be some cause for variation; and probably the differences that now exist have originated in the carelessness of the copyists." [Gray's Key.]—Scott.

LIBERAL OFFERINGS.—It is said, ver. 68, 69, 1. That they "came to the house of the Lord at Jerusalem;" and yet that house, that holy and beautiful house, was now in ruins, a heap of rubbish; but, like their father Abraham, when the altar was gone, they came with devotion to "the place of the altar," Gen. xiii. 4; and it is the character of the genuine sons of Zion, that they favour even "the dust thereof," Ps. cii. 14. 2. That they offered freely toward the "setting of it up in its place." That, it seems, was the first house they talked of setting up; and, though they came off a journey, and were beginning the world, (two chargeable things,) yet they offered, and offered freely, toward the building of the temple. Let none complain of the necessary expenses of their religion, but believe, that when they come to balance the account, they will find that it clears the cost. Their offering was nothing in comparison with the offerings of the princes in David's time; then they offered by talents, 1 Chron. xxix. 7, now by drams; yet these drams, being after their ability, were as acceptable to God as those [illegible] like the widow's two mites. The 61,000 drams of gold amount, by Cumberland's [illegible] to so many pounds of our money, and so many groats. Every maneh, or [illegible] he reckons to be sixty shekels, namely, thirty ounces, which we may [illegible] ten shillings of our money, so that this 5,000 pounds of silver will be above £37,000 of our money. It seems God had blessed them with the increase of their wealth, as well as of their numbers, in Babylon; and, as God had prospered them, they gave cheerfully to the service of his house. 3. That they "dwelt in their cities," ver. 70. Though their cities were out of repair, yet, because they were their cities, such as God had assigned them, they were content to dwell in them: and were thankful for liberty and property, though they had little of pomp, plenty, or power. Their poverty was a bad cause, but their unity and unanimity were a good effect of it. Here was room enough for them all, and all their substance, so that there was no strife among them, but perfect harmony, a blessed presage of their settlement, as their discords, in the latter times of that state, were of their ruin.—Henry.

CHAP. III. RESTORATION OF THE NATIONAL WORSHIP.—Ver. 1. It is probable that the Jews began their journey in the beginning of the spring; and that they did not reach Jerusalem till three or four months after, chap. vii. 9. They employed a short time in providing habitations and necessaries for their families; and then they all met together in the seventh month. This was the season of the first solemnities which occurred after their arrival. On the first day the feast of trumpets was kept; the great day of atonement followed on the tenth; and the feast of tabernacles began on the fifteenth. All these they seemed to have observed with great devotion. Ver. 2, 3. The Jews built the altar upon the same foundation, and therefore of the same size, with that of Solomon. Probably it was formed of rough stones, with a large hearth of brass on the top. So large an altar, built all of brass, would have cost a sum far beyond their present circumstances. The fear of the tribes or nations around them, whom they knew to be their enemies, did not induce the people to take arms, or to erect fortifications, but to prepare an altar and to offer sacrifices: by which they put themselves under the protection of God. Ver. 4. "Which put this poor people to great expenses: but their piety was now such, that they valued nothing so much as the service of God."—(Bp. Patrick.) Ver. 5, 6. Some of the people had come to Jerusalem, and had prepared the altar, before the first day of the seventh month. And the rest being assembled as one man, they then began their solemn worship, with the daily sacrifices, those appointed for the new moons, and those for the feast of trumpets. Besides those sacrifices which were expressly appointed, many "willingly offered free-will offerings unto the Lord." Until the temple was completed, it is likely they had a tabernacle near the altar, where the sacred vessels and treasures were deposited and attended [illegible]

3 But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest of the chief of the fathers of Israel, said unto them, [g]Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God; but we ourselves together will build unto the LORD God of Israel, as [h]king Cyrus the king of Persia hath commanded us.

4 Then the people of the land [i]weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and [k]troubled them in building,

5 And [l]hired counsellors against them, to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus king of Persia, even until the reign of [m]Darius king of Persia.

6 And in the reign of †Ahasuerus,[2] in the beginning of his reign, [n]wrote they unto him an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.

7 ¶ And in the days of Artaxerxes[3] wrote [t]Bishlam, Mithredath, Tabeel, and the rest of their [s]companions, unto Artaxerxes king of Persia; and the writing of the letter was written in [o]the Syrian tongue, and interpreted in the Syrian tongue.

8 Rehum the chancellor and Shimshai the ‖scribe wrote a letter against Jerusalem to Artaxerxes the king in this sort:

9 Then wrote Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe, and the rest of their com-*panions; [p]the Dinaites, the [q]Apharsathchites, the Tarpelites, the Apharsites, the Archevites, the Babylonians, [r]the Susanchites, the Dehavites, and the [s]Elamites,

10 And [t]the rest of the nations whom the great and noble Asnapper[4] brought over, and set in the cities of Samaria, and the rest that are on this side the river, [u]and †at such a time.

11 ¶ This is the copy of the letter that they sent unto him, even unto Artaxerxes the king; Thy servants the men on this side the river, and at such a time.

12 Be it known unto the king, that the Jews which came up from thee to us are come unto Jerusalem, building the [v]rebellious and the [x]bad city, and have ‡set up the walls thereof, and §joined the foundations.

13 Be it known now unto the king, that, [y]if this city be builded, and the walls set up again, then will they not [i]pay [z]toll, tribute, and custom,[5] and so thou shalt endamage the *revenue of the kings.

14 Now because we †have maintenance from the king's palace, [a]and it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour, therefore have we sent and certified the king;

15 That search may be made in the book of the records of thy fathers: so shalt thou find in the book of the records, and know that [b]this city is a rebellious city, and hurtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have ‡moved sedition §within the same of old time: [c]for which cause was this city destroyed.

16 We certify the king, that, if this city be builded again, and the walls thereof set up, by this means [d]thou shalt have no portion on this side the river.

17 ¶ Then sent the king an answer unto Rehum the chancellor, and to Shimshai the scribe, and to the rest of their ‖companions that dwell in Samaria, and unto the rest beyond the river, [e]Peace, and [f]at such a time.

18 The letter which ye sent unto us hath been plainly read before me.

19 And *I commanded, and [g]search hath been made, [h]and it is found that this city of old time hath †made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein.

20 There have been [i]mighty kings also over Jerusalem, which have ruled over all countries [k]beyond the river; [l]and toll, tribute, and custom, was paid unto them.

21 ‡Give ye now commandment to cause these men to cease, and that this city be not builded, until another commandment shall be given from me.

22 Take heed now that ye fail not to do this: [m]why should damage[6] grow to the hurt of the kings?

23 ¶ Now when the copy of king Artaxerxes' letter was read before [n]Rehum, and Shimshai the scribe, and their companions, [o]they went up in haste to Jerusalem unto the Jews, and made them to cease by §force and power.

inferior to that, perhaps in dimensions, certainly in magnificence and sumptuousness, "wept with a loud voice," ver. 12. If we date the captivity with the first, from the fourth of Jehoiakim, it was but fifty-two years since the temple was burnt: if from Jeconiah's captivity, it was but fifty-nine. So that many now alive might remember it standing; and a great mercy it was to the captives, that they had the lives of so many of their priests and Levites lengthened out, who could tell them what they themselves remembered of the glory of Jerusalem, to quicken them in their return. These lamented the disproportion between this temple and the former. And, 1. There was some reason for it; and if they turned their tears into the right channel, and bewailed the sin that was the cause of this melancholy change, they did well. Sin sullies the glory of any church or people, and, when they find themselves diminished and brought low, that must bear the blame. 2. Yet it was their infirmity to mingle those tears with the common joys, and so to cast a damp upon them. They "despised the day of small things;" and were unthankful for the good they enjoyed, because it was not so much as their ancestors had, though it was much more than they deserved. In the harmony of public joys, let not us be jarring strings. It was an aggravation of the discouragements they hereby gave to the people, that they were priests and Levites, who should have known and taught others how to be duly affected under various providences, and not to let the remembrance of former afflictions drown the sense of present mercies. This mixture of sorrow and joy, here, is a representation of this world; some are bathing in rivers of joy, while others are drowned in floods of tears. In heaven all are singing, and none sighing; in hell all are weeping and wailing, and none rejoicing; but here on earth we can scarcely "discern the shouts of joy from the noise of the weeping."—Henry.

CHAP. IV. SAMARITAN PLOT.—Ver. 1. The Cutheans, or Samaritans, who had been planted in the land of Israel by Esar-haddon, had perhaps encroached upon the countries belonging to the Jews; and doubtless they were envious of the favour shown them by the king of Persia: and thus they took occasion to become their determined enemies. But they were chiefly influenced by the enmity which the seed of the serpent bears to the true church of God; arising from contrariety of character, and hatred to the holiness of God, as displayed in his holy law, ordinances, truths, and people. And they might also fear, lest the establishment of the true worship of JEHOVAH should expose their spurious religion to disgrace. Ver. 2. "We seek," &c. The Samaritans professed to worship the God of Israel: yet they were not guided by his word, but by their own fancies or traditions, in the service which they rendered to him; and they worshipped, with him, their tutelar deities: so that their religion was a mixture of idolatry, superstition, and ignorance; far worse than it was when our Lord himself declared, "that they knew not what they worshipped." Ver. 3. The Samaritans were neither Israelites by birth, nor yet true proselytes; so that the law of God forbade all coalition with them: neither were they included in the decree of Cyrus. Probably the rulers of the Jews perceived that they only meant to insinuate themselves, in order to obtain pre-eminence, foment dissensions, introduce their corruptions, prejudice the minds of the people against their rulers, and in short to seize the temple, when built, for their own use; or to retard, injure, and put a stop to the work. It was, however, plain, that they did not mean to unite cordially with them, in the worship of the true God alone, according to his written word: and therefore nothing but mischief could have resulted from so unnatural an alliance. Ver. 4—6. This opposition of the Samaritans is supposed to have begun soon after the foundation of the temple was laid. During the remainder of the reign of Cyrus, for almost five years, however, they did not openly oppose a work which that prince had commanded: but they discouraged the people, and perhaps intercepted their materials for building; and by bribing counsellors to oppose their application to the ministers of Cyrus, for supplies or protection, they greatly obstructed the design. This would be more easily done, as Daniel, the powerful friend of the Jews, seems to have died about this time.

ITS TEMPORARY SUCCESS.—Ver. 13—16. David and Solomon had reigned over all the countries from the river Euphrates to the river of Egypt; but this was long before the commencement of the Babylonish, or Persian, monarchies. And after the death of Solomon, their successors had been confined within much narrower limits. The Samaritans, however, aimed to insinuate a jealousy into the mind of the king of Persia, that the Jews intended to claim, and seize upon, all those regions, and hold the whole, as independent on the kings of Persia; than which nothing could be more groundless and absurd. All their offence seems to have been, that they had prepared to defend themselves against their enemies, whilst acting under the authority of Cyrus. The Samaritans cloaked their slander and enmity, under the fair pretence of fidelity and gratitude: the ruling persons among them were maintained by revenues from the court of Persia; and it was not meet for them to see the king's dishonour, and the loss which would accrue to him, if the Jews were allowed to go on with their undertaking. Ver. 17—24. The king of Persia found by the records, that Jerusalem had been the seat of government for powerful princes many ages before; and that afterwards rebellion and sedition had been made in it: and as thus much was true in the letter of the Samaritans, full credit was given them for all that they advanced, concerning the progress and intentions of the Jews, and the consequences of their proceedings; though nothing could be more improbable, false, and

CHAP. V.

Zerubbabel and Jeshua set forward the building of the temple in the reign of Darius.

THEN the prophets, [a]Haggai the prophet, and [b]Zechariah the son of Iddo, prophesied unto[1] the Jews that were in Judah and Jerusalem [c]in the name of the God of Israel, even unto them.

2 Then [d]rose up Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and [e]Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and began to build the house of God which is at Jerusalem: and with them were [f]the prophets of God helping them.

3 ¶ At the same time came to them [g]Tatnai, governor[2] on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and their companions, and said thus unto them, [h]Who hath commanded you to build this house, and to make up this wall?

4 Then said we unto them after this manner, [i]What are the names of the men that *make this building?

5 But [k]the eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews, that they could not cause them to cease, till the matter came to Darius: and [l]then they returned answer by letter concerning this matter.

6 ¶ The [m]copy of the letter that Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and his companions the [n]Apharsachites, which were on this side the river, sent unto Darius the king:

7 They sent a letter unto him, †wherein was written thus; Unto Darius the king, [o]all peace.[3]

8 Be it known unto the king, that we went into [p]the province of Judea, to the house of [q]the great God, which is builded with ‡great stones, and timber is laid in the walls, and this work goeth fast on, and prospereth in their hands.

9 Then asked we those elders, and said unto them thus, [r]Who commanded you to build this house, and to make up these walls?

10 We [s]asked their names also, to certify thee, that we might write the names of the men that were the chief of them.

11 And thus they returned us answer, saying, [t]We are the servants of the God of heaven and earth, and build the house that was builded these many years ago, [u]which a great king of Israel builded and set up.

12 But [x]after that our fathers had provoked the God of heaven unto wrath, [y]he gave them [z]into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house, and carried the people away into Babylon.

13 But [a]in the first year of Cyrus the king of Babylon the same king Cyrus made a decree to build this house of God.

14 And [b]the vessels also of gold and silver of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took out of the temple that was in Jerusalem, and brought them into the temple of Babylon, those did Cyrus [c]the king take out of the temple of Babylon, and they were delivered unto one, whose name was [d]Sheshbazzar, [e]whom he had made §governor;

15 And said unto him, Take these vessels, go, carry them into the temple that is[4] in Jerusalem, and [f]let the house of God be builded in his place.

16 Then came the same [g]Sheshbazzar, and [h]laid the foundation of the house of God which is in Jerusalem: and since that time even until now hath it been in building, and yet [i]it is not finished.

17 Now therefore, if it seem good to the king, [k]let there be search made in the king's treasure house, which is there at Babylon, whether it be so, that [l]a decree was made of Cyrus the king to build this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send his pleasure to us concerning this matter.

CHAP. VI.

Darius' decree for advancing the building, 1. The temple is finished, 13. The feasts of the dedication, 16, and of the passover, 19.

THEN Darius the king made a decree, [a]and search was made in the house of the *rolls, where the treasures were †laid up in Babylon.

2 And there was found ‡at Achmeda, in the palace that is in the province of the Medes, a roll, and therein was a record thus written:

3 In [b]the first year of Cyrus the king, the same Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, [c]the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid; [d]the height thereof[1] threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits;

4 With [e]three rows of great stones,[2] and a row of new timber: and let [f]the expenses be given out of the king's house:

5 And also let [g]the golden and silver vessels of the house of God, [h]which Nebuchadnezzar took forth out of the temple which is at Jerusalem, and brought unto Babylon, be restored, and §brought again unto the temple which is at Jerusalem, every one to malicious! A commission therefore was sent back, in which the temple was not mentioned; (for though that created jealousy in the minds of the Samaritans, it was little regarded by the king of Persia:) but they were ordered "to cause them to cease;" this was sufficient for their purpose; and without delay they forcibly put a stop to the work. —The usurpation of Smerdis did not continue a whole year; so that their commission was soon vacated: but the Jews, being greatly intimidated, and not so zealous as they had been, the work ceased till the second year of Darius, who, having assisted in killing the usurper, was advanced to the throne in his stead.—Scott.

THE GOOD WORK RETARDED.—Ver. 24. The consequence was, that "the work of the house of God ceased" for a time, through the power and insolence of its enemies; and so, through the coldness and indifferency of its friends, it stood still till the second year of Darius Hystaspes, for to me it seems clear, by the thread of this sacred history, that it was that Darius, ver. 24. Though now a stop was put to it by the violence of the Samaritans, yet that, soon after, they might have gone on by connivance, if they had had a due affection to the work, appears by this, that, before they had that express warrant from the king for doing it, chap. vi., they were reproved by the prophets for not doing it, chap. v. 1, compared with Hag. i. 1, &c. If they had taken due care to inform Cambyses of the truth of this case, perhaps he had recalled his order; but, for aught I know, some of the builders were almost as willing it should cease as the adversaries themselves were. At some periods, the church has suffered more by the coldness of its friends than by the heat of its enemies; but both together commonly make church work slow work.—Henry.

CHAP. V. SELF-VINDICATION OF THE JEWISH ELDERS.—We may observe, 1. How fully the elders of the Jews gave the Samaritans an account of their proceedings. They, finding them both busy and prosperous, that all hands were at work to run up this building, and that it went fast on, put these questions to them: "By what authority do you these things, and who gave you that authority? Who set you to work? Have you that which will bear you out?" To this they answered, that they had sufficient warrant to do what they did; for, 2. "'We are the servants of the God of heaven and earth:' the God we worship is not a local deity, and therefore we cannot be charged with making a faction, or setting up a sect, in building this temple to his honour; but we may pay our homage to a God on whom the whole creation depends, and therefore ought to be protected and assisted by all, and hindered by none." It is the wisdom, as well as duty, of kings, to countenance the servants of the "God of heaven." 3. "We have a prescription to this house; it was built for the honour of our God, by Solomon, many ages ago. It is no novel invention of our own; we are but 'raising the foundations of many generations,'" Isa. v. 8, 12. 4. "It was to punish us for our sins that we were, for a time, put out of the possession of this house; not because the gods of the nations had prevailed against our God, but because we had provoked him, ver. 12, for which he delivered us and our temple into the hands of the king of Babylon, but never intended thereby to put a final period to our religion. We were only suspended for a time, not deprived for ever." 5. "We have the royal decree of Cyrus to justify us, and bear us out, in what we do. He not only permitted and allowed us, but charged and commanded us, to build this house, ver. 13, and to build it in its place, ver. 15, the same place where it had stood before." He ordered this, not only in compassion to the Jews, but in veneration of their God, saying, "He is the God." He also delivered the vessels of the temple to one whom he intrusted to see them restored to their ancient place and use, ver. 14. And they had these to show, in confirmation of what they alleged. 6. "The building was begun, according to this order, as soon as ever we were returned, so that we have not forfeited the benefit of the order, for want of pursuing it in time; still it has been in building, but because we have met with opposition, it is not finished." But observe, they mention not the falsehood and malice of the former governors, nor make any complaint of that, though they had cause enough; to teach us not to render bitterness for bitterness, nor the most just reproach for that which is most unjust, but to think it enough if we can obtain fair treatment for the future, without an invidious repetition of former injuries, ver. 16. This is the account they give of their proceedings; not asking what authority they had to examine them, or upbraiding them with their idolatry, and superstitions, and medley religion. Let us learn hence, with meekness and fear, to "give a reason of the hope that is in us," (1 Pet. iii. 15,) rightly to understand, and then readily to declare, what we do in God's service, and why we do it.—Henry.

CHAP. VI. DARIUS.—Ver. 6—12. Darius, in order to ingratiate himself with his subjects, showed respect to the memory of Cyrus in every thing; and this might induce him to be more favourable to the Jews, when the decree of Cyrus was produced. But he seems to have been deeply convinced, that the God of the Jews was the God of heaven, who ought to be worshipped according to the law of Moses. His steady intention that sacrifices should be offered at his expense at Jerusalem, "of sweet savours to the God of heaven;" that the people of God "might pray for him and his sons;" and the expression, "the God that hath caused his name to dwell there," ver. 11, show that he had been instructed in several important truths of religion, and had a conviction of his place, and place them in the house of God.

6 Now therefore, [1]Tatnai, governor beyond the river, Shethar-boznai, and [‖]your companions the Apharsachites, which are beyond the river, [k]be ye far from thence:

7 Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews, build this house of God in his place.

8 Moreover *I make a decree what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews for the building of this house of God: that of [l]the king's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river, forthwith expenses be given unto these men, that they be not [†]hindered.

9 And that which they have need of, both [m]young bullocks, and rams, and [n]lambs, for the burnt offerings of the God of heaven, [o]wheat, [p]salt, wine, and oil, according to the appointment of the priests which are at Jerusalem, let it be given them day by day without fail:

10 That they may offer sacrifices of [‡]sweet savours unto the God of heaven, and [q]pray for the life of the king, and of his sons.[3]

11 Also I have made a decree, that [r]whosoever shall alter this word, let [s]timber be pulled down from his house, and being set up, let him be [§]hanged thereon; and let [t]his house be made a dunghill for this.

12 And the God that hath [u]caused his name to dwell there [x]destroy all kings and people that shall put to their hand, to alter and to destroy this house of God which is at Jerusalem. [y]I Darius have made a decree; let it be done with [z]speed.

13 ¶ Then [a]Tatnai, governor on this side the river, Shethar-boznai, and their companions, according to that which Darius the king had sent, [b]so they did speedily.

14 And [c]the elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered [d]through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet and Zechariah the son of Iddo. And they builded, and [e]finished it, [f]according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the [‖]commandment of [g]Cyrus, and Darius, and [h]Artaxerxes [4] king of Persia.

15 And this house was finished on the third day of the month [i]Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king.

16 ¶ And [k]the children of Israel, the priests, and the Levites, and the rest of the *children of the captivity, kept [l]the dedication of this house of God [m]with joy.[5]

17 And [n]offered at the dedication of this house of God an hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs; and for [o]a sin offering for all Israel, twelve he goats, [p]according to the number of the tribes of Israel.

18 And they set [q]the priests in their divisions, and the Levites in their courses, for the service of God which is at Jerusalem; [†]as it is written in the book of Moses.

19 And [r]the children of the captivity [s]kept the passover upon the fourteenth day of the first month.

20 For the priests and the Levites were [t]purified together, all of them were pure, and [u]killed the passover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the priests, and for themselves.

21 And the children of Israel, which were come again out of captivity, and [x]all such as had separated themselves unto them[6] from the filthiness of the heathen of the land, to seek the LORD God of Israel, [y]did eat.

22 And kept [z]the feast of unleavened bread seven days with joy: for the LORD had made them joyful, and [a]turned the heart of [b]the king of Assyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God of Israel.

NOW after these things, in the reign of [a]Artaxerxes king of Persia, [b]Ezra the son of [c]Seraiah,[1] the son of Azariah, the son of [d]Hilkiah,

6 This Ezra went up from Babylon; and he was [i]a ready [k]scribe[2] in [l]the law of Moses, which the LORD God of Israel had given: and the king [m]granted him all his request, [n]according to the hand of the LORD his God upon him.

7 And there went up some of [o]the children of Israel, and of the priests, and [p]the Levites, and the [q]singers, and [r]the porters, and the [s]Nethinims, unto Jerusalem, in the seventh year of [t]Artaxerxes the king.

his dependence upon God, and entertained high and honourable thoughts of him, and that he regarded the prayers of his worshippers as efficacious. The account, indeed, given of this transaction, by the apocryphal Esdras, is absurd, and inconsistent with facts; for Zerubbabel had been long at Jerusalem, before Darius granted this decree. But probably some pious Jews had access to the king, who had so explained the matter, as to give him these favourable sentiments, and to dispose him to the service assigned him by Providence. He thought that the continuance of his life, and the prosperity of his family, might be secured by the prayers of the Jews: but he seems not to have considered his future and unspeakably more important interests; and it does not appear that his convictions had any abiding effect upon his own mind or conduct.—Knowing also the envy and malice of the adversaries of the Jews, Darius denounced a most dreadful punishment against those who should any more molest them: and he concluded his decree with a most remarkable and almost prophetical execration against all kings and people, who should attempt to alter or destroy the temple, after it was built. Thus the Samaritans, by opposing the Jews, most effectually served their interests; their governors, perceiving the king's inclinations, zealously concurred; and so the work was speedily completed.—Scott.

DEDICATION OF THE SECOND TEMPLE.—When the house was built, being designed only for sacred uses, now "they showed by an example how it should be used," which (says Bishop Patrick) is the proper sense of the word dedicate. They entered upon it with solemnity, and probably with a public declaration of the separating of it from common uses, and the surrender of it to the honour of God, to be employed in his worship. 1. The persons employed in this service were not only "the priests and Levites," who officiated, but "the children of Israel," some of each of the "twelve tribes," though Judah and Benjamin were the chief, and "the rest of the children of the captivity" or "transportation;" which intimates that there were many beside the children of Israel, of other nations, who transported themselves with them, and became proselytes to their religion; unless we read it, "even the remnant" of the "children of the captivity," and then we may suppose notice is hereby taken of their mean and afflicted condition, because the consideration of that helped to make them devout and serious in this and other religious exercises. A sad change! The "children of Israel" are become "children of the captivity," and there appears but a remnant of them, according to that prediction, Isa. vii. 3. Shear-jashub, The remnant shall return. 2. The sacrifices that were offered upon this occasion were "bullocks, rams, and lambs," ver. 17, for burnt-offerings and peace-offerings; not to be compared in number with what had been offered at the dedication of Solomon's temple; but, being according to their present ability, it was accepted; for, "after a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty, abounded to the riches of their liberality." 2 Cor. viii. 2. These hundreds were more to them than Solomon's thousands were to him. But beside these they offered twelve he-goats for sin-offerings, one for every tribe, to make atonement for their sins, which they looked upon as necessary, in order to the acceptance of their services. Thus by getting iniquity taken away, they would free themselves from that which had been the sting of their late troubles, and which, if not removed, would be a worm at the root of their present comforts. 3. This service was performed with joy; they were all glad to see the temple built, and the concerns of it in so good a posture. Let us learn to welcome holy ordinances with joy, and attend on them with pleasure; let us serve the Lord with gladness. Whatever we dedicate to God, let it be done with joy, that he will please to accept of it. 4. When they dedicated the house, they settled the household; small comfort could they have in the temple without the temple service, and therefore they "set the priests in their divisions," and "the Levites in their courses," ver. 18. Having set up the worship of God in this dedication, they took care to keep it up, and made "the book of Moses" their rule, to which they had an eye in this establishment. Though the temple service could not now be performed with so much pomp and plenty as formerly, because of their poverty, yet perhaps it was performed with as much purity and close adherence to the divine institution as ever, which was the true glory of it. No beauty like the beauty of holiness.—They also celebrated the passover in the newly erected temple. Now that they were newly delivered out of their bondage in Babylon, it was seasonable to commemorate their deliverance out of their bondage in Egypt. Fresh mercies should put us in mind of former mercies. We may suppose that they had kept the passover, after a sort, every year since their return, for they had an altar and a tabernacle. But they were liable to frequent disturbances from their enemies, were straitened for room, and had not conveniences about them, so that they could not do it with due solemnity till the temple was built; and now they made a joyful festival of it, it falling out in the next month after the temple was finished and dedicated, ver. 19.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. EZRA.—Here is, 1. Ezra's pedigree. He was one of the sons of Aaron, a priest; him God chose to be an instrument of good to Israel, that he might put honour upon the priesthood, the glory of which had been much eclipsed by the captivity. He is said to be "the son of Seraiah," that Seraiah, as is supposed, whom the king of Babylon put to death, when he sacked Jerusalem, 2 Kings xxv. 18, 21. If we take the shortest computation, it was seventy-five years since Seraiah died; many month [a]began he to go up from Babylon, and on the first day of the fifth month came he to Jerusalem, [u]according to the good hand of his God upon him.

10 For Ezra had [x]prepared his heart to seek [y]the law of the LORD, and [z]to do it, [a]and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments.

11 ¶ Now this is [b]the copy of the letter that the king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even [c]a scribe of the words of the commandments of the LORD, and of his statutes to Israel.

12 Artaxerxes, [d]king of kings,[3] unto Ezra the priest, [†]a scribe of the law of the God of heaven, perfect peace, [e]and at such a time.

13 [f]I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel, and of his priests and Levites, in my realm, which are [g]minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee.

14 Forasmuch as thou art sent [‡]of the king, and of his [h]seven counsellors, to enquire concerning Judah and Jerusalem, [i]according to the law of [k]thy God which is in thine hand,[4]

15 And to carry [l]the silver and gold, which the king and his counsellors have freely offered unto the God of Israel, [m]whose habitation is in Jerusalem,

16 And [n]all the silver and gold that thou canst find in all the province of Babylon, with the freewill offering of the people, and of the priests, [o]offering willingly for the house of their God which is in Jerusalem:

17 That thou mayest [p]buy speedily with this money bullocks, rams, lambs, with [q]their meat offerings and their drink offerings, and [r]offer them upon the altar of the house of your God which is in Jerusalem.

18 And [s]whatsoever shall seem good to thee, and to thy brethren, to do with the rest of the silver and the gold, that do [t]after the will of your God.

19 [u]The vessels also that are given thee for the service of the house of thy God, those deliver thou before [x]the God of Jerusalem.

20 And whatsoever more shall be needful for the house of thy God, which thou shalt have occasion to bestow, [y]bestow it out of the king's treasure house.

21 And I, even I [z]Artaxerxes the king, do make a decree to all the treasurers which are [a]beyond the river, that whatsoever [b]Ezra the priest, the scribe of the law of the God of heaven, shall require of you, it be done speedily, 22 Unto an hundred talents of silver,[5] and to an hundred [§]measures of wheat, and to an hundred [c]baths of wine, and to an hundred baths of oil, and [d]salt without prescribing how much.

23 ‖Whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven,[6] let it be diligently done for the house of the God of heaven: for [e]why should there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons?

24 Also we certify you, that [f]touching any of the priests and Levites, singers, porters, Nethinims, or ministers of this house of God, it shall not be lawful to impose toll, tribute, or custom, upon them.

25 And thou, Ezra, after [g]the wisdom of thy God, that is in thine hand, [h]set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people that are [i]beyond the river, all such as know the laws of thy God; and [k]teach ye them that know them not.

26 And [l]whosoever will not do [m]the law of thy God,[7] and the law of the king, let judgment be executed speedily upon him, [n]whether it be unto death, or to [*]banishment, or to confiscation of goods, or to imprisonment.

27 ¶ [o]Blessed be the LORD God of our fathers, which hath [p]put such a thing as this [q]in the king's heart, [r]to beautify the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem:

28 And hath [s]extended mercy unto me before the king, and [t]his counsellors, and before all the king's mighty princes. And I was strengthened [u]as the hand of the LORD my God was upon me, and I gathered together out of Israel chief men to go up with me.

reckon it much longer, and because they suppose Ezra called out, in the prime of his time, to public service, do therefore think that Seraiah was not his immediate parent, but his grandfather, or great-grandfather; but that he was the first eminent person that occurred in his genealogy upward, which is carried up here as high as Aaron, yet leaving out many for brevity sake, which may be supplied from 1 Chron. vi. 4, &c. He was a younger brother, or his father was Jozadak, the father of Jeshua, so that he was not high priest, but nearly allied to the high priest. 2. His character; though of the younger house, his personal qualifications made him very eminent. (1.) He was a man of great learning. A scribe, a "ready scribe in the law of Moses," ver. 6. He was very much conversant with the scriptures, especially the writings of Moses, had the words ready, and was well acquainted with the sense and meaning of them. It is to be feared that learning run low among the Jews in Babylon; but Ezra was instrumental to revive it. The Jews say that he collected and collated all the copies of the law he could find out, and published an accurate edition of it, with all the prophetical books, historical and poetical, that were given by divine inspiration, and so made up the canon of the Old Testament, with the addition of the prophecies and histories of his own time; if he was raised up of God, and qualified and inclined to do this, all generations have reason to call him "blessed," and to bless God for him. God sent to the Jews "prophets and scribes," Matt. xxiii. 34. Ezra went under the latter denomination; now that prophecy was about to cease, it was time to promote scripture knowledge, pursuant to the counsel of God, by the last of the prophets, Mal. iv. 4. "Remember the law of Moses." Gospel ministers are called "scribes instructed to the kingdom of heaven," Matt. xiii. 52. New Testament scribes. It was pity that such a worthy name as this should be worn as it was, in the degenerate ages of the Jewish church, by men who were professed enemies to Christ and his gospel, ("Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees,") who were learned in the letter of the law, but strangers to the spirit of it. (2.) He was a man of great piety and holy zeal, ver. 10. "He had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord," &c. 3. That which he chose for his study was "the law of the Lord. The Chaldeans, among whom he was born and bred, were famed for literature, especially the study of the stars, to which, being a studious man, we may suppose that Ezra was tempted to apply himself; but he got over the temptation, the law of his God was more to him than all the writings of their magicians and astrologers, which he knew enough of with good reason to despise them. 4. He "sought the law of the Lord," that is, he made it his business to inquire into it; searched the scriptures, and studied the knowledge of God, and his mind and will in the scriptures, which is to be found only by diligent seeking. 5. He made conscience of doing according to it; he set it before him as his rule, formed his sentiments and temper by it, and managed himself in his whole conversation according to it. This use we must make of our knowledge of the scriptures; for happy are we, if we do what we know of the will of God. 6. He set himself to teach Israel the statutes and judgments of that law. What he knew he was willing to communicate for the good of others.—Henry.

LETTER OF ARTAXERXES.—Ver. 11. The original letter is here inserted in the Chaldee language. Ver. 13. The Jews, who had not taken the benefit of the proclamation of Cyrus, seem afterwards to have been restrained from going to Jerusalem, till this decree of Artaxerxes again allowed them that liberty. Ver. 14. "Seven," &c. Seven princes of Persia having conspired against, and slain the usurper Smerdis, and thus made way for the family of Darius, which afterwards filled the throne: the Persian kings ever after had seven chief princes as their counsellors, who possessed peculiar privileges, and joined with them in all public transactions. Ver. 16. "Canst find," &c. That is, all the money which Ezra could obtain by the voluntary contributions of the people, whether Jews or Babylonians, chap. i. 4—6. Ver. 17, 18. It is remarkable that a heathen prince should lay no other restriction on Ezra and his brethren, in disposing of the treasures which they collected, except that they should be employed "after the will of their God." The whole commission implied a chartered right to the Jews of living according to their own laws. Ver. 19—22. "This was a wonderful large concession, that he should have whatsoever he desired; and—immediately." (Bp. Patrick.)—"Salt," ver. 12. As salt was offered with every sacrifice, Artaxerxes did not limit the quantity to be supplied, lest the stated sacrifices should be omitted. Ver. 23. "Oh! words to be written upon the palaces of kings in golden letters, and engraven on the minds of all the faithful with a pen of adamant!" Ver. 24—26. The king exempted all employed about the worship of God from paying any kind of tax; and as the Jews were far from affluent at that time, this was a seasonable encouragement. He also authorised Ezra, as governor over the Jews who lived west of the Euphrates, to constitute magistrates under him, as he saw good. He allowed him to provide for the instruction of the people in the law of God, and even to proselyte the Gentiles; and he likewise empowered him to punish all who proved refractory, according to their crimes.—David, Jehoshaphat, or Hezekiah, could scarcely have done more for the Jews than this heathen prince did; except as their examples, exhortations, and prayers would have concurred to render these external helps and regulations effectual.—Scott.

9 Of the sons of [1]Joab; Obadiah the son of Jehiel, and with him two hundred and eighteen males.

10 And of the sons of Shelomith; the son of Josiphiah, and with him an hundred and threescore males.

11 And of the sons of [m]Bebai; Zechariah the son of Bebai, and with him twenty and eight males.

12 And of the sons of [n]Azgad; Johanan *the son of Hakkatan, and with him an hundred and ten males.

13 And of the last sons of [o]Adonikam,[3] whose names are these, Eliphelet, Jeiel, and Shemaiah, and with them threescore males.

14 Of the sons also of [p]Bigvai; Uthai, and †Zabbud, and with them seventy males.

15 ¶ And I gathered them together to [q]the river that runneth to [r]Ahava;[4] and there ‡abode we in tents three days: and I viewed the people and the priests, [s]and found there none of the sons of Levi.[5]

16 Then sent I for Eliezer, for Ariel, for [t]Shemaiah, and for Elnathan, and for Jarib, and for Elnathan, and for [u]Nathan, and for [x]Zechariah, and for Meshullam, [y]chief men; also for Joiarib, and for Elnathan, [z]men of understanding.

17 And I sent them with commandment unto Iddo the chief at the place Casiphia, and §I told them what they should say unto Iddo, and to his brethren [a]the Nethinims, at the place Casiphia, that they should bring unto us [b]ministers for the house of our God.

18 And [c]by the good hand of our God upon us, they brought us [d]a man of understanding, of the sons of [e]Mahli, the son of Levi, the son of Israel; and [f]Sherebiah, with his sons and his brethren, eighteen;

19 And [g]Hashabiah, and with him Jeshaiah of the sons of [h]Merari, his brethren and their sons, twenty;

20 Also of the [i]Nethinims,[6] whom David and the princes had appointed for the service of the Levites, two hundred and twenty Nethinims: all of them were expressed by name.

21 ¶ Then [k]I proclaimed a fast there, at the river of Ahava, that we might [l]afflict ourselves before our God, [m]to seek of him a right way for us, and [n]for our little ones, and for all our substance.

22 For [o]I was ashamed[7] to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king, saying, [p]The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but [q]his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him.

23 So [r]we fasted, and [s]besought our God for this: [t]and he was entreated of us.

24 ¶ Then I separated twelve of the chief of the priests, [u]Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren with them,

25 And [x]weighed unto them [y]the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, even the offering of the house of our God, which the king, and his counsellors, and his lords, and all Israel there present, had offered.[8]

26 I even weighed unto their hand six hundred and fifty talents of silver, and silver vessels an hundred talents, and of gold an hundred talents.[9]

27 Also twenty basons of gold, of a thousand drams; and two vessels of ‖fine copper, *precious as gold.

28 And I said unto them, [z]Ye are holy unto the LORD; [a]the vessels are holy also; and the silver and the gold are a freewill offering unto the LORD God of your fathers.

29 [b]Watch ye, and keep them, [c]until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, at Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of the LORD.

30 So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, to bring them to Jerusalem unto [d]the house of our God.

31 ¶ Then we departed from [e]the river of Ahava on the twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem: and [f]the hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way.

32 And [g]we came to Jerusalem, and abode there three days.[10]

33 ¶ Now on the fourth day was the silver and the gold and the vessels [h]weighed in the house of our God by the hand of [i]Meremoth the son of [k]Uriah the priest; and with him was Eleazar the son of Phinehas; and with them was [l]Jozabad the son of Jeshua, and Noadiah the son of [m]Binnui, Levites;

34 By number and by weight of every one: and all the weight was written at that time.

35 Also the children of those that had been carried away, which were come out of the captivity, [n]offered burnt offerings unto the God of Israel, [o]twelve bullocks for all Israel, ninety and six rams, seventy and seven lambs, twelve he goats for a sin offering: all this was a burnt offering unto the LORD.

though extraordinary favours were granted, and the city, temple, and land were prepared for their reception, very few were willing to undertake the journey. Most of the Jews who remained in those countries were either settled to their minds, or were averse to labour and peril. They probably had synagogues, where they met for public worship and instructions; and they were sinfully indifferent about the temple and its service. But God, on this occasion also, raised up the spirits of a remnant to accompany his servant Ezra.—They are here numbered according to the chief of the fathers, to whose families they belonged. Some of the names of these families were mentioned before, as the descendants of those who stayed behind, seem to have taken this opportunity of following their brethren, chap. ii. 2—42. Thus we read of "the last sons of Adonikam," as no more of that family remained in the land of their captivity. The males only are mentioned; so that the number, including the women, was double, at least, what is here mentioned.—Scott.

FAST AT AHAVA.—Ver. 21. No doubt, Ezra had himself begged of God direction in this affair, from the first time he had it in his thoughts; but for public mercies public prayers must be made, that all who are to share in the comfort of it, may join in the request for it. Their fasting was, 1. To express their humiliation; this he declares to be the intent and meaning of it, "that we might afflict ourselves before our God" for our sins, and so be qualified for the pardon of them. When we are entering upon any new condition of life, our care should be to bring none of the guilt of the sins of our former condition into it. When we are in any imminent peril, let us be sure to make our peace with God, and then we are safe, nothing can do us any real hurt. 2. To excite their supplications; prayer was always joined with religious fasting: their errand to the throne of grace was "to seek of God the right way," that is, to commit themselves to the guidance of the divine providence, to put themselves under the divine protection, and to beg of God to guide and keep them in their journey, and bring them safely to their journey's end. They were strangers in the road, were to march through their enemies' countries, and had not a pillar of cloud and fire to lead them, as their fathers had; but they believed that the power and favour of God, and the ministration of his angels, would be to them instead of that, and hoped by prayer to engage this for them. Note, All our concerns about ourselves, our families, and our estates, it is our wisdom, and duty by prayer, to commit to God, and leave the care of with him, Phil. iv. 6.

EZRA'S STEWARDS.—Observe, 1. The persons to whom he delivered the offerings of the house of God. Twelve chief priests, and as many Levites, he appointed to this trust, ver. 24, 30, who were bound by their office to take care of the things of God, and were, in a particular manner, to have the benefit of these sacred treasures. Ezra tells them why he put those things into their hands, ver. 28, "Ye are holy unto the Lord," the "vessels are holy also;" and who so fit to take care of holy things as holy persons? Those that have the dignity and honour of the priesthood, must take along with it the trust and duty of it. The prophet is foretelling the return of God's people and minister's out of Babylon, when he gives the solemn charge, Isa. lii. 11, "Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord." 2. The great exactness with which he lodged this trust in their hands; "he weighed to them the silver, the gold, and the vessels," ver. 25, because he expected to have it from them again by weight. In all trusts, but especially sacred ones, we ought to be punctual, and preserve a right understanding on both sides. In Zerubbabel's time the vessels were delivered by number, here by weight, that all might be forthcoming, and it might easily appear if any were missing; to intimate that such as are intrusted with holy things, (as all the stewards of the mysteries of God are,) are concerned to remember, both in receiving their trust, and in discharging it, that they must shortly give a very particular account of it, that they may be faithful to it, and so give up their account with joy. 3. The charge he gave them with these treasures, ver. 29, "'Watch ye, and keep them,' that they be not lost, or embezzled, or mingled with the other articles; keep them together, keep them by themselves, keep them safe, till you weigh them in the temple, before the great men there;" hereby intimating how much it was their concern to be careful and faithful, and how much it would be their honour to be found so. Thus when St. Paul charges Timothy with the gospel-treasure, he bids him keep it "until the appearing of Jesus Christ," and his appearing before him to give account of his trust, when his fidelity would be his crown.

A PROSPEROUS JOURNEY.—We are now to attend Ezra to Jerusalem, a journey of about four months in all: but his multitude made his marches slow, and his stages short: now here we are told, 1. That his God was good, and he owns it; "The hand of our God was upon us," to animate us for our undertaking: to him they owed it, (1.) That they were preserved in their journey, and not all cut off; for there were enemies that "laid wait for them by the way," to do them a mischief, and, at least, like Amalek, to "smite the hindmost of them," but God protected them, ver. 31. Even the common perils of journies are such as oblige us to sanctify our going out with prayer, and our returns in peace with praise and thanksgiving: much more ought God to be thus eyed in such a dangerous expedition as this was. (2.) That they were brought in safety to their journey's end, ver. 32. Let them that have steadfastly set their faces toward the new Jerusalem, proceed and persevere to the end, "till they appear before God in Zion," and they shall find that he "who has begun the good work will perform

7 [x]Since the days of our fathers have we been in a great trespass unto this day; and [y]for our iniquities have we, our kings, and our priests, been delivered [z]into the hand of the kings of the lands, to the sword, to captivity, and to a spoil, and [a]to confusion of face, [b]as it is this day.

8 And now for a [‡]little space [c]grace hath been shewed from the LORD our God, to leave us [d]a remnant to escape, and to give us [§]a nail [e]in his holy place, that our God may [f]lighten our eyes, and give us a little [g]reviving in our bondage.

9 For [h]we were bondmen; [i]yet our God hath not forsaken us in our bondage, but hath extended mercy unto us [k]in the sight of the kings of Persia, to give us a reviving, [l]to set up the house of our God, and to ‖repair the desolations thereof, and to give us [m]a wall in Judah and in Jerusalem.[2]

10 And now, O our God, [n]what shall we say after this? for we have forsaken thy commandments,

11 Which thou hast commanded [*]by thy servants the prophets, saying, [o]The land, unto which ye go to possess it, is an unclean land with [p]the filthiness of the people of the lands, with their abominations, which have filled it from [†]one end to another with their uncleanness.

CHAP. X.

Shechaniah encourageth Ezra to reform the strange marriages, 1: Ezra, mourning, assembleth the people, 6. The people repent, &c., 9.

NOW [a]when Ezra had prayed, and [b]when he had confessed, [c]weeping and casting himself down [d]before the house of God, there assembled unto him out of Israel [e]a very great congregation of men and women and children: for the people wept [*]very sore.

2 And [f]Shechaniah the son of Jehiel, one of the sons of [g]Elam, answered and said unto Ezra, [h]We have trespassed against our God, and have taken strange wives of the people of the land: [i]yet now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing.

3 Now therefore [k]let us make a covenant[1] with our God to [†]put away all the wives, and such as are born of them, [l]according to the counsel of my lord, and [m]of those that tremble [n]at the commandment of our God; and [o]let it be done according to the law.

5 Then [t]arose Ezra, and [u]made the chief priests, the Levites, and all Israel, to swear that they should do according to this word. And they sware.

6 ¶ Then Ezra rose up from before the house of God, and went into [x]the chamber of [y]Johanan the son of Eliashib: and when he came thither,[2] [z]he did eat no bread, nor drink water: for [a]he mourned because of the transgression of them that had been carried away.

it." 2. That his treasurers were faithful: when they were come to Jerusalem, they were impatient to be discharged of their trust, and therefore applied themselves to the great men of the temple, who received it from them, and gave them an acquittance in full, ver. 33, 34. It is a great ease to one's mind to be discharged from a trust; and a great honour to one's name, to be able to make it appear that it has been faithfully discharged. 3. That his companions were devout; as soon as they came to be near the altar, they thought themselves obliged to offer sacrifice whatever they had done in Babylon, ver. 35. That will be dispensed with when we want opportunity, which, when the door is opened again, will be expected from us.—Henry.

CHAP. IX., EZRA'S DEVOUT PENITENCE.—Speaking of Sin, 1. He speaks as one much ashamed. With this he begins, ver. 6, "O my God, I am ashamed and blush, O my God," (so the words are placed,) "to lift up my face unto thee." Note, (1.) Sin is a shameful thing; as soon as ever our first parents had eaten forbidden fruit, they were ashamed of themselves. (2.) Holy shame is as necessary an ingredient in true and ingenuous repentance as holy sorrow. (3.) The sins of others should be our shame, and we should blush for those who do not blush for themselves. We may well be ashamed that we are any thing related to those who are so ungrateful to God, and unwise for themselves. This is "clearing ourselves," 2 Cor. vii. 11. (4.) Penitent sinners never see so much reason to blush and be ashamed, as when they come to "lift up their faces before God." A natural sense of our own honour, which we have injured, will make us ashamed, when we have done a wrong thing, to look men in the face; but a gracious concern for God's honour will make us much more ashamed to look him in the face. The publican, when he went into the temple to pray, hung down his head more than ever, as one ashamed, Luke xviii. 13. (5.) An eye to God as our God, will be of great use to us in the exercise of repentance. Ezra begins, "O my God;" and again, in the same breath, "my God." The consideration of our covenant relation to God, as ours, will help to humble us, and break our hearts for sin, that we should violate both his precepts to us, and our promises to him; it will also encourage us to hope for pardon, upon repentance. He is my God, notwithstanding this, and every transgression in the covenant does not throw us out of covenant. 2. He speaks as one much amazed, ver. 10. "'What shall we say after this?' For my part, I know not what to say: if God do not help us, we are undone." The discoveries of guilt excite amazement; the more we think of sin, the worse it looks; the difficulty of the case excites amazement. How shall we recover? Which way shall we make our peace with God? (1.) True penitents are [illegible] to duty? Shall we say, We have "not sinned," or "God will not require it?" If we do, "we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." Shall we say, Have patience with us, and we will pay thee all, with "thousands of rams, or our first-born, for our transgression?" God will not thus be mocked, he knows we are insolvent. Shall we say, "There is no hope," and "let come on us what will?" That is to make bad worse. (2.) True penitents will consider what to say, and should, as Ezra, beg of God to teach them; What shall we say? Say, "I have sinned; I have done foolishly; God be merciful to me a sinner;" and the like. See Hos. xiv. 2. 3. He speaks as one much afraid, ver. 13, 14. "After all the judgments that are come upon us, to reclaim us from sin, and all the deliverances that have been wrought for us, to engage us to God and duty, if we should again break God's commandments, by joining in affinity with the children of disobedience, and learning their ways, what else could we expect, but that God should be 'angry with us till he had consumed us,' and there should not be so much as a remnant left, nor any to escape the destruction?" There is not a surer or sadder presage of ruin to any people, than revolting to sin, to the same sins again, after great judgments, and great deliverances. They that will be wrought upon neither by the one nor by the other, are fit to be rejected, as reprobate silver, for the "founder melteth in vain." 4. He speaks as one much assured of the righteousness of God, and resolved to acquiesce in that, and to leave the matter with him, whose judgment is "according to truth," ver. 15, "'Thou art righteous,' wise, just, and good; thou wilt neither do us wrong, nor be hard upon us, and therefore, behold, 'we are before thee,' we lie at thy feet, waiting our doom; 'we cannot stand before thee,' insisting upon any righteousness of our own, having no plea to support us or bring us off, and therefore we 'fall down' before thee, 'in our trespass,' and cast ourselves on thy mercy; 'do unto us whatsoever seemeth good unto thee,' Judg. x. 15. We have nothing to say, nothing to do, but to 'make supplication to our Judge,'" Job ix. 15. Thus does this good man lay his grief before God, and then leave it with him.—Henry.

CHAP. X. MIXED MARRIAGES.—Ver. 2. Shechaniah is not mentioned among those who were guilty: but his father and several of his relations are. He spoke, however, as one of the offending community, though not personally criminal: and he would not be deterred from decisive measures, by regard to his nearest relatives.—Probably he observed that Ezra was too desponding, and ready to conclude that reformation would be impracticable, where so many of the chief persons were concerned. But he perceived very favourable symptoms in the case. The people were generally convinced of their guilt and danger; and the great [illegible] general opinion of the [illegible]

7 And [b]they made proclamation throughout Judah and Jerusalem unto all the children of the captivity, that they should gather themselves together unto Jerusalem;

8 And [c]that whosoever would not come within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be [†]forfeited, and [d]himself separated from the congregation of those that had been carried away.

9 ¶ Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin gathered themselves together unto Jerusalem within three days. It was [e]the ninth month, and the twentieth day of the month; and all the people sat in the street of the house of God, [f]trembling[3] because of this matter, and for the [*]great rain.

10 And Ezra the priest stood up, and said unto them, Ye have transgressed, and have [†]taken strange wives, [g]to increase the trespass of Israel.

11 Now therefore [h]make confession unto the LORD God of your fathers, and [i]do his pleasure; and [k]separate yourselves from the people of the land, [l]and from the strange wives.

12 Then all the congregation answered and said with a loud voice, As thou hast said, [m]so must we do.

13 But [n]the people are many, and it is a time of much rain, and we are not able to stand without, neither is this a work of one day or two: for [‡]we are many that have transgressed in this thing.

14 Let now [o]our rulers of all the congregation stand, and let all them which have taken strange wives in our cities come at appointed times, and with them the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until [p]the fierce wrath of our God [§]for this matter be turned from us.

15 ¶ Only Jonathan the son of Asahel and Jahaziah the son of Tikvah [‖]were employed about this matter:[4] and [q]Meshullam and [r]Shabbethai the Levite helped them.

16 And the children of the captivity did so. And Ezra the priest, with certain chief of the fathers, after the house of their fathers, and all of them by their names, were separated, and sat down in the first day of the tenth month [s]to examine the matter.

17 And they made an end with all the men that had taken strange wives, by the first day of the first month.[5]

18 ¶ And among [t]the sons of the priests there were found that had taken strange wives: namely, of the sons of [u]Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren; [x]Maaseiah, and Eliezer, and Jarib, and Gedaliah.

19 And they [y]gave their hands[6] that they would put away their wives; and being guilty, they offered [z]a ram of the flock for their trespass.

20 And of the sons of [b]Immer;[7] Hanani, and Zebadiah.

25 Moreover of Israel:[8] of the sons of [g]Parosh; Ramaiah, and Jeziah, and Malchiah, and Miamin, and Eleazar, and Malchijah, and Benaiah.

26 And of the sons of [h]Elam; Mattaniah, Zechariah, and [i]Jehiel, and Abdi, and Jeremoth, and Eliah.

27 And of the sons of [k]Zattu; Elioenai, Eliashib, Mattaniah, and Jeremoth, and Zabad, and Aziza.

28 Of the sons also of [l]Bebai; Jehohanan, Hananiah, Zabbai, and Athlai.

29 And of the sons of [m]Bani; Meshullam, [n]Malluch, and Adaiah, Jashub, and Sheal, and Ramoth.

30 And of the sons of [o]Pahath-moab; Adna, and Chelal, Benaiah, Maaseiah, Mattaniah, Bezaleel, and Binnui, and Manasseh.

32 Benjamin, Malluch, and Shemariah.

33 Of the sons of [r]Hashum; Mattenai, Mattathah, Zabad, Eliphelet, Jeremai, Manasseh, and Shimei.

42 Shallum, Amariah, and Joseph.

43 Of the sons of [t]Nebo; Jeiel, Mattithiah, Zabad, Zebina, Jadau, and Joel, Benaiah.

44 All these had taken [u]strange wives:[9] and some of them had wives by whom they had children.

in Israel concerning this thing:" an effectual reform might be made; and then the Lord would turn from his fierce wrath against them, as "he delighted in mercy." Ver. 3. "To put away," &c. This is not anywhere expressly commanded in the law; yet the spirit of the precept seemed to require it. The prohibition of marriages with idolaters was given to prevent temptations to idolatry; and retaining an idolatrous wife formed a continual temptation. Divorces were permitted to the Israelites "by the judicial law," to prevent worse consequences: but the seducing of a man to idolatry was the worst consequence imaginable. This measure would also tend to prevent the contracting of such marriages in future. It is probable, however, that none were put away but such as continued idolaters; and that they were provided for out of the estates of those who divorced them. It does not appear whether the children were generally sent away with their mothers or not; but doubtless such were provided for, as were not admitted into the congregation of the Lord.—Under the New Testament, the marriages of believers with ungodly persons are evidently sinful, and of very bad consequence: yet, when contracted, they must not be dissolved. The partition-wall between Jews and Gentiles is broken down; such matters are determined by the municipal laws of every country; and divorces, except for adultery, are expressly disallowed. Ver. 4, 5. Shechaniah's mind, being more composed than Ezra's, perceived that it was a favourable crisis for action: so that he exhorted him, instead of indulging in grief, to arise and exercise his authority, according to the commission of Artaxerxes; and assured him of the hearty assistance of himself and others in the arduous attempt. Thus encouraged, Ezra entertained hopes of remedying the evil, and immediately engaged all present, by a solemn oath, to concur in this design.—Scott.

NATIONAL REFORMATION.—We have here an account of the proceedings upon the resolutions lately taken up concerning the strange wives; no time was lost; they struck when the iron was hot, and soon set the wheels of reformation a-going. 1. Ezra went to the council-chamber, where, it is probable, the priests used to meet upon public business. And "till he came thither," (so Bishop Patrick thinks it should be read,) till he saw something done, and more likely to be done, for the redress of this grievance, he did "neither eat nor drink," but continued mourning. Sorrow for sin should be abiding sorrow; be sure to let it continue till the sin be put away. 2. He sent orders to all the children of the captivity to attend him at Jerusalem within "three days," ver. 7, 8, and being authorized by the king to enforce his orders, with penalties annexed, chap. vii. 26, he threatened, that whosoever refused to obey the summons should forfeit his estate, and be outlawed. The sheets of him that would not attend on this religious meeting should be, that his substance should, in his stead, be ever after appropriated

BOOK OF NEHEMIAH.

THIS book resumes the history of the Jews, about twelve years after the close of the book of Ezra, and contains the latest canonical records of the nation till the days of Christ—reaching down to about a hundred and ten years after the captivity. It was evidently written by Nehemiah himself, who throughout speaks in the first person; and probably it was received among the canonical Scriptures by Ezra and his assistants or successors. Nehemiah, a Jew, the cupbearer to Artaxerxes, king of Persia, hearing of the distressed state of his countrymen, in great affliction petitions him for leave to go up to Jerusalem, as governor, with a commission to rebuild the walls, and to provide for the security and the prosperity of his people. Having obtained his request, he executes his commission for twelve years with great success; after which he returns to Artaxerxes, but at length comes back to Jerusalem, and employs various measures to promote the prosperity of the Jews, and the reformation of abuses. The frequent devout ejaculations with which the narrative is interrupted are peculiar to this pious writer; and his zeal, activity, and disinterestedness are well worthy of imitation, especially by those employed in arduous undertakings for the good of the church or the community. This book has many internal proofs of Divine inspiration, and always has been considered by the Jews as a part of their sacred Scriptures, and indeed a continuation of the Book of Ezra. It does not, however, seem to contain any prophecies, nor is it explicitly referred to in the New Testament.

CHAP. I.

Nehemiah, understanding by Hanani the misery of Jerusalem, mourneth, fasteth, and prayeth, 1; his prayer, 5.

THE words of [a]Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah. And it came to pass [b]in the month Chisleu, [c]in the twentieth year, as I was [d]in Shushan the palace,

2 That [e]Hanani, one of my brothren, came, he and certain men of Judah; and [f]I asked them concerning the Jews [g]that had escaped, which were left of the captivity, and concerning Jerusalem.

3 And they said unto me, The remnant that are left of the captivity, there in [h]the province, are [i]in great affliction and [k]reproach: [i]the wall of Jerusalem[1] also is broken down, and the gates thereof are burned with fire.

4 And it came to pass, when I heard these words, that [m]I sat down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted, and prayed before [n]the God of heaven,

5 ¶ And said, I beseech thee, O LORD God of heaven, [o]the great and terrible God, that [p]keepeth covenant and mercy for them that love him, and observe his commandments:

6 Let [q]thine ear now be attentive, and thine eyes open, that thou mayest hear the prayer of thy servant, which I pray before thee now, [r]day and night, for the children of Israel thy servants, and [s]confess the sins of the children of Israel, which we have sinned against thee: [t]both I and my father's house have sinned.

7 We have [u]dealt very [x]corruptly against thee, and have not kept [y]the commandments, nor the statutes, nor the judgments, which [z]thou commandedst thy servant Moses.

8 [a]Remember, I beseech thee, the word that thou[2] commandedst thy servant Moses, saying, [b]If ye transgress, I will scatter you abroad among the nations:

CHAP. I. NEHEMIAH.—What tribe Nehemiah was of, does nowhere appear; but if it be true, (which we are told by the author of the Maccabees, Book 2, chap. i. 18.) that he offered sacrifice, we must conclude him to be a priest. We are here told that he was in Shushan, the palace, or royal city, of the king of Persia, where the court was ordinarily kept, ver. 1, that he was the king's cup-bearer. Kings and great men probably looked upon it as a piece of state to be attended by those of other nations. By this place at court, 1. He would be the better qualified for the service of his country, in that post for which God had designed him; as Moses was the fitter to govern, for being bred up in Pharaoh's court, and David in Saul's. 2. He would have the fairer opportunity of serving his country by his interest in the king and those about him. Observe, He is not forward to tell us what great preferment he had at court; it is not till the end of the chapter, that he tells us he was "the king's cup-bearer," (a place of great trust, as well as of honour and profit,) when he could not avoid the mentioning of it, because of the following story; but at first he only says, "I was in Shushan the palace;" whence we may learn to be humble and modest, and slow to speak of our own advancements. But, in the providences of God concerning him, we may observe to our comfort, (1.) That when God has work to do, he will never want instruments to do it with. (2.) That those whom God designs to employ in his service, he will find out proper ways both to fit for it, and to call to it. (3.) That God has his remnant in all places; we read of Obadiah in the house of Ahab, saints in Cæsar's household, and a devout Nehemiah in Shushan the palace. (4.) That God can make the courts of princes sometimes nurseries, and sometimes sanctuaries, to the friends and patrons of the church's cause. Now here we have Nehemiah's tender and compassionate inquiry concerning the state of the Jews in their own land, ver. 2. It happened that a friend and relation of his came to the court with some other company, by whom he had an opportunity of informing himself fully how it went with the children of the captivity, and what posture Jerusalem, the beloved city, was in. Nehemiah lived at ease, in honour and fulness himself, but cannot forget that he is an Israelite, nor shake off the thoughts of his brethren in distress, but, in spirit, (like Moses. Acts vii. 23.) "visits them," and "looks upon their burthens." As distance of place did not alienate his affections from them, (though they were out of sight, yet not out of mind,) so neither did the dignity to which he was advanced.—Henry.

HIS PRAYER.—Ver. 5—11. In the prayer here recorded, which probably formed the substance of Nehemiah's constant supplications day and night, he adored the greatness and faithfulness of God, and his covenanted mercy to his people; thus acknowledging that if they had not provoked him to anger, by their numerous and heinous crimes; their enemies, instead of triumphing over them, would have experienced his terrible power fighting for them. But, alas! Nehemiah was constrained to confess, that both the people in general, and he himself, and his father's house, were deeply guilty, and by dealing very corruptly, (that is, perversely, ungratefully, and deceitfully,) had given the Lord just cause to leave them in the hands of their adversaries. Yet, while he justified God in the miseries of his people, he expressed a confidence in his mercies. The nation of Israel alone professed to worship and serve the God of heaven: he had forwarned them, that if they transgressed, he would scatter them abroad; but he had also repeatedly and expressly promised, that if they returned to him, and obeyed his commandments, he would gather them again to their own land, and to his chosen city. Now many of those who had gone up to Jerusalem were turned to the Lord, and "desired to fear his name:" and it might be hoped that numbers even of those who remained in other countries, were truly penitent, and uprightly obedient; among whom Nehemiah was conscious he was one. And as God had already done great things, both in former ages and lately in redeeming and delivering his people from their enemies; he trusted that he would compassionately hear his prayer, and the prayers of all those who were pleading with him in that behalf.—The particular request which he made on this occasion is remarkable; he prayed that God "would grant him mercy in the sight of this man." The mighty monarch of the Persian empire would be addressed by his flatterers as if he were more than man; yet Nehemiah knew, that, in the sight of God, he was upon a level with his meanest subjects.—Scott.

CHAP. II. NEHEMIAH'S INTERVIEW WITH THE KING.—Ver. 1, 2. About four months passed from the time that Nehemiah made his inquiry, before he presented his petition to the king: for Nisan answers to part of March and part of April. It is probable that his turn of waiting on the king did not arrive before this; and he could not come into his presence uncalled, except at the hazard of his life; but he could approach the King of heaven at any time, and doubtless all the while continued instant in prayer. Yet, when at length he attended on his office, his inward concern was visible in his countenance, (which no doubt had before been very open and cheerful;) so that the king observed it; and not perceiving that he was ill, seemed ready to impute his melancholy to discontent or disaffection. Indeed, the words rendered "sad," and "sorrow of heart," might be rendered evil, and wickedness of heart. This excited great alarm in Nehemiah; and, in fact, these arbitrary monarchs were frightful [illegible] in proportion to their tyranny. Last patient, though he stood with [illegible] the cup-bearers to drink before them out of the same cup; and some

6 And the king said unto me, (the *queen also[s] sitting by him,) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? [m]So it pleased the king to send me; and [n]I set him a time.

7 Moreover I said unto the king, If it please the king, [o]let letters be given me to the governors beyond the river, [p]that they may convey me over till I come into Judah;

8 And a letter unto Asaph the keeper of the king's forest,[4] that he may give me timber to make beams for the gates of the palace which appertained to the house, and [q]for the wall of the city, and [r]for the house that I shall enter into. And [s]the king granted me, according to the good hand of my God upon me.

9 ¶ Then I came [t]to the governors beyond the river, and gave them the king's letters. Now [u]the king had sent captains of the army and horsemen with me.

10 When [x]Sanballat the [y]Horonite,[5] and Tobiah [z]the servant, [a]the Ammonite, heard of it, [b]it grieved them exceedingly that [c]there was come a man to seek the welfare of the children of Israel.

11 So [d]I came to Jerusalem, and was there three days.

12 ¶ And [e]I arose in the night, I and some few men with me; [f]neither told I any man what [g]my God had put in my heart to do at Jerusalem: neither was there any beast with me, save the beast that I rode upon.

13 And I went out by night by [h]the gate of the valley, even before the dragon well, and to [i]the dung port, and viewed [k]the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire.

14 Then I went on to [l]the gate of the fountain,[6] and to the king's pool: but there was no place for the beast that was under me to pass.

15 Then went I up in the night by [m]the brook, and viewed the wall, and turned back, and entered by [n]the gate of the valley, and so returned.

16 And [o]the rulers knew not whither I went, or what I did; neither had I as yet told it to the Jews, nor to the priests, nor to the nobles, nor to the rulers, nor to the rest that did the work.

17 ¶ Then said I unto them, [p]Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire: [q]come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more [r]a reproach.

18 Then I told them of [s]the hand of my God which was good upon me; as also the king's words that he had spoken unto me. And they said, Let us rise up and build. [t]So they strengthened their hands for this good work.

19 But when [u]Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, and [x]Geshem the Arabian, heard it, [y]they laughed us to scorn, and despised us, and said, What is this thing that ye do? [z]will ye rebel against the king?

20 Then answered I them, and said unto them, [a]the God of heaven,[7] he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build: but [b]ye have no portion, nor right, nor [c]memorial, in Jerusalem.

CHAP. III.

Eliashib the high priest, and the other names and order of them that builded the wall.

THEN [a]Eliashib the high priest[1] rose up with his brethren the priests, and they builded [b]the sheep gate; they [c]sanctified it, and set up the doors of it; even unto the [d]tower of Meah they sanctified it, unto the tower of Hananeel.

2 And *next unto him builded [e]the men of Jericho. And next to them builded [f]Zaccur the son of Imri.

3 But [g]the fish gate did the sons of Hassenaah build, who also laid [h]the beams thereof, and set up [i]the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

4 And next unto them repaired [k]Meremoth the son of [l]Urijah, the son of Koz. And next unto them repaired [m]Meshullam the son of Berechiah, the son of Meshezabeel. And next unto them repaired Zadok the son of Baana.

5 And next unto them [n]the Tekoites[2] repaired; but [o]their nobles [p]put not their necks to the work of their Lord.

6 Moreover [q]the old gate repaired Jehoiada the son of Paseah, and Meshullam the son of Besodeiah; they laid the beams thereof, and set up the doors thereof, and the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

7 And next unto them repaired Melatiah [r]the Gibeonite, and Jadon the Meronothite, the men of Gibeon, and of [s]Mizpah, unto [t]the throne of the governor on this side the river.

8 Next unto him repaired Uzziel the son of Harhaiah, of [u]the goldsmiths. Next unto him also repaired Hananiah the son of one [x]of the apothecaries,[3] and they [y]fortified Jerusalem unto the [z]broad wall.

9 And next unto them repaired Rephaiah the son of Hur, [a]the ruler of the half part of Jerusalem.

10 And next unto them repaired Jedaiah the son of Harumaph, even [b]over against his house. And next unto him repaired [c]Hattush the son of Hashabniah.

Nehemiah, being oppressed with grief, had forgotten to observe this custom. Had the least suspicion, however, been excited of criminal designs, the immediate torture or execution of Nehemiah might have been the consequence: for the Persian monarchs frequently, with little ceremony, thus treated those who had before been their chief favourites. He might also fear that he should fail of his purpose, as the king seemed displeased, and no favourable opportunity for his request was yet afforded. Ver. 3. Nehemiah, in answering the king, testified his cordial and loyal affection, by wishing the long continuance of his life and prosperity, in the customary manner. He perhaps meant the words likewise as a prayer for his salvation: but they were not generally understood in that sense. Thus "God save the king," as generally used, means no more than "Let the king live and prosper:" but the words, when duly attended to, contain a solemn prayer to God, for his temporal preservation, and his eternal salvation.—Nehemiah said nothing to Artaxerxes concerning the religion of the Jews; perhaps, he saw that he was more regardless in that respect than formerly; or he might suppose that the king would not attend to that subject so candidly from a young courtier, as he had done from an aged priest and learned scribe of the law of God; and some think that he was induced to waive it, because the company present were unfavourable. He therefore represented the afflicted defenceless state of that city, where his ancestors lay interred; and how could he but be grieved that their sepulchres should be so disgraced, or how avoid sympathising with his distressed countrymen?—Arguments of this kind the men of the world well understand; but, alas! they little feel the force of those which are infinitely more important.—Scott.

SAMARITAN ENMITY AGAIN.—Let us now see how Nehemiah was received by those that wished ill to the Jews; whom God and his Israel blessed, they cursed. 1. When he did but show his face, it vexed them, ver. 10. Sanballat and Tobiah, two of the Samaritans, but, by birth, the former a Moabite, the latter an Ammonite, when they saw one come armed with a commission from the king to do service to Israel, "were grieved exceedingly," that all their little paltry arts to weaken Israel were thus baffled and frustrated by a fair, and noble, and generous project to strengthen them. Nothing is a greater vexation to the enemies of good people, who have misrepresented them to princes as turbulent, and factious, and not fit to live, than to see them stand right in the opinion of their rulers, their innocency cleared, and their reproach rolled away, and [illegible] thought not only fit to live, but fit to be trusted. When they saw a [illegible] in this manner, who [illegible] sought the welfare of the children of [illegible] shall see it, and be grieved," 2. [illegible] him, but in vain, ver. 19, 20.

(1.) See here with what little reason the enemies discouraged them. They represented the undertaking as a silly thing; they "laughed us to scorn," and "despised us" as foolish builders, that could not finish what we began. They represented the undertaking also as a wicked thing, no better than treason: "Will ye rebel against the king?" Because this was the old invidious charge, though now they had a commission from the king, and were taken under his protection, yet still they must be called rebels. (2.) See also with what good reason they slighted these discouragements. They bear up themselves with this, that they were the "servants of the God of heaven," the only true and living God, that they were acting for him in what they did, and that therefore he would bear them out, and prosper them, though the heathen raged, Ps. ii. 1.—Henry.

CHAP. III. REBUILDING OF THE WALL OF JERUSALEM.—Ver. 1. Several things are observable in the account here given of the building of the wall about Jerusalem. 1. That Eliashib the priest, with his brethren the priests, led the van in this troop of builders, Ministers should be first and foremost in every good work, for their office obliges them to teach and quicken by their example, as well as by their doctrine. If there be labour in it, who so fit as they to work? If danger, who so fit as they to venture? The dignity of the high priest was very great, and obliged him to signalize himself in this service. The priests repaired the sheepgate, so called, because through it the sheep were brought that were to be sacrificed in the temple, and therefore the priests undertook the repair of it, whose "inheritance the offerings of the Lord made by fire were." And of this gate only it is said that "they sanctified it" with the word and prayer, and perhaps with sacrifices; either, (1.) Because it led to the temple; or (2.) Because with this the building of the wall began, and it is probable (though they were at work in all parts of the wall at the same time) that this was first finished, and therefore at this gate they solemnly committed their city, and the walls of it, to the divine protection; or, (3.) Because the priests were the builders of it, and it becomes ministers, above others, being themselves, in a peculiar manner, sanctified to God, to sanctify to him all their performances, and to do even their common actions "after a godly sort." 2. That the undertakers were very many, who each took their share, some more and some less, in this work, according as their ability was. Note, What is to be done for the public good, every one should assist in, and further, to the utmost of his [illegible] power. United force will conquer that which no individual dares venture on. Many hands will make light work. 3. That many were active in this work, who were [illegible] themselves inhabitants of Jerusalem, and therefore concerned [illegible] and not [illegible]

28 From above [a]the horse gate repaired the priests, [b]every one over against his house.

29 After them repaired Zadok [c]the son of Immer over against his house. After him repaired also Shemaiah the son of [d]Shechaniah, the keeper of [e]the east gate.

30 After him repaired Hananiah the son of Shelemiah, and Hanun the sixth son of Zalaph, [f]another piece. After him repaired [g]Meshullam the son of Berechiah over against his chamber.

31 After him repaired Malchiah [h]the goldsmith's son, unto the place of the Nethinims, and of the merchants, over against the gate Miphkad, and to the [†]going up of the corner.

32 And between the going up of the corner unto [i]the sheep gate[8] repaired [k]the goldsmiths and the merchants.

While the enemies scoff, Nehemiah prayeth to God, 1: he setteth a watch, 7.

BUT it came to pass, that when [a]Sanballat heard that we builded the wall, he was wroth, and took great indignation, and [b]mocked the Jews.

2 And he spake before his brethren and [c]the army of Samaria, and said, What do these [d]feeble Jews? will they [*]fortify themselves? [e]will they sacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they [f]revive the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish which are burned?

3 Now [g]Tobiah the Ammonite was by him, and he said, Even that which they build, if a fox go up,[1] he shall even break down their stone wall.

4 [h]Hear, O our God; for we are [†]despised: and [i]turn their reproach upon their own head, and give them for a prey in the land of captivity:

5 And [k]cover not their iniquity, and let not [l]their sin be blotted out from before thee: for they have provoked thee to anger [m]before the builders.

6 So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof: for the people [n]had a mind to work.

7 ¶ But it came to pass, that when [o]Sanballat, and Tobiah, and the Arabians, and [p]the Ammonites, and [q]the Ashdodites, [r]heard first, ver. 2, the men of Gibeon and Mizpeh, ver. 7, and Zanoah, ver. 13. 4. That several rulers, both of Jerusalem and of other cities, were active in this work, thinking themselves bound in honour to do the utmost that their wealth and power enabled them to do for the furtherance of this good work. 5. Here is a just reproach fastened upon the nobles of Tekoa, that they "put not their necks to the work of their Lord," ver. 5, that is, they would not come under the yoke of an obligation to this service; as if the dignity and liberty of their peerage were their discharge from serving God, and doing good, which are indeed the highest honour and the truest freedom. Let not nobles think any thing below them by which they may advance the interest of their country; for what else is their nobility good for, but that it puts them in a higher and larger sphere of usefulness than that in which inferior persons move? 6. Two persons joined in repairing "the old gate," ver. 6, and so were co-founders, and shared the honour of it between them. The good work which we cannot compass ourselves, we must be thankful to those that will go partners with us in. 7. Several good honest tradesmen, as well as priests and rulers, were active in this work, "goldsmiths, apothecaries, merchants," ver. 8, 32. They did not think their callings excused them, nor plead that they could not leave their shops to attend the public business, knowing what they lost would certainly be made up to them, by the blessing of God upon their callings. 8. Some ladies are spoken of as helping forward this work, "Shallum and his daughters," ver. 12, who, though not capable of personal service, yet, having their portions in their own hands, or being rich widows, contributed money for buying materials and paying workmen. St. Paul speaks of some good women, that "laboured with him in the gospel," Phil. iv. 3. 9. Of some it is said, that they repaired "over against their houses," ver. 10, 23, 28, 29, and of one who, it is likely, was only a lodger, that he repaired "over against his chamber," ver. 30. When a general good work is to be done, each should apply himself to that part of it which falls nearest him, and is within his reach. If every one will sweep before his own door, the street will be clean; if every one will mend one, we shall be all mended. If he that has but a chamber will repair before that, he has done his part. 10. Of one it is said that he "earnestly" repaired that which fell to his share, ver. 20, he did it with an inflamed zeal: not that others were cold or indifferent, but he was the most vigorous of any of them, and made himself remarkable for it. It is good to be thus "zealously affected in a good thing;" and it is probable that this good man's zeal provoked very many to take the more pains, and make the more haste. 11. Of one of these builders it is observed, that he was "the sixth son" of his father, ver. 30. His five elder brethren, it seems, laid not their hand to this work, but he did. In doing that which is good, we need not stay to see our elders go before us; if they decline it, it does not therefore follow that we must. Thus the young brother, if he be the better man, and does God and his generation better service, is indeed the better gentleman; those are most honourable that are most useful. 12. Some of them that had "first done, helped their fellows," and undertook another share, where they saw there was most need. Meremoth repaired, ver. 4, and again, ver. 21. And the Tekoites, beside the piece they repaired, ver. 5, undertook another piece, ver. 27, which is the more remarkable, because their nobles set them a bad example, by withdrawing from the service, which, instead of serving them for an excuse to sit still, perhaps made them the more forward to do double work, that, by their zeal, they might either shame, or atone for, the covetousness and carelessness of their nobles.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ministers should always be ready to labour and venture for the good of their brethren; and they, who have the precedency in rank, should take the lead, in setting that good example which gives energy to their instructions; but especially, they should teach the people, how to sanctify their secular employments, by beginning, conducting, and completing them with prayer and thanksgiving, according to the word of God, and to his glory.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. SAMARITAN RANCOUR AND SCORN.—Ver. 1—3. Here is the spiteful, scornful reflection which Sanballat and Tobiah cast upon the Jews, for their attempt to build the wall about Jerusalem. The country rang of it presently; intelligence was brought of it to Samaria, that nest of enemies to the Jews and their prosperity; and here we are told how they received the tidings. 1. In "heart;" they were very angry at the undertaking, and had "great indignation." It vexed them that Nehemiah came to seek the welfare of the children of Israel, chap. ii. 10; but, when they heard of this great undertaking for their good, they were out of all patience. They had hitherto pleased themselves with the thought that, while Jerusalem was unwalled, they could swallow it up, and make themselves masters of it when they pleased; but if it be walled, it will not only be fenced against them, but by degrees become formidable to them. The strength and safety of the church are the grief and vexation of its enemies. 2. In "word;" they despised it, and made it the subject of their ridicule, in which they did sufficiently display their venom; but good was brought out of it; for, looking upon it as a foolish undertaking, that would sink under its own weight, they did not go about to obstruct it till it was too late. Let us see with what pride and malice they set themselves publicly to banter it. (1.) Sanballat speaks with scorn of the workmen, "'These feeble Jews,' ver. 2, what will they do for materials? 'Will they revive the stones out that the walls of Jerusalem [‡] were made up, and that the breaches began to be stopped, [s] then they were very wroth,

8 And [t] conspired all of them together, to come and to fight against Jerusalem, and to [§] hinder it.

9 Nevertheless [u] we made our prayer unto our God, and [x] set a watch against them day and night, [3] because of them.

10 And Judah said, [y] The strength of the [z] bearers of burdens is decayed, and there is much rubbish; so that we are not able to build the wall.

11 And our adversaries said, [a] They shall not know, neither see, till we come in the midst among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease.

12 And it came to pass, that when the Jews which dwelt by them came, they said unto us [b] ten times, ‖ From all places whence ye shall return unto us, they will be upon you.

13 ¶ Therefore [c] set I in [*] the lower places behind the wall, and on the higher places, I even set the people after their families with [d] their swords, their spears, and their bows.

14 And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, [e] Be not ye afraid of them: [f] remember the LORD,[4] which is [g] great and terrible, and [h] fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses.

15 And it came to pass, when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, and [i] God had brought their counsel to nought, that we returned all of us to the wall, [k] every one unto his work.

16 And it came to pass from that time forth, that the half of [l] my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons; and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah.

17 They which builded on the wall, and they that [m] bare burdens, with those that laded, every one [n] with one of his hands wrought in the work,[5] and with the other hand held a weapon.

18 For the builders, every one had his sword girded [†] by his side, and so builded. And [o] he that sounded the trumpet was by me.

19 ¶ And I said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall, one far from another.

20 In what place therefore ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us: [p] our God shall fight for us.

21 So [q] we laboured in the work: and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared.

22 Likewise at the same time said I unto the people, Let [r] every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

23 So neither [s] I, nor my brethren, nor my servants, nor the men of the guard which followed me, none of us put off [6] our clothes, [‡] saving that every one put them off for washing.

The Jews complain of their debt, mortgage, and bondage, 1. The usurers rebuked, &c., 6.

AND there was [a] a great cry of the people and of their wives, against [b] their brethren the Jews.

2 For there were that said, [c] We, our sons and our daughters, are many: therefore [d] we take up corn for them, that we may eat and live.

3 Some also there were that said, [e] We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses, that we might buy corn, [f] because of the dearth.

4 There were also that said, We have borrowed money for [g] the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards.

5 Yet now [h] our flesh [1] is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children: and, lo, [i] we bring into bondage our sons and our daughters to be servants, and some of our daughters are brought unto bondage already: neither is it in our power to redeem them; for other men have our lands and vineyards.

6 ¶ And [k] I was very angry when I heard their cry and these words.

7 Then [*] I consulted with myself, and [l] I rebuked the nobles, and the rulers, and said unto them, [m] Ye exact usury, every one of his brother. And [n] I set a great assembly [2] against them;

8 And I said unto them, We [o] after our ability have [p] redeemed our brethren the Jews, which were sold unto the heathen; and will ye even [q] sell your brethren? or [r] shall they be sold unto us? Then [s] held they their peace, and found nothing to answer.

9 Also I said, [t] It is not good that ye do: ought ye not [u] to walk in the fear of our God because of [x] the reproach of the heathen our enemies?

10 [y] I likewise, and my brethren, and my servants, might exact of them money and corn: [z] I pray you let us [a] leave off this usury.

11 [b] Restore, I pray you, to them, even this day, [c] their lands, their vineyards, their olive yards, and their houses, also the hundredth part of the money, and of the corn, of the rubbish?' And what mean they by being so hasty? Do they think to make the walling of a city but one day's work? and to keep the feast of dedication with sacrifice the next day? Poor silly people! see how ridiculous they make themselves!" (2.) Tobiah speaks with no less scorn of the work itself. He has his jest too, and must show his wit, ver. 3. Profane scoffers sharpen one another. "Sorry work," says he, "they are like to make of it; they themselves will be ashamed of it; 'if a fox go up,' not with subtlety, but with his weight, he 'will break down their stone wall.'" Many a good work has been thus looked upon with contempt by the "proud and haughty scorners."

NEHEMIAH'S CIRCUMSPECTION.—Ver. 16—21. 1. While one half of the people was at work, the other half was under their arms, holding "spears, and shield, and bows," not only for themselves, but for the labourers too, who would immediately quit their work, and betake themselves to their weapons upon the first alarm. It is probable that they changed services at such and such hours, which would relieve the fatigue of both, and particularly would be an ease to the "bearers of burthens," whose "strength" was "decayed," ver. 10; while they held the weapons, they were eased, and yet not idle. They, thus dividing their time between the trowels and the spears, are said to "work with one hand," and hold their weapons "with the other," ver. 17, which cannot be understood literally, for the work would require both hands; but it intimates that they were equally employed in both. Thus must we work out our salvation with the "weapons of our warfare" in our hand; for in every duty we must expect to meet with opposition from our spiritual enemies, against whom we must still be "fighting the good fight of faith." 2. Every builder had a sword by his side, ver. 18, which he could carry without hindering his labour. The word of God is the sword of the Spirit, which we ought to have always at hand, and never to seek, both in our labours and in our conflicts, as Christians. 3. Care was taken both to get and give early notice of the approach of the enemy, in case they should endeavour to surprise them. Nehemiah kept a trumpeter always by him to sound an alarm upon the first intimation of danger. The work was large and the builders were dispersed; for in all parts of the wall they were labouring at the same time. Nehemiah continually walked round to oversee the work and encourage the workmen, and so would have speedy intelligence if the enemy made an attack, of which, by sound of trumpet, he would soon give notice to all, and they must immediately repair to him, with a full assurance that their "God" would "fight for them," ver. 18—20. 4. Nehemiah himself, and all his men, kept close to their business. The spears were held up, with the sight of them to terrify the enemy, not only from sun to sun, but from twilight to twilight every day, ver. 21. Thus ought we to be always upon our guard against our spiritual enemies, not only (as here) while "it is light," but when "it is dark," for they are the "rulers of the darkness of this world."—Henry.

CHAP. V. POVERTY OF THE PEOPLE.—Ver. 1—5. It seems that the attention of Nehemiah was interrupted before the wall was completed, by the affair recorded in this chapter. Amidst the depredations to which the Jews were exposed, and their attention to self-defence, it is likely that tillage was in some degree neglected, and that a scarcity of corn ensued. It is also supposed by learned men that these events occurred in the sabbatical years, which would increase the difficulties of the poor, as well as aggravate the guilt of those who thence took occasion to oppress their brethren. The nation seems also to have been visited with scarcity for their sins. Such persons, therefore, as were in low circumstances, and had large families, were unable to buy necessary food, except upon credit; and they were compelled in the same manner to raise money for the tribute imposed by the king of Persia. Of these difficulties the monied men took advantage, and, obtaining mortgages of their lands, got them into their possession: taking usury also for the money, of one hundredth part every month, or twelve per cent. a-year, (as it is generally supposed,) which soon reduced the debtors to deep poverty; and at length to the necessity of selling into slavery their sons, and even their daughters; who would be peculiarly exposed in that situation: while there appeared no prospect of redress, no hope of redeeming either their lands or their children, no period to their accumulating distresses, except in entire and perpetual bondage. Yet they were not only of the same nature, but of the same chosen seed, the children of the covenant, equally with the more prosperous Jews. They had the same affection for their children, and accounted a numerous family a blessing, as long as they could provide for it. They had not reduced themselves to this distress by extravagance, but were necessitated to contract debts through hard times and heavy taxes, and for necessary provisions: and the conduct of their oppressors was contrary to the letter and the spirit of the whole law. In this extremity they appealed to Nehemiah, and he immediately determined to do them justice. Ver. 6—7. Nehemiah appears to have possessed a far more bold and eager spirit than his contemporary Ezra. For, in a situation something similar, Ezra fasted, prayed, wept, and almost desponded; but Nehemiah, fired with a holy indignation, proceeded immediately, with all his authority and influence, to redress the grievances of his oppressed brethren; neither fearing the resentment of their powerful oppressors, nor doubting but he should be able to effect his purpose.

NEHEMIAH'S KINDNESS AND PATRIOTISM.—Ver. 10—13. Had Nehemiah, and his brethren, and servants, acted towards the people as these oppressors did: the authority

12 Then said they, [a]We will restore them, and will require nothing of them; so will we do as thou sayest. Then [b]I called the priests, and took an oath of them, that they should do according to this promise.

13 Also I [c]shook my lap, [5] and said, [d]So God shake out every man from his house, and from his labour, that performeth not this promise, even thus be he shaken out, and [e]emptied. And all the congregation said, [f]Amen, and [g]praised the LORD. And [h]the people did according to this promise.

14 ¶ Moreover from the time that I was appointed to be their governor in the land of Judah, [i]from the twentieth year even unto the two and thirtieth year of Artaxerxes the king, that is, twelve years, [m]I and my brethren have not eaten [n]the bread of the governor.

15 But the former governors that had been before me were chargeable unto the people, and had taken of them bread and wine, besides forty shekels of silver; [o] yea, [p]even their servants bare rule over the people: but [q]so did not I, [r]because of the fear of God.

16 Yea, also [s]I continued in the work of this wall, [t]neither bought we any land: and [u]all my servants were gathered thither unto the work.

17 Moreover there were [v]at my table [x]an hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, besides those that came unto us from among the heathen that are about us.

18 Now that [y]which was prepared for me daily was one ox and six choice sheep; also fowls were prepared for me, and once in ten days store of all sorts of wine: yet for all this [z]required not I the bread of the governor, because the bondage was heavy upon this people.

19 [a]Think upon me, my God, for good, [5] [b]according to all that I have done for this people.

4 Yet they sent unto me [k]four times after this sort; and I answered them after the same manner.

5 ¶ Then sent Sanballat his servant unto me in like manner the fifth time with [l]an open letter in his hand;

6 Wherein was written, [m]It is reported among the heathen, and [n]Gashmu saith it, [o]that thou and the Jews think to rebel: for which cause thou buildest the wall, [p]that thou mayest be their king, according to these words.

7 And thou hast also [q]appointed prophets to preach of thee at Jerusalem, saying, There is [r]a king in Judah: and now shall it be reported to the king according to these words. [s]Come now therefore, and let us take counsel together.

8 Then I sent unto him, saying, [t]There are no such things done as thou sayest, but [u]thou feignest them out of thine own heart.

9 For [x]they all made us afraid, saying, [y]Their hands shall be weakened from the work, that it be not done. [z]Now therefore, O God, strengthen my hands.

10 ¶ Afterward I came unto the house of [a]Shemaiah the son of Delaiah the son of Mehetabeel, who was [b]shut up; and he said, [c]Let us meet together in [d]the house of God, within the temple, [2] and [e]let us shut the doors of the temple: for they will come to slay thee; yea, [f]in the night will they come to slay thee.

11 And I said, [g]Should such a man as I flee? and who is there, that, being as I am, [h]would go into the temple to save his life? I will not go in.

12 And, lo, [i]I perceived that [k]God had not sent him; but that he pronounced this prophecy against me; for Tobiah and Sanballat had [l]hired him.

13 Therefore was he hired, [m]that I should be afraid, and do so, and sin, and [n]that they might have matter for an evil report, [o]that they might reproach me.

14 [p]My God, [q]think thou [3] upon Tobiah and Sanballat according to these their works, and [r]on the prophetess Noadiah, and the rest of the prophets, that would have put me in fear.

of the Persian king would have enabled them to exact large contributions, from the rich especially. But as they, instead of such exactions, did not so much as take what was justly their due, surely the rich should be ashamed of extorting from the poor what they could not have the shadow of a right to! Nehemiah therefore urged them voluntarily to leave off their usury, and to restore the lands of their poor brethren, and the increase of money and provisions which they had exacted from them; to lend them "without pledge or usury" in this time of distress; and to wait for payment till better times. This seems the immediate purport of his proposal: though, probably, he required the free remission of former debts, and the liberating of the children which were in bondage, as in the year of release.—His remonstrance had its desired effect, and the guilty persons promised to do so: but lest they should delay, or go back from their word, he called the priests as witnesses, and bound them with a solemn oath to perform their promise; and then with a significant action he denounced the vengeance of heaven against every one who failed of this engagement. To this the congregation solemnly assented, and praised the Lord for sending them so just and merciful a ruler. Thus this matter was in one assembly amicably settled, by motives and arguments taken from religion and the law of God: yet one of a similar kind distracted the Roman state for ages, and the oppression was never effectually prevented!—Scott.

CHAP. VI. SANBALLAT'S FIRST STRATAGEM.—Ver. 1—4. Sanballat and his confederates, not daring openly to attack the Jews, yet earnestly desiring to prevent the completion of the fortifications, which were daily carried on, formed a scheme to draw Nehemiah from his station, and to slay or confine him when they had him in their power. They therefore, on some plausible pretence, invited him to an interview; but he was aware of their intentions; and "on that account" would not have gone, if he had not been engaged. He, however, only answered, that being fully employed in a most important work, his presence was necessary; that the work would stop if he left it; why then should he come down in such circumstances? This was true, and a sufficient reason: and their subsequent importunity could not induce him either to comply, or to enter into any discussion with them, as indeed it was well calculated to confirm his sus-

HIS THIRD ATTEMPT, AND ITS MISCARRIAGE.—Ver. 10—14. Sanballat and his party, being once more baffled, employed a still more subtle and dangerous expedient, suborning persons, who were considered as prophets, to give Nehemiah bad counsel in the name of God. The principal person concerned was Shemaiah, of whom Nehemiah seems previously to have had a good opinion. He was "shut up" in some chamber adjoining the sanctuary, probably as a token of his own fear, and a sign to Nehemiah of what he ought to do: who, perhaps, being sent to, went to confer with him, as a friend and a prophet. The environs of the temple were secured by walls and gates, while the gates of the city were not set up. Shemaiah, therefore, professed great concern for Nehemiah's safety, and counselled him to take refuge in the temple with him, lest his enemies should come and murder him by night; or "that very night," as his words seem to imply. If Nehemiah had followed this advice, he would have lost his reputation for courage, and confidence in God, and have appeared weak and contemptible: the people would have taken the alarm, deserted the work, and sought their own safety: the accusations of his enemies would have gained credit, even in the Persian court; and he would have appeared conscious of bad intentions. In short, it would have overturned his whole design, and given his enemies their desired advantage. But Nehemiah soon saw through this prophet likewise. From the nature of the counsel, and his proper investigation, he perceived that Shemaiah and [illegible]

[2] The matter is to be conceived and apprehended thus: That Nehemiah found that list and catalogue of those that came up in the first of Cyrus, as it was taken then; and that he called over the names of the families as they lay in order there: he observed the order of that list in calling and listing them; but he took the number of them, as they were now when he numbered them. And some families were now more in number than they were when that first was made, and some were less; and some that were in that list were not to be found now: for some had more of the same stock come out of Babel since the first numbering; and some that had come up at first, and were then numbered, were now gone back.—LIGHTFOOT.

CHAP. VII. NEHEMIAH'S VIGILANCE.—Ver. 1. God saith concerning his church, Isa. lxii. 6, "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem;" that is Nehemiah's care here; for dead walls, without living watchmen, are but a poor defence to a city. 1. He appointed the porters, singers, and Levites in their places, to their work; it is meant of their work in general, which was to attend the temple service, that had been neglected in some degree, but now was revived. God's worship is the defence of a place, and his ministers, when they mind their duty, are watchmen on the walls. 2. He appointed two governors or consuls, to whom he committed the care of the city, and gave them in charge to provide for the public peace and safety. Hanani, his brother, who came to him with the tidings of the desolations of Jerusalem, was one, a man of improved integrity, and affection to his country; the other was Hananiah, that had been ruler of the palace; for he that has approved himself faithful in less shall be intrusted with more. Of this Hananiah it is said, that he was a "faithful man, and one that feared God above many," ver. 2. 3. He gave orders about the shutting of the gates, and the guarding of the walls, ver. 3, 4. See here, (1.) What the present state of Jerusalem was. The city in compass was large and great, the walls enclosed the same ground as formerly, but much of it lay waste, for the houses were not built, few, at least, in comparison with what had been; so that Nehemiah walled the city in faith, and with an eye to that promise of the replenishing of it, which God had lately made by the prophet, Zech. viii. 3, &c. Though the people were now few, he believed they would be multiplied, and therefore built the walls so as to make room for them; had he not depended upon this, he might have thought walls without a city as great a reproach as a city without walls. (2.) What was the care of Nehemiah for it: he ordered the rulers of the city themselves, [1.] To stand by, and see the city gates shut up and barred every night; for in vain had they a wall, if they were careless of their gates. [2.] To take care that they should not be opened in the morning till they could see that all was clear and quiet. [3.] To set sentinels upon the walls, or elsewhere, at convenient distances, who should, in case of the approach of the enemy, give timely notice to the city of the danger; and, as it came to their turn to watch, they must post themselves "over against their own houses," because of them, it might be presumed, they would be in a particular manner careful.

CHAP. VII. CHRIST.—Ver. 5. Now observe, 1. Whence this good design of Nehemiah's [illegible] "My God put it into my heart." Note, Whatever good motion is in [illegible] acknowledge it to come from God. It was [illegible] work and [illegible] him. What is done by human prudence must be ascribed to the direction of Divine Providence; he that teaches the husbandman his discretion, (Isa. xxviii. 26,) teaches the statesman his.—II. What method he took in prosecution of it. 1. He called the rulers together, and the people, that he might have an account of the present state of their families, their number, and strength, and where they were settled; which, it is likely, when he summoned them to come together, he ordered them to bring along with them out of their several districts. And I doubt there were not so many but that it might be soon done. 2. He reviewed the old "register of the genealogy of them which came up at the first," and compared the present accounts with that; and here we have the repetition of that out of Ezra ii. 2. The title is the same here, ver. 6, 7, as there, ver. 1, 2. "These are the children of the promise," &c. Two things are here repeated and recorded a second time from thence; (1.) The names and numbers of their several families; and, (2.) Their oblations to the service of the temple. The repetition of these accounts may intimate to us the delight which the great God is pleased to take in the persons, families, and services of his spiritual Israel, and the particular notice he takes of them. He knows them that are his, knows them all, knows them by name, has his eye on the register of those children of the captivity, and does all according to the ancient counsel of his will concerning them. Here is an account of the heads of the several families that first came up, ver. 6—69. As to this, First, Though it seem of little use to us now, yet then it was of great use, to compare what they had been with what they now were. We may suppose they were much increased by this time; but it will do well for them to remember their small beginnings, that they might acknowledge God in multiplying their families, and building them up. By this means, likewise, their genealogies would be preserved, and the distinction of their families kept up, till the Messiah should come, and then an end be put to all their genealogies, which were preserved for his sake, but afterward were endless. But, Secondly, There are many differences in the numbers between this catalogue and that in Ezra. Most of them, indeed, are exactly the same, and some others within a very few under or over; (one or two, perhaps;) and therefore I cannot think, as some do, that that was the number of these families at their first coming, this as they were now, which was at least forty years after, (some make it much more,) for we cannot suppose so many families to be not at all, or but little altered in their numbers in all that time; therefore, what differences there are we may suppose to arise either from the mistakes of transcribers, which [illegible] in numbers, or from [illegible] of the Greeks from [illegible]

64 These sought their register among [g]those that were reckoned by genealogy, but it was not found: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.

here, except of the singing men and singing women, which there are 200, here 245. Those were not of such importance, as that they should keep any strict account of them.

NATIONAL OFFERINGS.—Ver. 70. Here is an account of the offerings which were given toward the work of God. This differs much from that, Ezra ii. 68, 69, and it may be questioned whether it refers to the same contribution; here, the Tirshatha, or chief governor, begins the offering, who there was not mentioned. And the single sum mentioned there exceeds all those here put together; yet it is probable that it was the same, but that followed one copy of the lists, this another; for the last verse is the same here that it was Ezra ii. 70, adding chap. iii. 1. Blessed be God that our faith and hope are not built upon the niceties of names and numbers, genealogy and chronology, but on the great things of the law and gospel. Whatever is given to the work of God, he is not unrighteous to forget it; nor shall even a cup of cold water, wherewith he is honoured, go without its reward.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The active servants of God, and of his church, will never want employment; for the completion of one design will make way for the commencement of another.—The fear of God, powerfully possessing the heart, will produce proportionable fidelity and conscientiousness, in a man's whole character and conduct, and it is happy for the community, when men of this character have the charge of public affairs.—"Except the LORD keep the city," the walls are built, and "the watchmen wake in vain:" yet in this and all other concerns, God is to be trusted in the use of prudent and proper means, and not to be tempted by the neglect of them.—Magistrates and ministers have more extensive charges: but every man ought to watch over his own heart, and his own house, that sin the worst enemy, may be kept at a distance as much as possible.—Provision is made in the gospel, and in the city of our God, for far greater numbers than have yet been enrolled citizens: we should therefore be devising means for replenishing it with inhabitants, as well as for building its walls.—"All holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works, are from God:" to him belongs the praise when good thoughts are suggested: we should be careful not to "quench the Spirit," by rejecting them; and we ought continually to pray, that our God would put more and more of them into our hearts, and enable us to bring them to good effect; and that he would do the same for increasing numbers. Then we might hope that many would concur in designs, as yet unthought of, for propagating the gospel and promoting the salvation of souls.—The Lord delighteth to honour those who willingly face danger and endure hardship for his sake: he knoweth the names of all his people, and will produce the register at last. But we be to those who turn back from him, loving this present world: and happy they who willingly come to dedicate themselves, and consecrate their substance to his service and glory!—Scott.

CHAP. VIII. PUBLIC READING OF THE LAW.—1. "Ezra brought the law before the congregation," ver. 2. He had taken care to provide himself with the best and most correct copies of the law; and what he had laid up for his own use and satisfaction, he here brought forth as a good householder, out of his treasury for the benefit of the church. Observe, (1.) The book of the law is not to be confined to the scribes' studies, but "brought before the congregation," and read to them in their own language. (2.) Ministers, when they go to the pulpit, should take their Bibles with them; Ezra did so: thence they must fetch their knowledge, and according to that rule they must speak, and must show that they do so. See 2 Chron. xvii. 9. 2. He opened the book with great reverence and solemnity, "in the sight of all the people," ver. 5. He brought it forth with a sense of the great mercy of God to them in giving them that book; he opened it with a sense of his mercy to them in giving them leave to read it, that it was not a spring shut up, and a fountain sealed. The "taking of a book," and "the opening of the seals," we find celebrated with joy and praise, Rev. v. 9. Let us learn to address ourselves to the services of religion with solemn stops and pauses, and not to go about them rashly; let us consider what we are doing, when we take God's book into our hands, and open it, and so also when we bow our knees in prayer; and what we do, let us do it deliberately, Eccl. v. 1. (3.) He and others read in the book of the law from "morning till noon," ver. 3, and they read distinctly, ver. 8. Reading the Scriptures in religious assemblies is an ordinance of God, whereby he is honoured, and his church edified. And, upon special occasions, we must be willing to attend for many hours together on the reading and expounding of the word of God: they here were thus employed six hours. Let those that read and preach the word, learn also to deliver themselves distinctly; as those who understand what they say, and are affected with it themselves, and who desire that those they speak to may understand it, retain it, and be affected with it likewise. "It is a snare for a man to devour that which is holy." 4. What they read they expounded, showed the intent and meaning of it, and what use was to be made of it; they gave the sense in other words, that they might "cause the people to understand the reading," ver. 7, 8.—Henry.

JOY IN THE LORD.—Ver. 10, 11. After the former part of the day had been spent in the ordinances of religion, the people were allowed, and even required, (probably by a public notice from Nehemiah, enforced by the priests and Levites,) to spend the remainder in cheerful feasting, as a representation of the believer's joy in the service of

A. M. 3560.—B. C. 444.

4 And Ezra the scribe stood upon a [t]pulpit[s] of wood, which they had made for the purpose; and beside him stood Mattithiah, and Shema, and Anaiah, and Urijah, and Hilkiah, and [l]Maaseiah, on his right hand; and on his left hand, Pedaiah and Mishael, and [m]Malchiah, and [n]Hashum, and Hash-badana, Zechariah, and [o]Meshullam.

5 And Ezra [p]opened the book in the [§]sight of all the people; (for he was above all the people;) and when he opened it, all the people [q]stood up:

6 And Ezra [r]blessed the LORD, the great God. And all the people answered, [s]Amen, Amen, [t]with lifting up their hands: and they [u]bowed their heads, and worshipped the LORD [x]with their faces to the ground.

7 Also [y]Jeshua, and [z]Bani, and [a]Sherebiah, Jamin, [b]Akkub, Shabbethai, [c]Hodijah, [d]Maaseiah, [e]Kelita, [f]Azariah, [g]Jozabad, [h]Hanan, [i]Pelaiah, and the Levites, [k]caused the people to understand the law: and the people stood in their place.

8 So they read in the book[4] in the law of God distinctly, [l]and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading.

9 ¶ And [m]Nehemiah, which is the ‖[i]Tirshatha, and [n]Ezra the priest the scribe, and [o]the Levites that taught the people, said unto all the people, [p]This day is holy unto the LORD your God; [q]mourn not nor weep. For [r]all the people wept, when they heard the words of the law.

10 Then he said unto them, [s]Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and [t]send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our LORD: neither be ye sorry; for [u]the joy of the LORD is your strength.

11 So the Levites [x]stilled all the people, saying, Hold your peace, for the day is holy; neither be ye grieved.

12 And all the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth, [y]because they had understood the words that were declared unto them.

13 ¶ And on [z]the second day were gathered together the chief of the fathers of all the people, the priests, and the Levites, unto Ezra the scribe, even [*]to understand the words of the law.

14 And they found written[5] in the law, which the LORD had commanded [†]by Moses, that the children of Israel should [a]dwell in [b]booths, in the feast of the seventh month:

15 And [c]that they should publish and proclaim in all their cities, and [d]in Jerusalem, saying, Go forth unto [e]the mount, and [f]fetch [g]olive branches, and pine branches, and myrtle branches, and [h]palm branches, and branches of thick trees, to make booths, as it is written.

16 ¶ So the people went forth, and brought them, and made themselves booths, every one upon [i]the roof of his house,[6] and in their courts, and in [k]the courts of the house of God, and in [l]the street of the water gate, and [m]in the street of the gate of Ephraim.

17 And all the congregation of them that were come again out of the captivity made booths, and [n]sat under the booths: for since the days of [o]Jeshua the son of Nun unto that day [p]had not the children of Israel [q]done so. And [r]there was very great gladness.

18 Also [s]day by day,[7] from the first day unto the last day, he read in the book of the law of God. And they kept the feast seven days, and on the eighth day was [t]a solemn assembly, [t]according unto the manner.

CHAP. IX.

A solemn fast, and repentance of the people, 1. The Levites confess God's manifold goodness, and their own wickedness, 4.

NOW in the [a]twenty and fourth day [b]of this month the [c]children of Israel were assembled with fasting, and with sackclothes, and [d]earth upon them.

2 And [e]the seed of Israel separated themselves from all [*]strangers, and stood and [f]confessed their sins, and the iniquities of their fathers.

3 And [g]they stood up in their place, and read in the book of the law of the LORD their God, [h]one fourth part of the day; and another fourth part they confessed, and worshipped the LORD their God.

4 ¶ Then stood up upon the [†]stairs[1] of the Levites, [i]Jeshua, and Bani, Kadmiel, Shebaniah, Bunni, Sherebiah, Bani, and Chenani, and [k]cried with a loud voice unto the LORD their God.

5 Then the Levites, Jeshua, and Kadmiel, Bani, Hashabniah, Sherebiah, Hodijah, Shebaniah, and Pethahiah, said, [l]Stand up and [m]bless the LORD your God for ever and ever: and blessed be [n]thy glorious name, which is [o]exalted above all blessing and praise.

6 Thou, [p]even thou, art LORD alone; [q]thou hast made heaven, [r]the heaven of heavens, with all their host, the earth, and all things that are therein, the seas, and all that is therein, and thou [s]preservest them all; and the [t]host of heaven worshippeth thee.

7 Thou art the LORD the God, who didst [u]choose Abram, and broughtest him forth his gracious God. It is probable that peace-offerings had been offered, and they were now called to feast together on them; and might lawfully drink the sweet or rich wines, which their vineyards produced, in as liberal a manner as consisted with temperance. But then they must remember to send portions to those for whom nothing had been prepared: to the poor, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow. For this would distinguish their religious feasting from the sensual indulgence of carnal men, and complete the due solemnization of the holy day. They were also again reminded not to indulge grief on the present festival; "for the joy of the LORD was their strength." A grateful adoring recollection of his late mercies, and his ancient distinguished favours to the nation, and powerful interposition in their behalf; with cheerful meditations on his promises and perfections, inspiring confidence, love, and zeal, and leading them to abound in joyful praises and thanksgivings, would fortify their souls to meet the dangers, encounter the difficulties, resist the temptations, and perform the duties which still lay before them. Whereas, indulged sorrow would induce desponding fear, enfeeble their resolutions, and unfit them for labours, trials, and conflicts.—Scott.

FEAST OF TABERNACLES.—Ver. 16, 17. 1. The people observed the ceremony; they sat in booths, which the priests and Levites set up in the courts of the temple: those that had houses of their own, set up booths on the roofs of them, or in their courts; and those that had not such conveniences, set them up in the streets. This feast had usually been observed, 2 Chron. v. 3, Ezra iii. 4, but never with such solemnity as now, since Joshua's time, when they were newly settled, as they were now newly re-settled in Canaan. That man loves his house too well, that cannot find in his heart to quit it a while in compliance either with an ordinance or with a providence of God. 2. They minded the substance; else the ceremony, how significant soever, had been insignificant. (1.) They did it with gladness, with very great gladness, rejoicing in God, and his goodness to them. All their holy feasts, but this especially, were to be celebrated with joy, which would be much for the honour of God, and their own encouragement in his service. (2.) They attended the reading and expounding of the word of God, during all the days of the feast, ver. 18. They improved their leisure for this good work; spare hours cannot be better spent than in studying the Scriptures, and conversing with them. At this feast of tabernacles, God appointed the law to be read, once in seven years. Whether this was that year of release in which that service was to be performed, [illegible] Jews not [illegible]; however, they spent all the [illegible] of the feast in [illegible] the 24th day was appointed to be spent in fasting and prayer. Holy joy must not indispose us for godly sorrow, any more than godly sorrow for holy joy.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—8. Pious men of different dispositions may serve the church in their several ways. The studious may, as it were, prepare materials with which the active may work: and the active may make way for the studious to bring forth their treasures for public use. They ought therefore reciprocally to assist each other; and to welcome such assistance, without envy, competition or prejudice.—The public reading, expounding, and preaching of God's word has, in all ages, been the grand method of promoting true religion; they, therefore, who are eminently capable of this service, should be called forth from obscurity and retirement, and excited to abound in it: all of every age, sex, or rank, who are capable of understanding, should assemble to attend, and all ought to "give earnest heed to the things which they hear." They who are in reputation should set an example of diligence in this respect, and even teachers should be "swift to hear" other ministers, as they have opportunity, that they may become more competent for the work.—When the value of the Scriptures and of the soul is properly understood; and when we are earnestly engaged, and in a spiritual frame of mind, we shall not soon be weary of divine ordinances. Short sermons, therefore, or tired hearers, prove a very slow state of religion; for facts demontrate that where the word of God is precious, even inconvenient situations and uneasy postures will be patiently endured: and when ministers, who are themselves in earnest, perceive the people thirsting for instruction, and drinking it in, they will be encouraged to proceed, and to preach as much and as often as required, while God gives them health for the work.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. PUBLIC FAST.—Ver. 1. We have here a general account of a public fast which the children of Israel kept, probably by order from Nehemiah, by and with the advice and consent of the chief of the fathers. It was a fast that men appointed, but such "a fast as God had chosen;" for it was a day of communion with God: they "fasted to him, even to him," Zech. vii. 5, for 1. They spake to him in prayer, offered their pious and devout affections to him, in the confession of sin, and the adoration of him as the Lord and their God. Fasting without prayer is a body without a soul, a worthless carcass. (2.) They heard him speaking to them by his word, for they read in the book of the law, [illegible] to pray proper on fasting days, that in the glass of the law, we may see our [illegible] and [illegible] and know what to acknowledge and what [illegible] out of [x]Ur of the Chaldees, and [y]gavest him the name of Abraham;

8 And [z]foundest his heart faithful before thee, and [a]madest a covenant with him, to give the land of [b]the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Jebusites, and the Girgashites, to give it, I say, to his seed, [c]and hast performed thy words; for thou art [d]righteous:

9 And [e]didst see the affliction of our fathers in Egypt, and [f]heardest their cry by the Red sea;

10 And [g]shewedst signs and wonders upon Pharaoh, and on all his servants, and on all the people of his land: for thou knewest that [h]they dealt proudly against them. So [i]didst thou get thee a name, as it is this day.

11 And thou didst [k]divide the sea before them, so that they went through the midst of the sea on the dry land; and [l]their persecutors thou threwest into the deeps, [m]as a stone into the mighty waters.

12 Moreover [n]thou leddest them in the day by a cloudy pillar, and in the night by a pillar of fire, to give them light [o]in the way wherein they should go.

13 Thou [p]camest down also upon mount Sinai, and [q]spakest with them from heaven, and [r]gavest them right judgments, and [s]true laws, good statutes, and commandments:

14 And [t]madest known unto them[2] thy holy sabbath, and [u]commandedst them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of [v]Moses thy servant:

15 And [x]gavest them bread from heaven for their hunger, and [y]broughtest forth water for them out of the rock for their thirst, and promisedst them that they should [z]go in to possess the land which thou hadst [§]sworn to give them.

16 But they and our fathers [a]dealt proudly, and [b]hardened their necks, and [c]hearkened not to thy commandments,

17 And [d]refused to obey, neither were mindful of thy wonders that thou didst among them; but [e]hardened their necks, and in their rebellion [f]appointed a captain to return to their bondage: but thou art [g]a God ‖ready to pardon, [h]gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and [i]forsookest them not.

18 Yea, [k]when they had made them a molten calf, and said, This is thy god that brought thee up out of Egypt, and had wrought great provocations;

19 Yet thou, [l]in thy manifold mercies, forsookest them not in the wilderness: [m]the pillar of the cloud departed not from them by day, to lead them in the way; neither the pillar of fire by night, to shew them light, and the way wherein they should go.

21 Yea, [r]forty years didst thou sustain them in the wilderness, so that they lacked nothing; [s]their clothes waxed not old, and their feet swelled not.

22 Moreover, [t]thou gavest them kingdoms and nations, and didst [u]divide them into corners:[3] so they possessed [x]the land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon, and the land of Og king of Bashan.

23 Their children also [y]multipliedst thou as the stars of heaven, and [z]broughtest them into the land, concerning which [a]thou hadst promised to their fathers, that they should go in to possess it.

24 So the children went in and possessed the land, and [b]thou subduedst before them the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, and gavest them into their hands, with their kings, and the people of the land, that they might do with them [*]as they would.

25 And they took [c]strong cities, and [d]a fat land, and possessed houses full of all goods, [e]wells digged, vineyards, and oliveyards, and [f]fruittrees in abundance: so they [g]did eat, and were filled, and became fat, and [h]delighted themselves in thy great goodness.

26 Nevertheless [i]they were disobedient, and rebelled against thee, and [k]cast thy law behind their backs, and [l]slew thy prophets, which testified against them, to turn them to thee, and [k]they wrought great provocations.

27 Therefore [l]thou deliveredst them into the hand of their enemies, who vexed them: and [m]in the time of their trouble, when they cried unto thee, thou heardest them from heaven; and according to thy manifold mercies, thou gavest them [n]saviours,[4] who saved them out of the hand of their enemies.

28 But after they had rest, they [§]did evil again before thee: therefore leftest thou them in the hand of their enemies, so that they had the dominion over them; yet when they returned, and cried unto thee, thou heardest [o]them from heaven, and [p]many times didst thou deliver them, according to thy mercies;

29 And [q]testifiedst against them, that thou mightest bring them again unto thy law: [r]yet they dealt proudly, and hearkened not unto thy commandments, but sinned against thy judgments, (which if a man do, he shall live in them;) and ‖withdrew the shoulder,[5] [t]and hardened their neck, and would not hear.

30 Yet [u]many years didst thou [*]forbear them, and testifiedst against them [x]by thy Spirit in [†]thy prophets; yet would they not give ear; [y]therefore gavest thou them into the hand of the people of the lands.

Three hours (for that is the fourth part of a day) they spent in reading, expounding, and applying the Scriptures; and three hours in confessing sin and praying; so that they stayed together six hours, and spent all the time in the solemn acts of religion, without saying, "Behold what a weariness is it!" The varying of the exercises made it the less tedious, and, as the word they read would furnish them with matter for prayer, so prayer would make the word the more profitable. Bishop Patrick thinks that they spent the whole twelve hours of the day in devotion, that from six o'clock in the morning till nine they read, and then from nine to twelve they prayed; from twelve to three they read again, and from three till six at night they prayed again. The work of a fast day is good work, and therefore we should endeavour to make a day's work, a good day's work of it.

Adoration.—In this solemn address to God, we have, 1. An awful adoration of God, as a perfect and glorious Being, and the Fountain of all beings, ver. 5, 6. The congregation is called upon to signify their concurrence herewith, by standing up; and so the minister directs himself to God, "Blessed be thy glorious name." God is here adored, (1.) As the one only living and true God; "Thou art Jehovah alone," self-existent and independent; there is no God beside thee. (1.) As the Creator of all things; "Thou hast made heaven, earth, and seas," and all that is in them. The first article of our creed is fitly made the first article of our praises. (2.) As the great Protector of the whole Creation; "Thou preservest in being all creatures thou hast given being to." God's providence extends itself to the highest beings, for they need it, and to the meanest, for they are not slighted by it. What God has made he will preserve; what he does is firm, Eccl. iii. 14. (4.) As the Object of the creatures' praises; "The host of heaven," the world of holy angels, "worshippeth thee," ver. 6. But thy "name is exalted above all blessing and praise;" it needs not the praises of the creatures, nor is any addition made to its glory by those praises. The best performances in the praising of God's name, even those of the angels themselves, fall infinitely short of what it deserves. It is not only exalted above our blessing, but above all blessing. Put all the praises of heaven and earth together, and the thousandth part is not said of what might and should be said of the glory of God. "Our goodness extendeth not to him."

Confession.—They at length come nearer to their own day, and lament the sins which had brought those judgments upon them, which they had long been groaning under, and were now but in part delivered from; "We have done wickedly;" ver. 33; "our kings, our princes, our priests, and our fathers," have all been guilty, and we in [illegible] they charge upon themselves and their fathers, as the cause of [illegible]. A contempt of the good law God had given them. They "sinned against thy judgments," the dictates of divine wisdom, and the demands of divine sovereignty: though they were told how much it would be for their own advantage to govern themselves by them, for "if a man do them, he shall live in them," ver. 29, yet they would not do them, and so, in effect, said, that they "would not live;" they "forsook their own mercies." This abridgment of the covenant, "Do this, and live," is taken from Ezek. xx. 13, and is quoted, Gal. iii. 12, to prove that "the law is not of faith;" it was not then as it is now, "Believe and live," yet "they gave a withdrawing shoulder," so it is in the margin. They pretended to lay their shoulders under the burthen of God's law, and put their shoulders to the work, but they proved withdrawing shoulders, they soon flew off, would not keep to it, would not abide by it; when it came, as we say, to the setting to, they shrunk back, and would not hear: they had a backsliding heart. And though God by his prophets called them to return, they "would not give ear," ver. 30, he "stretched out his hands, but no man regarded." Secondly, A contempt of the good land God had given them, ver. 35, "Our kings have 'not served thee in their kingdom,' not used their power for the support of religion; our people have not served thee in the use of the gifts of thy great goodness, and in that large and fat land which thou not only gavest them by thy grant, but gavest before them by the expulsion of the natives, and the complete victories they obtained over them." They that would not serve God in their own land were made to serve their enemies in a strange land, as was threatened, Deut. xxviii. 48, 48. It is pity that a good land should have bad inhabitants, but so it was with Sodom; fatness and fulness often make men proud and sensual.

Petition.—Here is their address to God under these calamities. 1. By way of request, that their trouble might not seem little, ver. 32. It is the only petition in all this prayer. The trouble was universal; it was come on their kings, princes, priests, prophets, fathers, and all their people; they had all shared in the sin, ver. 34, and now all shared in the judgment. It was of long continuance, from the time of the kings of Assyria, who carried the ten tribes captive, unto this day; "Lord, let it not all seem little, and not worthy to be regarded, or not needing to be relieved." They do not prescribe to God what he shall do for them, but leave it to him, only desiring he would please to take cognizance of it, remembering that when he saw the affliction of his people in Egypt to be great, he came down to deliver them, Exod. iii. 7, 8. In this request they have an eye to God, as one that is to be feared, for he is the great, the mighty, and the terrible God; and as one that is in his covenant, for he is our God, in covenant, and a God that keeps covenant and [illegible]

31 Nevertheless for thy great mercies' sake thou didst not utterly consume them, nor forsake them; for thou art a [a]gracious and merciful God.

32 Now therefore, [b]our God, the great, the mighty, and the terrible God, who [c]keepest covenant and mercy, let not all the [‡]trouble seem [d]little before thee, that hath [§]come upon us, [e]on our kings, on our princes, and on our priests, and on our prophets, and on our fathers, and on all thy people, [f]since the time of the kings of Assyria unto this day.

33 Howbeit [g]thou art just in all that is brought upon us; for thou hast done right, but [h]we have done wickedly:

34 Neither have our kings, our princes, our priests, nor our fathers, kept thy law, nor hearkened unto thy commandments and [i]thy testimonies, wherewith thou didst testify against them.

35 For [k]they have not served thee in their kingdom, and in [l]thy great goodness that thou gavest them, and in the large and [m]fat land which thou gavest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.

36 Behold,[6] [n]we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:

37 And [o]it yieldeth much increase unto the kings whom thou hast set over us because of our sins: also they have [p]dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

38 And because of all this [q]we make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, Levites, and priests, [*]seal unto it.

the justice of God in all their troubles, that he had done them no wrong: "We have done wickedly in breaking thy laws, and therefore thou hast done right in bringing all these miseries upon us." Note, It becomes us, when we are under the rebukes of divine providence, though ever so sharp, and ever so long, to justify God, and to judge ourselves; for he will be "clear when he judgeth," Ps. li. 4.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—6. The diligent study of God's word will more and more show us both our own sinfulness and the plenteousness of his salvation: and thus alternately call us to mourn for sin, and to rejoice in him.—Seasons of comfort should remind us of his condescending goodness, and so lead us to deeper self-abasement on account of our crimes against him: and thus joyful feasts and solemn fasts may properly succeed, and prepare our hearts for, each other.—Our sorrow and humiliation for sin must be evidenced to be genuine by separation from it, and from every occasion or temptation to it.—Every discovery of the truth and will of God should endear to us his sacred word, and render us more unwearied in our attendance on it and on his worship. A few hours, or even occasionally a whole day, cannot be too long to spend in those exercises and meditations, which are preparations for heaven, and anticipations of its sacred joys: yet, alas! we are most of us sooner weary in the courts of the Lord, than the trifler is at his diversions, or even the labourer at his work! Our God knoweth our thoughts before we speak, and mental prayer may suit our secret intercourse with him: but they who address him in public should speak audibly and with animation; that the people may hear, and be affected: and if, on some occasions, "they cry with a loud voice unto the LORD their God," or be more copious than usual, they cannot be censured, without involving those who are commended in the sacred Scriptures.—Scott.

CHAP. X. PUBLIC COVENANTING.—Ver. 1. We have several times read of the rulers, priests, and people solemnly covenanting before God, to renounce their transgressions, and to adhere to his service. Such transactions were sometimes ratified with sacrifices, solemn oaths, and other expressions of the most entire consent to them: but this is the first instance met with of a covenant drawn up in writing, and ratified by the names and seals of the persons who consented to it. No doubt this was devised, to render the transaction more affecting; and that the deed might remain as a durable testimony against those who violated it: the explicit ratification thus given would render the persons concerned more sensible of their obligations, and more afraid of transgressing: it would fortify them against temptation, preserve them from forgetfulness, and be a [illegible] for them to urge, in cautioning, exhorting, or reproving each other.—The same uses may be made of those professions, and of that consent to the new covenant, which are virtually made in baptism, whether personal, or that of our children; and in the Lord's supper; when those ordinances are duly explained and understood, administered and attended on. To this covenant the chief persons alone set their names and seals; and Nehemiah, the governor, first.—Perhaps Zidkijah was one of the princes; but no other name is explicitly mentioned of that order. Ver. 2—8. It is observable that Eliashib, the high priest, is not found among those who sealed the covenant. And it is probable that neither he nor his sons favoured the measure. But it is more surprising that the name of Ezra is wanting. There is no reason to think that he was absent; for he was at Jerusalem both before and after this transaction: perhaps he was confined by sickness or infirmity; or the measure so entirely originated with him, and he had bestowed so much pains in drawing up the covenant, and inducing others to consent to it, that his further ratification of it was deemed superfluous. Ver. 9—17. Most, if not all, of the Levites, who led the public devotions, set their seal to the covenant; which may be admitted as a probable indication, that they were earnestly and zealously engaged in that service. Ver. 18—27. Many of the names here mentioned are found among those who returned with Zerubbabel, about ninety years before; so that, either the same names were preserved in the several families; or the principal descendants of these persons, when in general favourable to the measure, subscribed their family-name, that is, the name of that ancestor, by relation to whom they were commonly distinguished.—Scott.

NATURE OF THE COVENANT.—Ver. 29. As for the general purport of this covenant, they laid upon themselves no other burthen than this necessary thing, which they were already obliged to by all other engagements of duty, interest, and gratitude—to "walk in God's law, and to do all his commandments," ver. 29. Thus David swore that he would "keep God's righteous judgments," Ps. cxix. 106. Our own covenant binds us to this, if not more strongly, yet more sensibly, than we were before bound, and therefore we must not think it needless thus to bind ourselves. Observe, When we bind ourselves to do the commandments of God, we bind ourselves to do all his commandments, and therein to have an eye to him as the Lord, and our Lord. We may notice some of the particular articles of this covenant, such as were adapted to their present temptations. 1. That they would not intermarry with the heathen, ver. 30. Many of them had been guilty of this, Ezra ix. 1. In our covenants with God, we should engage particularly against those sins that we have been most frequently overtaken in, and damaged by. They that resolve to "keep the commandments of God, must cry to all doors, Depart, Ps. cxix. 115. That they would keep no markets on the Sabbath day, [illegible]

11 [s]Seraiah the son of Hilkiah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Zadok, the son of Meraioth, the son of Ahitub, was [t]the ruler of the house of God.

12 And their brethren that did the work of the house were eight hundred twenty and two: and [u]Adaiah the son of Jeroham, the son of Pelaliah, the son of Amzi, the son of Zechariah, the son of Pashur, the son of Malchiah,

13 And his brethren, chief of the fathers, two hundred forty and two: and Amashai the son of Azareel, the son of Ahasai, the son of Meshillemoth, the son of Immer,

14 And their brethren, mighty men of valour, an hundred twenty and eight: and their overseer was Zabdiel, the son [*]of one of the great men.

15 Also of the Levites: [v]Shemaiah the son of Hashub, the son of Azrikam, the son of Hashabiah, the son of Bunni;

16 And [x]Shabbethai and Jozabad, of the chief of the Levites, [*]had the oversight of the outward business of the house of God.

17 And Mattaniah the son of Micha, the son of [y]Zabdi, the son of Asaph, was the principal [z]to begin the [a]thanksgiving in prayer:[4] and [b]Bakbukiah the second among his brethren, and Abda the son of Shammua, the son of Galal, the son of Jeduthun.

18 All the Levites in [c]the holy city were two hundred fourscore and four.

19 Moreover the porters, [d]Akkub, Talmon, and their brethren that kept [†]the gates, were an hundred seventy and two.

20 ¶ And the residue of Israel, of the priests, and the Levites, were in all the cities of Judah, every one in his inheritance.

21 But [e]the Nethinims dwelt in [‡]Ophel: and Ziha and Gispa were over the Nethinims.

22 The [f]overseer also of the Levites at Jerusalem was [g]Uzzi the son of [h]Bani, the son of [i]Hashabiah, the son of [k]Mattaniah, the son of Micha. [l]Of the sons of Asaph, the singers [m]were over the business of the house of God.

any other day of which the law had said, "Ye shall do no work therein." They would not only not sell goods themselves for gain on that day, but they would not encourage the heathen to sell on that day, by buying of them, no not victuals, under pretence of necessity; but would buy in their provisions for their families the day before, ver. 31. Note, Those that covenant to keep all God's commandments, must particularly covenant to keep Sabbaths well; for the profanation of them is an inlet to other instances of profaneness. The Sabbath is a market-day for our souls, but not for our bodies. 3. That they would not be severe in exacting their debts, but would observe the seventh year as a year of release, according to the law, ver. 31. In this matter they had been faulty, chap. v. and here therefore they promise to reform. This was the acceptable fast, to "undo the heavy burthen," and to "let the oppressed go free," Isa. lviii. 6. It was in the close of the day of expiation, that the jubilee trumpet sounded. It was for the neglect of observing the seventh year as a year of rest for the land, that God had made it enjoy its Sabbaths seventy years, Lev. xxvi. 35; and therefore they covenanted to observe that law. Those are stubborn children indeed, that will not amend the fault which they had been particularly corrected for. Having covenanted against the sins they had been guilty of, they proceed in obliging themselves to receive and observe the duties they had neglected. We must not only "cease to do evil," but "learn to do well." It was resolved in general, that the temple service should be carefully kept up, that the work of the house of their God should be done in its season, according to the law, ver. 33. Let not any people expect the blessing of God, unless they make conscience of observing his ordinances, and keeping up public worship. Then it is likely to go well with our houses, when care is taken that the work of God's house goes on well. It was likewise resolved, that they would never "forsake the house of their God," ver. 39, as they and their fathers had done; nor forsake it for the house of any other god, or for the high places, as idolaters did; nor forsake it for their farms and merchandises, as those did that were atheistical and profane. They that forsake the worship of God forsake God.—Henry.

CHAP. XI. Population of Jerusalem.—Ver. 1, 2. Jerusalem at this time was not a place of trade, by which men could acquire wealth: the houses in general were not built: the adversaries of the Jews were peculiarly hostile to that city, both as the capital of the people, whose returning prosperity they envied, and the place of the holy worship, which they hated: so that the cities of Judah, and other situations in the country, afforded a fairer prospect of living in peace and of growing rich. It was therefore deemed a necessary policy to replenish Jerusalem, for the re-establishment of the Jews as a distinct nation; and for the honour of the temple, and the protection of the priests and worshippers from the invasion of their enemies. It was "the holy city," as chosen, separated, and sanctified of God, for his immediate presence and instituted worship; as a type of Christ, and even of heaven; and as the place where the greatest advantages of becoming holy were enjoyed; yet the Jews in general had not sufficient zeal or desire after spiritual improvement, to venture the consequences of removing thither. Some indeed willingly offered themselves to dwell there; whom their brethren commended, thanked, and prayed for; though few would imitate them. The rulers fixed their residence there, that the courts of justice, and the business connected with public affairs, might draw others; and, in addition to these inhabitants, one family in ten was expressly required to remove to Jerusalem; the selection of which was by lot referred to the determination of God. "They cast lots, that among ten men, it might be known whom God chose to come thither; and the lot falling by divine appointment upon such a person rather than on another, no doubt he removed the more contentedly to this city."—(Bp. Patrick.)—Scott.

Population of the Country.—Ver. 20. Having given an account of the principal persons that dwelt in Jerusalem, (a larger account of whom we had before, 1 Chron. ix. 2, &c.,) Nehemiah, in these verses, gives us some account of the other cities, in which dwelt "the residue of Israel," ver. 20. It was requisite that Jerusalem should be replenished, yet not so as to drain the country; "the king himself is served of the field," which will do little service, if there be not hands to manage it: let there therefore be no strife, no envy, no contempt, no ill will, between the inhabitants of the cities and those of the villages; both are needful, both useful, and neither can be spared. 1. The Nethinims, the posterity of the Gibeonites, dwelt in Ophel, which was upon the wall of Jerusalem, chap. iii. 26, because they were to do the servile work of the temple, which therefore they must be posted near to, that they might be ready to attend, ver. 21. 2. Though the Levites were dispersed through the cities of Judah, yet they had an overseer who resided in Jerusalem, superior of their order, and their provincial, to whom they applied themselves for direction, who took care of their affairs, and took cognizance of their conduct, whether they did their duty, ver. 22. 3. Some of the singers were appointed to look after the necessary repairs of the temple, being ingenious men, and having leisure between their hours of service; they were "over the business of the house of God," ver. 22. And it seems the king of Persia had such a kindness for their office, that he allotted a particular maintenance for them, beside what belonged to them as Levites, ver. 23. 4. Here is one that was the king's commissioner at Jerusalem: he was of the posterity of Zerah, ver. 24. For of that family of Judah there were some now settled in

The priests which came up with Zerubbabel, 1. The succession of high priests, 10.

NOW these are [a]the priests and the Levites that went up with [b]Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, [c]and Jeshua: [d]Seraiah, Jeremiah, Ezra,

2 Amariah, [e]Malluch, Hattush,

3 [f]Shechaniah, [g]Rehum, [h]Meremoth,

4 Iddo, [i]Ginnetho, Abijah,

5 [k]Miamin, [l]Maadiah, Bilgah,

6 Shemaiah, and [m]Joiarib, Jedaiah,

7 [n]Sallu, Amok, Hilkiah, Jedaiah. These were the chief of the priests and of their brethren in the days [o]of Jeshua.

8 Moreover the Levites: [p]Jeshua, Binnui, Kadmiel, Sherebiah, Judah, and [q]Mattaniah, which was over *the thanksgiving,[1] he and his brethren.

9 Also Bakbukiah and Unni, their brethren, were [r]over against them in the watches.

10 ¶ And [s]Jeshua begat Joiakim,[2] Joiakim also begat Eliashib, and [t]Eliashib begat Joiada, 11 And Joiada begat Jonathan, and Jonathan begat Jaddua.

12 And in the days of Joiakim were priests, [u]the chief of the fathers: of [x]Seraiah, Meraiah; of Jeremiah, Hananiah;

13 Of Ezra, Meshullam; of Amariah, Jehohanan;

14 Of [y]Melicu, Jonathan; of [z]Shebaniah, Joseph;

15 Of [a]Harim, Adna; of [b]Meraioth, Helkai;

16 Of [c]Iddo, Zechariah; of [d]Ginnethon, Meshullam;

17 Of Abijah, Zichri; of [e]Miniamin; of [f]Moadiah, Piltai;

18 Of Bilgah, Shammua; of [g]Shemaiah, Jehonathan;

19 And of Joiarib, Mattenai; of Jedaiah, Uzzi;

20 Of [h]Sallai, Kallai; of Amok, Eber;

21 Of Hilkiah, Hashabiah; of Jedaiah, Nethaneel.

22 ¶ The Levites in the days of [i]Eliashib, Joiada, and Johanan, and Jaddua, were [k]recorded chief of the fathers: also the priests, to the reign of Darius the Persian.[3]

23 The sons of Levi, the chief of the fathers, were written in [l]the book of the chronicles, even until the days of Johanan the son of Eliashib.

24 And the chief of the Levites: [m]Hashabiah, Sherebiah, and Jeshua the son of Kadmiel, with their brethren over against them,[4] to praise and to give thanks, [n]according to the commandment of David *the man of God, [p]ward over against ward.

25 [q]Mattaniah, and Bakbukiah, Obadiah, Meshullam, Talmon, Akkub, were porters, [r]keeping the ward at the †thresholds of the gates.

26 These were in the days of [s]Joiakim the son of Jeshua, the son of Jozadak, and in the days of [t]Nehemiah the governor, and of Ezra the priest, the scribe.

27 ¶ And at [u]the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem they sought the Levites [x]out of all their places, to bring them to Jerusalem, to keep the dedication [y]with gladness, both with [z]thanksgivings, and with singing, with cymbals, psalteries, and with harps.

28 And the sons of the singers gathered themselves together, both out of [a]the plain country round about Jerusalem, and from the villages of [b]Netophathi;

29 Also from [c]the house of Gilgal, and out of the fields of [d]Geba and [e]Azmaveth: for the singers had builded them villages round about Jerusalem.

30 And the priests and the Levites [f]purified themselves, and purified the people, and the gates, and the wall.

31 Then I brought up [g]the princes of Judah upon the wall, and appointed [h]two great companies of them that gave thanks, whereof one went on the right hand upon the wall toward the [i]dung gate:

Jerusalem, and not all of Pharez, as appears by that other catalogue, 1 Chron. ix. 6. He is said to be "at the king's hand," or, "on the king's part," in "all matters concerning the people," to determine controversies that arose between the king's officers and his subjects; to see that what was due to the king from the people was duly paid in, and that what was allowed by the king for the temple-service was duly paid out: it was happy for the Jews, that one of themselves was in this post. 5. Here is an account of the villages, or country-towns, which were inhabited by the residue of Israel. The towns in which the children of Judah dwelt, ver. 25—30. Those that were inhabited by the children of Benjamin, ver. 31—35. And divisions for the Levites among both, ver. 36. We will now suppose them safe and easy, though few and poor. Indeed, by the blessing of God, they were likely to increase in wealth and power; and they would have been more likely, if there had not been that general profaneness among them, and lukewarmness in religion, which the prophet Malachi charges them with, (in God's name,) who, it is supposed, prophesied about this time, and in whom prophecy ceased for some ages, till it revived in the Great Prophet and his forerunner.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—It has in all ages been justly lamented, that men prefer their own ease and emolument to the public good; that even professed Christians too commonly "seek their own, and not the things of Jesus Christ;" and that but few have such an attachment to holy places and holy things, as to renounce their secular pleasures or advantages for the sake of them. Yet surely, where opportunities of spiritual improvement most abound, and where Jesus, the ruler of our holy city, resides, there we should delight to dwell; in preference to all interests and connexions, and notwithstanding persecutions, tribulations, perils, and losses! Otherwise, where is our "meetness for the inheritance of the saints in light?" and how shall we be willing to depart hence, and be "absent from the body, that we may be present with the Lord?"—Scott.

Chap. XII. Priests and Levites Returned from the Captivity.—Ver. 1. We have here, 1. The names of the priest and Levites that came up with the first out of Babylon, when Jeshua was high priest. Jeremiah and Ezra, though both of them were priests, are mentioned with the first, ver. 1, but it is supposed, not Jeremiah the prophet, or Ezra the scribe; the fame of the one was diffused long before, and the other [illegible]. Of one of the Levites it is said, ver. 8, that he was "over the thanksgiving, he and his brethren;" it was appointed to him to lead the psalms, the thanksgiving psalms, were [illegible]. The Levites kept their turns in [illegible], singers, janitors, and followers [illegible] during the Persian monarchy, from Jeshua (or Jesus,) who was high priest at the time of the restoration, to Jaddua (or Jaddus,) who was high priest when Alexander the Great, after the conquest of Tyre, came to Jerusalem, and paid great respect to this Jaddus, who met him in his pontifical habit, and showed him the prophecy of Daniel, which foretold his conquests. 8. The next generation of priests, who were chief men, and active in the days of Joiakim, sons of the first set. Note, We have reason to acknowledge God's favour to his church, and care of it, in that, as one generation of ministers passes away, another comes. All these who are mentioned, ver. 1, &c., as eminent in their generation, are again mentioned, though with some variation in several of the names, ver. 12, &c., except two, as having sons that were likewise eminent in their generation; a rare instance that twenty good fathers should leave behind them twenty good sons, (for so many here are,) that filled up their places. 4. The next generation of Levites, or rather a later generation; for those priests flourished in the days of Joiakim the high priest, these Levites in the days of Eliashib, ver. 22. Perhaps then the forementioned families of the priests began to degenerate, and the third generation of them came short of the two first; but the work of God shall never fail for want of instruments. Then a generation of Levites was "raised up," that were "recorded chief of the fathers," ver. 22, and were eminently serviceable to the interests of the church, and their service not the less acceptable either to God or to his people, for their being Levites only of the lower rank of ministers.

Dedication of the City-wall.—Ver. 27. 1. We must inquire what was the meaning of this dedication of the wall; we will suppose it to include the dedication of the city too, (continens pro contento—the thing containing for the thing contained,) and therefore it was not done till the city was pretty well replenished, chap. xi. 1. It was a solemn thanksgiving to God for his great mercy to them in the perfecting of this undertaking, which they were the more sensible of, because of the difficulty and opposition they had met with in it. 2. They hereby devoted the city in a peculiar manner to God and to his honour, and took possession of it for him, and in his name. All our cities, all our houses, must have holiness to the Lord written upon them, but the city was (so as never any other was,) a "holy city, the city of the great King," Ps. xlviii. 2, and Matt. v. 35; it had been so ever since God chose it to put his name there, and, as such, it being now rebuilt, it was afresh dedicated to God by the builders and inhabitants, in token of their acknowledgment that they were his tenants, and their desire that it might still be his, and that the property of it might never be [illegible]. What [illegible] their duty, easy and delightful, might be designed for God's [illegible]. They hereby put the city and its walls under the divine protection, owning that "unless the Lord kept the city," the walls were "built in 34 Judah, and Benjamin, and Shemaiah, and Jeremiah,

35 And certain of the priests' sons [l]with trumpets; namely, [m]Zechariah the son of Jonathan, the son of Shemaiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Michaiah, the son of Zaccur, the son of Asaph:

36 And his brethren, Shemaiah, and Azarael, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethaneel, and Judah, Hanani, with the [n]musical instruments of David the man of God, and [o]Ezra the scribe before them.

37 And at [p]the fountain gate, which was over against them, they went up by [q]the stairs of the city of David, at the going up of the wall, above the house of David, even unto the [r]water gate eastward.

38 And [s]the other company of them that gave thanks went over against them, and I after them, and the half of the people upon the wall, from beyond [t]the tower of the furnaces[7] even unto [u]the broad wall;

39 And from above [x]the gate of Ephraim, and above [y]the old gate, and above [z]the fish gate, and [a]the tower of Hananeel, and the tower of Meah, even unto the [b]sheep gate: and they stood still in [c]the prison gate.

40 So stood [d]the two companies of them that gave thanks in the house of God, and I, and the half of the rulers with me:

41 And the priests; Eliakim, Maaseiah, Miniamin, Michaiah, Elioenai, Zechariah, and Hananiah, [e]with trumpets;

42 And Maaseiah, and Shemaiah, and Eleazar, and Uzzi, and Jehohanan, and Malchijah, and Elam, and Ezer. And the singers [f]sang loud, with Jezrahiah their [g]overseer.

43 Also that day they [h]offered great sacrifices, and rejoiced: for [i]God had made them rejoice with great joy: [k]the wives also and the children rejoiced: so that [l]the joy of Jerusalem[8] was heard even afar off.

44 ¶ And at that time were [1]some appointed over [m]the chambers for the treasures, for the offerings, for the firstfruits, and for the tithes, to gather into them out of the fields of the cities the portions §of the law for the priests and Levites: for ‖Judah rejoiced for the priests and for [n]the Levites that *waited.

45 And both [o]the singers and the porters kept the ward of their God, and [p]the ward of the purification, according to the commandment of David, and of Solomon his son.

46 For in the days of David [q]and Asaph of old there were chief of the singers, and songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God.

CHAP. XIII.

Upon the reading of the law separation is made from the mixed multitude, 1. Nehemiah reformeth the offices in the house of God, 10.

ON that day *they read in the book of Moses in the †audience of the people; and therein was found written, that [a]the Ammonite and the [b]Moabite should not come into the congregation of God for ever;

2 Because they met not the children of Israel with bread and with water, but [c]hired Balaam against them, that he should curse them: howbeit [d]our God turned the curse into a blessing.

3 Now it came to pass, [e]when they had heard the law, [f]that they separated from Israel[1] all [g]the mixed multitude.

4 ¶ And before this, [h]Eliashib the priest, [i]having the oversight of the chamber of the house of our God, was [2]allied unto Tobiah;[2]

5 And he had prepared for him [k]a great chamber, where aforetime they laid the meat offerings, the frankincense, and the vessels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oil, ‖which was commanded to be given to the Levites, and the singers, and the porters; and the offerings of the priests.

6 But [l]in all this time was not I at Jerusalem: for in [m]the two and thirtieth year of Artaxerxes king of Babylon came I unto the king, and ‖after certain days *obtained I leave of the king:

7 And I came to Jerusalem, and [n]understood of the evil that Eliashib did for Tobiah, [o]in preparing him a chamber in the courts of the house of God.

8 And [p]it grieved me sore: therefore [q]I cast forth all the household stuff of Tobiah out of the chamber.

9 Then I commanded, and [r]they cleansed the chambers: and thither brought I again the vessels of the house of God, with the meat offering and the frankincense.

10 ¶ And I perceived that [s]the portions of the Levites had not been given them: for the Levites and the singers, that did the work, were fled every one[3] [t]to his field.

11 Then [u]contended I with the rulers, and said, [x]Why is the house of God forsaken? And I gathered them together, and set them in their †place.

12 Then [y]brought all Judah the tithe of the corn and the new wine and the oil unto the ‡treasuries.

vain." When this city was in possession of the Jebusites, they committed the guardianship of it to their gods, though they were blind and lame ones, 2 Sam. v. 4. With much more reason do the people of God commit it to his keeping, who is All-wise and Almighty. The superstitious founders of cities had an eye to the lucky position of the heavens; but these pious founders had an eye to God only, to his providence, not to fortune.

Levitical Dues.—Ver. 44. 1. Care is here taken for the collecting of these dues; they were modest, and would rather lose their right than call for it themselves; the people were many of them careless, and would not bring it, unless they were called upon; and therefore "some were appointed," whose office it should be to gather into the treasuries, "out of the fields of the cities, the portions of the law for the priests and Levites," that their portion might not be lost for want of being demanded. This is a piece of good service both to ministers and people, that the one may not come short of their maintenance, nor the other of their duty. 2. Care is taken that, being "gathered in," it might be duly "paid out," ver. 47. They gave the singers and porters their daily portion over and above what was due to them as Levites; for we may suppose that, when David and Solomon appointed them their work, ver. 45, 46, above what was required from them as Levites, they settled a fund for their further encouragement. Let those that labour more abundantly in the word and doctrine be counted worthy of this double honour. As for the other Levites, the tithes, here called "the holy things," were duly set apart for them, out of which they paid the priests their tithe, according to the law. Both are said to be "sanctified;" when what is contributed, either voluntary or by law, for the support of religion, and the maintenance of the ministry, is given with an eye to God and his honour, it is sanctified, and shall be accepted of him accordingly, and it will "cause the blessing to rest on the house," and all that is in it, Ezek. xliv. 30.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—The Lord raises up a succession of worshippers from age to age, who honour him by their "sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving:" and who derive instruction and encouragement from the examples and actions of those who have long before entered into their rest.—The believer should undertake nothing which he cannot, and does not dedicate to God, by seeking his direction and assistance in it, and his blessing upon it; by designing his glory, and by giving praise for success in all things: and whatever he possesses he should commit to the Lord's keeping and disposal, and use it according to his will.—But all that we sinners do must be purified by the blood of sprinkling, and by the grace of the Holy Spirit, or it cannot be acceptable unto God: and the whole church of God, which is "the lot of his inheritance," and the object of his choice and delight, being descended from fallen Adam, must be thus purified and rendered holy unto the Lord.—They who would be instrumental in the conversion of sinners, and the sanctification of believers, must begin with themselves: and when we "acknowledge God in all our ways," he will so prosper and comfort us, as often to cause us to rejoice with great joy.—If our families be trained up to join in the solemn worship of God, and in attendance on his word, we may hope that they will share our joys and privileges: and the prosperity of the church gladdens the hearts of all true believers. When their affections are thus lively, they will be disposed to love and rejoice in those ministers who are instrumental to their comfort, and to care for their suitable provision. But it is the wisdom of ministers to attend to their several duties, and not to be anxious about their interests; and then God will stir up the hearts of the people to supply them in a comfortable and creditable manner. This they may receive with songs of praise and thanksgiving, and need not fear sanctifying a portion, even of their portion, to the more immediate service of God, and the support of his cause.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. Nehemiah's Promptitude and Zeal in Rectifying Abuses.—Ver. 5, 6. Nehemiah was first commissioned by Artaxerxes in the twentieth year of his reign; and his journey to court took place in his thirty-second year; so that twelve years had elapsed, concerning which we have little account.—When Nehemiah was gone from Jerusalem, Eliashib seems to have invited Tobiah thither: and though all Moabites and Ammonites had been publicly excluded from the congregation, according to the law of God; yet the high priest admitted this unproselyted Ammonite, who was as bitter an enemy to Israel as Balak himself had been, even into the chambers of the temple; casting out thence the consecrated oblations, to make room for him, and probably forming him a sumptuous apartment, by throwing many of them into one!—This was as great a contempt of the Divine law, profanation of the temple, and disgrace of the priesthood, as could well be imagined. Ver. 7—9. Nehemiah is generally supposed to have been absent from Jerusalem only one year: but the great abuses which prevailed at his return favour the opinion of those who think that about five years intervened; and there is nothing in the text that militates against it: for the words rendered "after certain days," or, "at the end of days," do not necessarily signify "after one year," but may denote a longer time. At his return, he was greatly afflicted and displeased at what had taken place, and he soon exercised his authority, in the most decided manner, to clear the temple from such a profanation, and to purify the chambers, that they might be restored to their proper use. It is probable that Eliashib was dead before Nehemiah returned; and that Tobiah would not choose to appear at Jerusalem to see after his suries, [a]Shelemiah the priest, and Zadok the scribe, and of the Levites, [b]Pedaiah: and [g]next to them was Hanan the son of [c]Zaccur, the son of [d]Mattaniah: for they were [e]counted faithful, and [h]their office was [f]to distribute unto their brethren.

14 [g]Remember me,[4] O my God, concerning this, and wipe not out my good *deeds that I have done [h]for the house of my God, and for the [†]offices thereof.

15 ¶ In those days saw I in Judah some [i]treading wine-presses on the sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of [k]burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the sabbath-day: and [l]I testified against them in the day[5] wherein they sold victuals.

16 There dwelt [m]men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem.

17 Then [n]I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath-day?

18 [o]Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet [p]ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the sabbath.

19 And it came to pass, that when the gates of Jerusalem [q]began to be dark[6] before the sabbath, [r]I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the sabbath: and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the sabbath day.

20 So the merchants and sellers of all kind of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice.

21 Then [s]I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye [‡]about the wall? if ye do so again, [t]I will lay hands on you. From that time forth came they no more on the sabbath.

24 And their children spake half[7] in the speech of Ashdod, and [*]could not speak in the Jews' language, but according to the language of [†]each people.

25 And [e]I contended with them, [f]and [‡]cursed them, and [g]smote certain of them, and [h]plucked off their hair, and [i]made them swear by God, saying, [k]Ye shall not give your daughters unto their sons, nor take their daughters unto your sons, or for yourselves.

26 [l]Did not Solomon king of Israel sin by these things? [m]yet among many nations was there no king like him, who was beloved of his God, and God made him king over all Israel: nevertheless even him did outlandish women cause to sin.

27 [n]Shall we then hearken unto you to do all this great evil, to transgress against our God in marrying strange wives?

28 And one of the sons of [o]Joiada, the son of [p]Eliashib the high priest, was [q]son-in-law to [r]Sanballat the Horonite: therefore [s]I chased him from me.

29 [t]Remember them,[8] O my God, [§]because they have defiled the priesthood, and [u]the covenant of the priesthood, and of the Levites.

30 Thus [x]cleansed I them from all strangers, and [y]appointed the wards of the priests and the Levites, every one in his business;

31 And for [z]the wood-offering, at times appointed, and for the first-fruits. [a]Remember me, O my God, for good.

THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

THIS book, which takes its name from the principal character introduced in it, was most probably written by Mordecai, and inserted in the canon of Scripture by Ezra and his assistants, or by their successors; but there are various opinions among learned men on this subject. The Jews have always held the book of Esther in great veneration; and as the feast of Purim (ix. 26–32) is observed by them to this day, no reasonable doubt can be entertained concerning the authenticity of the narrative. Learned men differ also exceedingly about the time when it was written. It contains no prophecies, and it is not referred to in the New Testament. It is also very remarkable that there is no clear mention in it of any of the names by which the God of Israel is distinguished in the sacred oracles; yet it is most evidently intended, as well as admirably calculated, to illustrate the doctrine of Providence, and the methods and instruments by which the great Ruler of the world accomplishes His purposes, both of mercy and of judgment. Perhaps this omission of the names of God was designed. Facts well known concerning the worshippers of JEHOVAH, the plot formed for their extirpation, and the wonderful deliverance vouchsafed them, were thus simply stated, in order that every reader might judge for himself, whether these facts did not demonstrate that the God of the Jews was the great Ruler of the universe. Had this conclusion been urged on the Gentiles by a despised Jew, their prejudices might have been excited; let the simple narrative then speak for itself. Several additional chapters are found in the Apocrypha; but they never were in the Hebrew text, and the Jews never received them. They principally contain repetitions, or additions, intended to decorate the history, but which, in fact, destroy its simple unity and beauty; and some things in them cannot be reconciled with the times to which the history must relate. The preceding books form a specimen of the Lord's care of His church in Judea; this shows His favour to the nation at large. Many of those who continued in remote countries were blameable in that respect, yet He would not leave the nation in the hand of their enemies, or deprive them of His mercy and grace on that account.

furniture. Ver. 10—13. As the high priest had ventured profanely to appropriate the chambers of the temple, for the entertainment of an Ammonite; perhaps he had also sacrilegiously intercepted the revenues of the Levites for similar purposes; or the people were reluctant to pay their tithes, when so bad an use was made, or so little care was taken, of them. Thus the Levites were driven from their office, to get their living by cultivating the land, or by other secular employments; and the temple service, especially the psalmody, was interrupted.—The rulers, who had been left in trust, ought to have exerted their authority to prevent such mismanagement; but probably they had concurred in it, out of regard to their secular interests; and therefore Nehemiah called them to account for this misconduct. Malachi is supposed to have prophesied about this time, and he seems repeatedly to refer to these abuses. "It is a great artifice of the devil, by his instruments, to defraud the ministers of religion of their necessary maintenance, that he may thereby abolish religion itself."—(Wolphius, in Bp. Patrick.) Nehemiah, however, not only recalled the Levites, but having, it seems, without difficulty, induced the people to bring their tithes, he placed the distribution of them in the hands of faithful men, in whom all parties reposed confidence.—Scott.

SABBATH PROFANATION.—Ver. 15. The law of the Sabbath was very strict, and much insisted on; and with good reason, for religion is never in the throne, while Sabbaths are trodden under foot. But Nehemiah discovered even in Judah, among those to whom Sabbaths were given for a sign, this law wretchedly violated. His own eyes were his informers; magistrates, who are in care to discharge their duty aright, will, as much as may be, "see with their own eyes," and "accomplish a diligent search" to find out that which is evil. To his great grief, it appeared that there was a general profanation of the Sabbath, that holy day, even in Jerusalem, that holy city, which was so lately dedicated to God. 1. The husbandmen trod their wine presses, and brought home their corn on that day, ver. 15, though there was an express command, that, "in eating time, and in harvest time, they should rest" on the Sabbaths, Exod. xxxiv. 21, because then they might be tempted to take a greater liberty, and to fancy that God would indulge them in it. 2. The carriers "loaded their asses with all manner of burthens," and make no scruple of it, though there was a particular proviso in the law for the cattle resting, Deut. v. 14, and that they should "bear no burthen on the Sabbath-day, Jer. xvii. 21. 3. The hawkers, and pedlars, and petty chapmen, that were men of Tyre, that famous trading city, "sold all manner of ware" on the Sabbath-day, ver. 16; and the children of Judah and Jerusalem had so little grace as to buy of them, and so encourage them, making our Father's day a day of merchandise, contrary to the law of the fourth commandment, which forbids the "doing any manner of work." No wonder there was a general decay of religion, and corruption of manners, among this people, when they "forsook the sanctuary," and "profaned the Sabbath."

SABBATH-KEEPING.—1. Nehemiah ordered the gates of Jerusalem to be kept shut from the evening before the Sabbath to the morning after, and set his own servants (whose care, courage, and honesty he could confide in) to watch them, that no burthens should be brought in on the Sabbath-day, nor late the night before, nor early in the morning after, lest Sabbath-time should be trenched upon, ver. 19. Those that came in to worship in the courts of the temple were, no doubt, admitted to pass and repass, but none that came to sell goods, "they" were forced to "lodge without the city," ver. 20, where, no doubt, they wished the Sabbath were gone, that they might sell corn. 2. He threatened those who came with goods to the gates, who pressed hard for entrance, telling them, that, if they came again, he would certainly lay hands on them, ver. 21. This deterred them from coming any more. Note, If reformers will but put on resolution, more may be done toward the breaking of bad customs than they can imagine. Vice connived at is indeed a daring thing, and will bid defiance to counsel and reproof; but it may be made cowardly, and will be so, when magistrates make themselves a terror to it. "The king that sits on the throne of judgment scatters away all evil with his eyes." 3. He charged the Levites to take care about the due sanctifying of the Sabbath, that they should cleanse themselves in the first place, and so give a good example to the people, and "that they should" some of "them come and keep the gates," ver. 22. Because he and his servants must shortly return to court, he would leave this charge with some that might abide by it, that, not only when he was present, but in his absence, the Sabbath might be sanctified.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 15—31. The due observance of the Lord's-day forms an important object for the attention of those who would promote true godliness; and the Christian magistrate should take proper measures to prevent that sacred season from being profaned by labour, merchandise, or those occupations which subserve the luxury and pride of life. As nobles too commonly set the example both of breaking God's commandments, and of disregarding royal edicts, in this particular, they must first be contended with, and vigorously urged to do their duty. Persons in the higher orders of society, in general, little consider the effects of their misconduct: if they violate the holy day of God, others will assuredly imitate their impiety; and thus the floodgates of ungodliness and wickedness will be thrown open, which must bring the wrath of God on guilty nations.—Scott.

CHAP. I.

Ahasuerus maketh royal feasts, 1: he sends for Vashti his queen, who refuses to come, 10.

NOW it came to pass in the days of [a]Ahasuerus, (this is Ahasuerus which reigned [b]from India even unto Ethiopia,[1] over [c]an hundred and seven and twenty provinces:)

2 That in those days, when the king Ahasuerus [d]sat on the throne of his kingdom, which was in [e]Shushan the palace,

3 In the third year of his reign, [f]he made a feast unto all his princes, and his servants; the power [g]of Persia and Media, [h]the nobles and princes of the provinces, being before him:

4 When [i]he shewed [j]the riches[2] of his glorious kingdom and the honour of his [k]excellent majesty, many days, even an hundred and fourscore days.

5 And when these days were expired, the king made a feast unto all the people that were *present in Shushan the palace, both unto great and small, [l]seven days, in the court of the garden of the king's palace;

6 Where were [m]white, green, and †blue hangings,[3] fastened with cords of fine linen and purple to silver rings and pillars of marble: [n]the beds were of gold and silver, upon a pavement of ‡red, and blue, and white, and black marble.

7 And they gave them drink in [o]vessels of gold, (the vessels being diverse one from another,) and §royal wine in abundance, according to the ‖state of the king.

8 And the drinking was according to the law; [p]none did compel: for so the king had appointed to all [q]the officers of his house, that they should do according to every man's pleasure.

9 Also Vashti [r]the queen made a feast for the women, in the royal house which belonged to king Ahasuerus.

10 ¶ On the seventh day, when [s]the heart of the king was merry with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, [t]Harbona, Bigtha, and Abagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the seven *chamberlains that served in the presence of Ahasuerus the king,

11 To bring [u]Vashti the queen before the king with the crown royal, to shew the people and the princes her beauty: for she was †fair to look on.

12 But the queen Vashti [x]refused to come at the king's commandment ‡by his chamberlains: therefore [y]was the king very wroth, and his anger [z]burned in him.

13 ¶ Then the king said to [a]the wise men, which [b]knew the times, (for so was the king's manner[4] toward all that knew law and judgment:

14 And the next unto him was Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena, and Memucan, [c]the seven princes of Persia and Media, which [d]saw the king's face, and which sat the first in the kingdom;)

15 §What shall we do unto the queen Vashti, according to law, because she hath not performed the commandment of the king Ahasuerus by the chamberlains?

16 And Memucan[5] answered before the king and the princes, Vashti the queen hath not [e]done wrong to the king only, but also to all the princes, and to all the people that are in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus.

17 For this deed of the queen shall come abroad unto all women, so that they shall [f]despise their husbands in their eyes, when it shall be reported, The king Ahasuerus commanded Vashti the queen to be brought in before him, but she came not.

18 Likewise shall the ladies of Persia and Media say this day unto all the king's princes, which have heard of the deed of the queen. Thus shall there arise too much contempt[6] and wrath.

19 If ‖it please the king, let there go a royal commandment *from him, and let it be written among the laws of the Persians and the Medes, that †it be not altered, That Vashti come no more before king Ahasuerus; and let the king give her royal estate unto ‡another [g]that is better than she.

20 And when the king's decree which he shall make shall be published [h]throughout all his empire, (for it is great,) [i]all the wives shall give to their husbands honour, both to great and small.

21 And the saying §pleased the king and the princes; and the king did according to the word of Memucan:

22 For he sent letters into all the king's provinces, [j]into every province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language, [k]that every man should bear rule in his own house, and that ‖it should be published [l]according to the language of every people.

Out of the fair virgins a queen to be chosen.

AFTER these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased, [a]he remembered Vashti, and [b]what she had done, and what was decreed against her.

2 Then said the [c]king's servants, that ministered unto him, [d]Let there be fair young virgins[1] sought for the king:

the dominion of Ahasuerus. In the time of Darius and Cyrus there were but 120 provinces, Dan. vi. 1. Now there were 127, "from India to Ethiopia;" an overgrown kingdom, which in time would sink with its own weight, and, as usual, would lose its provinces as fast as it got them. If such vast power be put into a bad hand, it is able to do so much the more mischief; but if into a good hand, it is able to do so much the more good; Christ's kingdom is, or shall be far larger than this, when the kingdoms of the world shall all become his; and it shall be everlasting. 2. Of the great pomp and magnificence of his court. When he found himself fixed in his throne, the pride of his heart rising with the grandeur of his kingdom, he made a most extravagant feast, wherein he put himself to vast expense and trouble, only to "show the riches of his glorious kingdom, and the honour of his excellent majesty," ver. 4. This was vain glory, an affectation of pomp to no purpose at all; for none questioned the riches of his kingdom, nor offered to vie with him for honour. If he had showed the riches of his kingdom, and the honour of his majesty, as some of his successors did, in contributing largely toward the building of the temple, and the maintaining of the temple service, (Ezra vi. 8, vii. 22,) it would have turned to a much better account. Two feasts Ahasuerus made: (1.) One for his nobles and princes, which lasted 180 days, ver. 3, 4. Not that he feasted the same persons every day for all that time, but perhaps the nobles and princes of one province one day, of another province another day, while thus he and his constant attendants fared sumptuously every day. The Chaldee paraphrast, (who is very bold in his additions to the story of this book,) says that there had been a rebellion among his subjects, and that this feast was kept for joy of the quashing of it. (2.) Another was made for all the people, both "great and small," which lasted seven days; some one day, and some another; and, because no house would hold them, they were entertained "in the court of the garden," ver. 5. The hangings with which the several apartments were divided, or the tents which were there pitched for the company, were very fine and rich; so were the beds or benches on which they sat, and the pavement under their feet, ver. 6. Better is a dinner of herbs with quietness, and the enjoyment of one's self and a friend, than this banquet of wine, with all the noise and tumult that must needs attend it. 3. Of the good order which, in some respects, was kept there notwithstanding. We do not find this like Belshazzar's feast, in which dunghill gods were praised, and the vessels of the sanctuary profaned, Dan. v. 3, 4. Yet the Chaldean paraphrase says, that the vessels of the sanctuary were used in this feast to the great grief of the pious Jews. It was not like Herod's feast, which reserved a pro[illegible] the last dish.

Lessons and Improvement.—Ver. 8. Two things we may gather from the account here given of this feast, which are laudable. 1. That there was no "forcing of healths," nor urging of them. The drinking was "according to the law," probably some law lately made; "none did compel," no not by a continual proposing of it, (as Josephus explains it;) they did not send the glass about, but every man drank as he pleased; so that, if there were any that drank to excess, it was their own fault, a fault which few would commit, when the king's order put an honour upon sobriety. This caution of a heathen prince, even then when he would show his generosity, may shame many who are called "Christians," who think they do not sufficiently show their good housekeeping, nor bid their friends welcome, unless they make them drunk, and under pretence of sending the health round, send the sin round, and death with it. There is a wo to them that do so; let them read it, and tremble, Hab. ii. 15, 16. It is robbing men of their reason, their richest jewel, and making them fools, the greatest wrong that can be. 2. That there was no mixed dancing; for the gentlemen and ladies were entertained asunder, not as in Belshazzar's feast, whose wives and concubines drank with him, Dan. v. 2, or Herod's, whose daughter "danced before him." Vashti feasted the women in her own apartment; not openly in the court of the garden, but "in the royal house," ver. 9. Thus while the king showed the "honour of his majesty," she and her ladies showed the honour of their modesty, which is truly the majesty of the fair sex.—Henry.

Dismissal of Vashti.—Ver. 16—18. It is uncertain whether Memucan really deemed the queen's disobedience a dangerous precedent, while it remained unpunished, or whether he paid court to the king, by counselling him to follow his own humour, and by suggesting a plausible reason for so doing. He, however, argued that the queen's rank, and the notoriety and pertinacity of her disobedience, would encourage other women to despise the persons and authority of their husbands; which contempt in the women would excite the wrath of the men, and thus destroy domestic subordination and peace.—Yet if husbands had been careful not to act contemptibly, or to give foolish and improper commands, they might have ruled by reason and affection, without either such fatal consequences or violent measures. But despotism in civil government leads to despotism in domestic life: men imagine that there is no way to rule but by force and terror: and thus the superior relations become tyrants, and the inferior slaves, submitting by constraint, without either conviction or affection.—Scott.

CHAP. II. Esther.—Ver. 7. Concerning Esther, we must observe, Her original and character. 1. gather together all the fair young virgins unto Shushan the palace, to the house of the women, unto *the custody of [f]Hege the king's chamberlain, keeper of the women; and let [g]their things for purification be given them:

4 And let the maiden which pleaseth the king be queen instead of Vashti. And [h]the thing pleased the king; and he did so.

5 ¶ Now in [i]Shushan the palace there was a [k]certain Jew, whose name was Mordecai, [l]the son of Jair, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish, a Benjamite;

6 Who had been carried away from Jerusalem with the captivity[2] which had been carried away with [m]Jeconiah king of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away.

7 And he [†]brought up [n]Hadassah, that is, Esther, [o]his uncle's daughter: for she had neither father nor mother, and the maid was [‡]fair and beautiful; whom Mordecai, when her father and mother were dead, [p]took for his own daughter.

8 ¶ So it came to pass, when the king's commandment and his decree was heard, and when many maidens were gathered together unto Shushan the palace, to the custody of [q]Hegai, that Esther was brought also unto the king's house, to the custody of Hegai, keeper of the women.

9 And the maiden pleased him, and [r]she obtained kindness of him; and he speedily gave her [s]her things for purification, with such [§]things as belonged to her, and seven maidens which were meet to be given her, out of the king's house: and he [‖]preferred her and her maids unto the best place of the house of the women.

10 Esther [t]had not shewed her people[3] nor her kindred: [u]for Mordecai had charged her that she should not shew it.

11 And Mordecai [x]walked every day before the court of the women's house, to know *how Esther did, and what should become of her.

12 ¶ Now when every maid's turn was come [y]to go in to king Ahasuerus, after that she had been twelve months, according to the manner of the women, (for so were the days of their purifications accomplished, to wit, [z]six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and with other things for the purifying of the women;)

13 Then thus came every maiden unto the king; whatsoever she desired was given her, to go with her out of the house of the women unto the king's house.

14 In the evening she went, and on the morrow she returned into the second house of the women, to the custody of Shaashgaz, the king's chamberlain, which kept the concubines: she came in unto the king no more, except the king [a]delighted in her, and that [b]she were called by name.

15 ¶ Now when the turn of Esther, the daughter of Abihail the uncle of Mordecai, [c]who had taken her for his daughter, was come to go in unto the king, she required nothing but what Hegai the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed. And [d]Esther obtained favour in the sight of all them that looked upon her.

16 So Esther was taken unto king Ahasuerus into his house royal in [e]the tenth month, which is the month Tebeth, in [f]the seventh year of his reign.

17 And the king loved Esther above all the women, and she obtained grace and [†]favour [‡]in his sight more than all the virgins; [g]so that he set the royal crown[4] upon her head, and made her queen instead of Vashti.

18 Then the king [h]made a great feast unto all his princes and his servants, even Esther's feast; and he made a [§]release to the provinces, and [i]gave gifts according to the state of the king.

19 And when [k]the virgins were gathered together the second time,[5] then Mordecai [l]sat in the king's gate.

20 Esther [m]had not yet shewed her kindred, nor her people; as Mordecai had charged her: for Esther did the commandment of Mordecai, like as when she was brought up with him.

21 ¶ In those days, while Mordecai sat in the king's gate, two of the king's chamberlains, [n]Bigthan and Teresh, of those which kept the [‖]door, were wroth, [o]and sought to lay hand on the king Ahasuerus.

22 And [p]the thing was known to Mordecai,[6] who told it unto Esther the queen; and [q]Esther certified the king thereof in [r]Mordecai's name.

23 And when inquisition was made of the matter, it was found out; therefore they were both [s]hanged on a tree: and it was written in [t]the book of the chronicles before the king.

good," Jer. xxiv. 5. 2. She was an orphan, her father and mother were both dead, ver. 7; but when they had forsaken her, then the Lord took her up, Ps. xxvii. 10. When those whose unhappiness it is to be thus deprived of their parents in their childhood yet afterward come to be eminently pious and prosperous, we ought to take notice of it to the glory of that God, and his grace and providence, who has taken it among the titles of his honour, to be a "Father of the fatherless." 3. She was a beauty, "fair of form, good of countenance," so it is in the margin, ver. 7. Her wisdom and virtue were her greatest beauty, but it is an advantage to a diamond to be well set. 4. Mordecai, her cousin-german, was her guardian, "brought her up, and took her for his own daughter." The LXX say that he designed to make her his wife; if that were so, he was to be praised that he opposed not her better preferment. 5. Let God be acknowledged in raising up friends for the fatherless and motherless; let it be an encouragement to that pious instance of charity, that many who have taken care of the education of orphans have lived to see the good fruit of their care and pains, abundantly to their comfort. Dr. Lightfoot thinks that this Mordecai is the same with that mentioned, Ezra ii. 2, who went up to Jerusalem with the first, and helped forward the settlement of his people, until the building of the temple was stopped, and then went back to the Persian court, to see what service he could do them there.

MORDECAI.—Ver. 5. Mordecai being Esther's guardian or pro-parent, we are told, 1. How tender he was of her, as if she had been his own child, ver. 11; he walked before her door every day to know how she did, and what interest she had. Let those whose relations are thus cast upon them by divine providence, be thus kindly affectioned to them, and solicitous for them. 2. How respectful she was to him, though in relation she was his equal, yet in age and dependence being his inferior, she honoured him as her father, "did his commandment," ver. 20. This is an example to orphans: if they fall into the hands of those who love them and take care of them, let them make suitable returns of duty and affection. The less obliged their guardians were in duty to provide for them, the more obliged they are in gratitude to honour and obey their guardians. Here is an instance of Esther's obsequiousness to Mordecai, that she did not "show her people or her kindred," because Mordecai had charged her that she should not, ver. 10. He did not bid her deny her country, nor tell a lie to conceal her [illegible]; if he had, she must not have done it; but he bid her not proclaim it: all [illegible] not to be spoken at all times, though an untruth is not to be spoken at any [illegible] by Christian, and her parents being dead, all took her to be of [illegible] would have thought that a Jew, a captive, an orphan, was born to be a queen, an empress? Yet so it proved. Providence sometimes "raiseth up the poor out of the dust," to "set them among princes," 1 Sam. ii. 8. 1. The king's chamberlain "honoured" her, ver. 9, and was ready to serve her; wisdom and virtue will gain respect. They that make sure God's favour, shall find favour with man too, as far as it is good for them. All that looked upon Esther admired her, ver. 15, and concluded that she was the lady that would win the prize: and she did win it. 2. The king himself fell in love with her. She was not solicitous, as the rest of the maidens were, to set herself off with artificial beauty; she "required nothing" but just what was "appointed" her, ver. 15, and yet she was most acceptable. The more natural beauty is, the more agreeable. The king loved Esther above "all the women," ver. 17. Now he needed not to make any further trials, or take time to deliberate; he is soon determined "to set the royal crown upon her head, and make her queen," ver. 17. This was done in his seventh year, ver. 16; Vashti was divorced in his third year, chap. i. 3; so that he was four years without a queen. Notice is taken, (1.) Of the honours the king put upon Esther. He graced the solemnity of her coronation with a "royal feast," ver. 18, at which perhaps Esther, in compliance with the king, made a public appearance, which Vashti had refused to do; that she might have the praise of obedience in the same instance in which the other incurred the blot of disobedience. He also granted a "release to the provinces," either a remittance of the taxes in arrear, or an act of grace for criminals; as Pilate, at the feast, released a prisoner. This was to add to the joy. (2.) Of the deference Esther continued to pay to her former guardian; she still "did the commandment of Mordecai, as when she was brought up with him," ver. 20. Mordecai sat "in the king's gate," that was the height of his preferment; he was one of the porters or door-keepers of the court; whether he had this place before, or Esther obtained it for him, we are not told; but there he sat contentedly, and aimed no higher: and yet Esther, who was advanced to the throne, was observant of him.—Henry.

CHAP. III. HAMAN.—Ver. 1—15. 1. Haman makes a false and malicious representation of the Jews and their character to the king, ver. 8. The enemies of God's people could not give them such bad treatment as they do, if they did not first give them a bad name. He would have the king believe, (1.) That the Jews were a despicable people, and that it was not for his [illegible] "such a certain people there is," without name, as if nobody [illegible] what they were; "They are not incorporated, [illegible] fugitives and vagabonds [illegible] scandal of the places where cerning him. But Mordecai [f]bowed not, nor did him reverence.

3 Then the king's servants, which were in the king's gate, said unto Mordecai, [g]Why transgressest thou the king's commandment?

4 Now it came to pass, [h]when they spake daily unto him, and he hearkened not unto them, [i]that they told Haman, to see whether [k]Mordecai's matters would stand: for [l]he had told them that he was a Jew.[1]

5 And when Haman saw that Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence, then was Haman [m]full of wrath.

6 And he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone; for they had shewed him the people of Mordecai: wherefore Haman [n]sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai.

7 ¶ In [o]the first month, that is, the month Nisan, [p]in the twelfth year of king Ahasuerus, [q]they cast Pur, that is, the lot,[2] before Haman from day to day, and from month to month, to the twelfth month, that is, the month [r]Adar.

8 ¶ And Haman said unto king Ahasuerus, There is a certain people [s]scattered abroad, and dispersed among the people, in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and [t]their laws are diverse from all people, neither keep they the king's laws: therefore it is not *for the king's profit to suffer them.

9 If it please the king, let it be written †that they may be destroyed: and I will ‡pay [u]ten thousand talents of silver[3] to the hands of those that have the charge of the business, to bring it into the king's treasuries.

10 And the king [x]took his ring from his hand, and gave it unto Haman, the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, the Jews' §enemy.

11 And the king said unto Haman, The silver is given to thee, the people also, [y]to do with them as it seemeth good to thee.

12 Then were the king's ‖scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month, and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded, unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province [z]according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language; [a]in the name of king Ahasuerus was it written, and [b]sealed with the king's ring.[4]

13 And the letters were sent [c]by posts into all the king's provinces, to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish all Jews, [d]both young and old, little children and women, [e]in one day, even upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar, and to take [f]the spoil of them for a prey.

14 The [g]copy of the writing, for a commandment to be given in every province, was published unto all people, that they should be ready against that day.

15 The posts went out, being [h]hastened by the king's commandment, and the decree was given in Shushan the palace. And the king and Haman [i]sat down to drink,[5] but [k]the city Shushan was perplexed.

Mordecai and the Jews mourn, 1. Esther appointeth a fast; her resolution, &c., 15.

WHEN Mordecai perceived [a]all that was done, Mordecai [b]rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth [c]with ashes, and went out into the midst of the city, and [d]cried with a loud and a bitter cry;

2 And came even before the king's gate: for none might enter into the king's gate clothed with sackcloth.

3 And *in every province, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, there was [f]great mourning among the Jews, and fasting, and [g]weeping, and wailing; and *many lay in sackcloth and ashes.

4 ¶ So Esther's maids and her †chamberlains came and told it her.[1] Then was the queen exceedingly grieved; and she sent raiment to clothe Mordecai, and to take away his sackcloth from him; [h]but he received it not.

5 Then called Esther for Hatach, one of the king's chamberlains, whom he had ‡appointed to attend upon her, and gave him a commandment to Mordecai, [i]to know what it was, and why it was.

6 So Hatach went forth to Mordecai unto the street of the city, which was before the king's gate.

7 And Mordecai told him of [j]all that had happened unto him, and of the sum of the money that Haman had promised to pay to the king's treasuries for the Jews, to destroy them:

8 Also he gave him [k]the copy of the writing of the decree that was given at Shushan to destroy them, to shew it unto Esther, and to declare it unto her, and [l]to charge her that she should go in unto the king, [m]to make supplication unto him, and [n]to make request before him for her people.[2]

9 And Hatach came, and told Esther the words of Mordecai.

10 ¶ Again Esther spake unto Hatach, and gave him commandment unto Mordecai;

11 All the king's servants, and the people of the king's provinces, do know, that whosoever, whether man or woman,[3] shall come they live." (2.) That they were a dangerous people, and that it was not safe to harbour them. "They have laws and usages of their own, and conform not to the statutes of the kingdom, and the customs of the country; and therefore may be looked upon as disaffected to the government, and likely to infect others with their singularities, which may end in a rebellion." It is no new thing for the best of men to have such invidious characters as these given of them: if it be no sin to kill them, it is no sin to belie them. 2. He bids high for leave to "destroy them all," ver. 9. He knew there were many that hated the Jews, and would willingly fall upon them, if they might but have a commission; "'Let it be written,' therefore, 'that they may be destroyed;' give but orders for a general massacre of all the Jews, and Haman will undertake it shall be easily done;" if the king will gratify him in this matter, he will make him a present of "ten thousand talents," which shall be "paid into the king's treasuries." 3. He obtains what he desired, a full commission to do what he would with the Jews, ver. 10, 11. The king was so inattentive to business, and so bewitched with Haman, that he took no time to examine the truth of his allegations; but was as willing as Haman could wish, to believe the worst concerning the Jews, and therefore he gave them up into his hands, as lambs to the lion; "The people are thine, do with them as it seemeth good unto thee;" he does not say, "Kill them, slay them," (hoping Haman's own cooler thoughts would abate the rigour of that sentence, and induce him to sell them for slaves,) but, "Do what thou wilt with them." And so little did he consider how much he should lose in his tribute, and how much Haman would gain in the spoil, that he gave him withal the ten thousand talents; "The silver is thine." Such an implicit confidence likewise he had in Haman, and so perfectly had he abandoned all care of his kingdom, that he gave Haman his ring, his privy-seal, or sign-mannal, wherewith to confirm whatever edict he pleased to draw up to this purpose. Miserable is the kingdom that is at the disposal of such a head as this, which has one ear only, and a nose to be led by, but neither eyes nor brains, nor scarcely a tongue, of its own. 4. He then consults with his soothsayers to find out a lucky day for the designed massacre, ver. 7. The resolve was taken up in the first month, in the twelfth year of the king, when Esther had been his wife about five years; some day or other in that year must be pitched upon; and, as if he doubted not but that heaven would favour his design, and further it, he refers it to the lot, that is, to the divine providence, to choose the day for him; but that, in the decision, proved a better friend to the Jews than to him; for the lot fell upon the twelfth month, so that Mordecai and Esther had eleven months to turn them in, for the defeating of the design; or, if they could not, space would be left for the Jews to make their escape, and shift for their safety. Haman, though eager to have the Jews cut off, yet will submit to the laws of his superstition, and not anticipate the supposed fortunate day, no, not to gratify his impatient revenge.—Henry.

Practical Observations,—Ver. 1—6. The favourites of earthly princes have too often been distinguished by their folly, pride, and profligacy; but those of the King of heaven are endowed with wisdom and grace, and prepared for usefulness in their several situations.—The vanity and comparative worthlessness of earthly dignities and possessions are shown, by their being so commonly lavished upon the basest of the human species; "God having provided better things" for the objects of his special love.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. Mordecai's Grief.—Ver. 1—2. Mordecai cried bitterly, "rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth." He not only thus vented his grief, but proclaimed it, that all might take notice of it that he was not ashamed to own himself a friend to the Jews, and a fellow-sufferer with them, their "brother and companion in tribulation," how despicable and how odious soever they were now represented by Haman's faction. It was bravely done, thus publicly to espouse what he knew to be a righteous cause, and the cause of God, even then when it seemed a desperate and a sinking cause. Mordecai laid the danger to heart more than any, because he knew that Haman's spite was against him primarily, and that it was for his sake that the rest of the Jews were struck at; and therefore, though he did not repent of what some would call "his obstinacy," for he persisted in it, chap. v. 9, yet it troubled him greatly that his people should suffer for his scruples, which perhaps occasioned some of them to reflect upon him as too precise. But being able to appeal to God, that what he did he did from a principle of conscience, he could with comfort "commit his own cause," and that of his people, "to him that judgeth righteously." God will keep those that are exposed by the tenderness of their consciences. Notice is here taken of a law, that "none might enter into the king's gate clothed with sackcloth;" though the arbitrary power of their kings often, as now, set many a mourning, yet none must come near the king in a mourning dress, because he was not willing to hear the complaints of such. Nothing but what was gay and pleasant must appear at court, and every thing that was melancholy must be banished thence; all in king's palaces "wear soft clothing," Matt. xi. 8, not sackcloth.

Esther's Piety.—Ver. 15. Esther promised that she and her family would sanctify this fast in her apartment of the palace, for she might not come to their assemblies; her maids were either Jews, or so far proselytes, that they joined with her in her fasting and praying. Here is a good example of a mistress praying with her maids, and it is worthy to be imitated. Observe also, Those who are confined to privacy may join their prayers with those of the solemn assemblies of God's people; they that are absent in 12 And they told to Mordecai Esther's words.

13 Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, ˢThink not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews.

14 For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, ᵗ*then* shall there ‖enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place,⁴ but ᵘthou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth ˣwhether thou art come to the kingdom ʸfor such a time as this?

Esther, obtaining the king's favour, inviteth the king and Haman to a banquet, &c.

NOW it came to pass ᵃon the third day, that Esther put on her ᵇroyal apparel, and stood ᶜin the inner court[1] of the king's house, over against the king's house: and the king ᵈsat upon his royal throne in the royal house, over against the gate of the house.

2 And it was so, when the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, that °she obtained favour in his sight: and the king held out to Esther ᶠthe golden sceptre that was in his hand. So Esther drew near, and touched the top of the sceptre.

3 Then said the king unto her, ᵍWhat wilt thou, queen Esther? and what is thy request? it shall be even given thee ʰto the half of the kingdom.

4 And Esther answered, ⁱIf it seem good unto the king, let the king and Haman come this day unto ᵏthe banquet that I have prepared for him.

5 Then the king said, ˡCause Haman to make haste, that he may do as Esther hath said. So the king and Haman came to the banquet that Esther had prepared.

6 ¶ And ᵐthe king said unto Esther at the banquet of wine,² What is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? even to the half of the kingdom it shall be performed.

7 Then answered Esther, and said, My petition and my request is;

8 If I have found favour in the sight of the king, and if it please the king to grant my petition, and to *perform my request, let the king and Haman come to the banquet that I shall prepare for them,³ and I will do ᵘtomorrow as the king hath said.

9 ¶ Then went Haman forth that day, °joyful, and with a glad heart: but when Haman saw Mordecai in the king's gate, that ᵖhe stood not up, nor moved for him, ᑫhe was full of indignation against Mordecai.

10 Nevertheless Haman ʳrefrained himself: and when he came home, he sent and †called for his friends, and ˢZeresh his wife.

11 And Haman told them of ᵗthe glory of his riches, and ᵘthe multitude of his children, and all the things wherein the king had promoted him, and ˣhow he had advanced him above the princes and servants of the king.

12 Haman said moreover, Yea, Esther the queen did let no man come in with the king unto the banquet that she had prepared, but myself; and ʸtomorrow am I invited unto her also with the king.

13 Yet ᶻall this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate.⁴

14 ¶ Then ᵃsaid Zeresh his wife and all his friends unto him, ᵇLet a ‡gallows be made of fifty cubits high, and tomorrow ᶜspeak thou unto the king that Mordecai may be hanged thereon: then ᵈgo thou in merrily with the king unto the banquet. And °the thing pleased Haman; and ᶠhe caused the gallows to be made.

body may be present in spirit. Those who desire, and have the prayers of others for them, must not think that that will excuse them from praying for themselves. And she did this with the courage and resolution that became a queen: "When we have sought God in this matter, 'I will go in unto the king' to intercede for my people; 'I know it is not according to the king's law,' but it is according to God's law; and therefore, whatever comes of it, I will venture, and not count my life dear to me, so that I may serve God and his church, and 'if I perish, I perish,' I cannot lose my life in a better cause. Better do my duty, and die for my people, than shrink from my duty, and die with them:" she reasons as the lepers, 2 Kings vii. 4, "'If I sit still, I die;' if I venture, I may live, and be the life of my people; if the worst come to the worst," as we say, "I shall but die." Nothing venture, nothing win. She said not this in despair or passion, but in a holy resolution to do her duty, and trust God with the issue; welcome his holy will. In the apocryphal part of this book, chap. xiii. and xiv., we have Mordecai's prayer and Esther's upon this occasion, and both of them very particular and pertinent. In the sequel of the story, we shall find that God said not to this seed of Jacob, "Seek ye me in vain."—Henry.

CHAP. V. Esther's Prudence.—Ver. 4, 5. All the request she had to make to the king at this time was, that he would please to come to a banquet which she had prepared for him, and bring Haman along with him. Hereby, 1. She would intimate to him how much she valued his favour and company. Whatever she had to ask, that she desired above any thing, and would purchase at any rate. 2. She would try how he stood affected to her; for, if he should refuse this, it would be to no purpose as yet to present her other request. 3. She would endeavour to bring him into a pleasant humour, and soften his spirit, that he might with the more tenderness receive the impressions of the complaint she had to make to him. 4. She would please him by making court to Haman, his favourite, and inviting him to come, whose company she knew he loved, and whom she desired to have present when she made her complaint, for she would say nothing of him but what she durst say to his face. 5. She hoped at the banquet of wine to have a fairer and more favourable opportunity of presenting her petition. Wisdom is profitable to direct how to manage some men that are hard to deal with.

Haman's Pride and Chagrin.—Ver. 9. Haman was "full of indignation," and yet "refrained himself," ver. 10. Gladly would he have drawn his sword, and run Mordecai through for affronting him thus, but he hoped shortly to see him fall with all the Jews; and therefore, with much ado, prevailed with himself to forbear stabbing him. What a struggle had he in his own bosom between his anger which required Mordecai's death immediately, ("Oh that I had of his flesh; I cannot be satisfied!" Job xxxi. 31;) and his malice, which had determined to wait for the general massacre! Thus "thorns and snares are in the way of the froward." It made all his enjoyments sapless. This little affront which he received from Mordecai was the dead fly which spoiled all his pot of precious ointment; he owned it himself in the presence of his wife and friends, to the everlasting reproach of a proud and discontented mind, that he had no comfort in his estate, preferment, and family, as long as Mordecai lived, and had a place "in the king's gate," ver. 10—13. He took notice of his own riches and honours, the numerousness of his family, and the high posts to which he was advanced, that he was the darling of the prince, and the idol of the court; and "yet all this avails him nothing," as long as Mordecai is unhanged. Those that are disposed to be uneasy will never want something or other to be uneasy at. Such are proud men, that though they have much to their mind, if they have not all to their mind, it is as nothing to them. The thousandth part of what Haman had would serve to make a humble modest man as much of a happiness as he expects from this world; and yet Haman complains as passionately as if he had been sunk into the lowest degree of poverty and disgrace. —Henry.

CHAP. VI. Mordecai's Honour—Haman's Mortification.—Ver. 6—11. We may suppose that Haman was much pleased to be so speedily called into the king's chamber: but his request was prevented, by his advice being asked on a very different business. Probably the king was considering what good preferment was vacant, which might suit Mordecai, whom he should delight to honour and reward, as the preserver of his life: but he did not name the person; and Haman's thoughts were so engrossed about himself, that he could not think the king would honour any one above him, or would delight to honour any one beside him.—His excessive vanity, ambition, presumption, and ostentation, as well as the emptiness of his worthless mind, are illustrated by the honours which he chose. He must, forsooth, have the use of the king's own robe, and horse, and crown; one of the most noble princes must be his lackey, and his herald; and by proclamation it was to be made known, what delight the king had in honouring him! Perhaps Ahasuerus understood his meaning, and was disgusted at his exorbitant pretensions: and while he peremptorily commanded him to do all this to "Mordecai the Jew," he could scarcely help remembering the edict which Haman had obtained against that people. Haman, however, did not venture to object, or demur; his request for leave to hang Mordecai was adjourned sine die; and he was constrained to become page to a man comparatively obscure, whom he hated and contemned above all other men on earth, outward court of the king's house, [h] to speak unto the king to hang Mordecai on the gallows that he had prepared for him.

5 And the king's servants said unto him, Behold, Haman standeth in the court. And the king said, Let him come in.

6 So Haman came in. And the king said unto him, What shall be done unto the man [i] whom the king delighteth to honour? Now Haman thought in his heart, [k] To whom would the king delight to do honour more than to myself?

7 And Haman answered the king, For the man [§] whom the king delighteth to honour,

8 ¶ ‖ Let the royal apparel[2] be brought which the king useth to wear, and [k] the horse[3] that the king rideth upon, and the crown royal which is set upon his head:

10 Then the king said to Haman, [m] Make haste, and take the apparel and the horse, as thou hast said, and do even so to Mordecai the Jew, that sitteth at the king's gate: [†] let nothing fail of all that thou hast spoken.

11 Then [n] took Haman the apparel and the horse, [o] and arrayed Mordecai, and brought him on horseback through the street of the city, and proclaimed before him, Thus shall it be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

12 ¶ And Mordecai [p] came again to the king's gate. But Haman [q] hasted to his house mourning, and [r] having his head covered.

13 And Haman told [s] Zeresh his wife and all his friends every thing that had befallen him. Then [t] said his wise men, and Zeresh his wife, unto him, [u] If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, before whom thou hast begun to fall, thou shalt not prevail against him, [x] but shalt surely fall before him.

14 And while they were yet talking with him, came the king's chamberlains, and [y] hasted to bring Haman unto the banquet that Esther had prepared.

4 For [d] we are sold, I and my people, [†] to be destroyed, to be slain, and to perish. [e] But if we had been sold for bondmen and bondwomen, I had held my tongue, although [f] the enemy could not countervail the king's damage.

5 ¶ Then the king Ahasuerus answered and said unto Esther the queen, [g] Who is he, and where is he, [‡] that durst presume in his heart to do so?

6 And Esther said, [§] The adversary and enemy is [h] this wicked Haman. Then Haman [i] was afraid ‖ before the king and the queen.

7 ¶ And the king arising from the banquet of wine [j] in his wrath went into the palace garden: and [k] Haman stood up to make request for his life to Esther the queen; [l] for he saw that there was evil determined against him by the king.

8 Then the king returned out of the palace garden into the place of the banquet of wine; and Haman was fallen upon [m] the bed[2] whereon Esther was. Then said the king, Will he force the queen also [*] before me in the house? As the word went out of the king's mouth, they [n] covered Haman's face.[3]

9 And [o] Harbonah, [p] one of the chamberlains, said before the king, [q] Behold also, the [*] gallows fifty cubits high, which Haman had made for Mordecai, [r] who had spoken good for the king, standeth in the house of Haman. Then the king said, [s] Hang him thereon.

10 So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai.[4] [t] Then was the king's wrath pacified.

while this extraordinary honour was conferred on him! Imagination itself cannot devise a more painful mortification.—Scott.

Haman's Downfall.—Ver. 10—13. Haman's doom was, out of this event, read him by his wife and his friends: "If Mordecai be, as they say he is, 'of the seed of the Jews, before whom thou hast begun to fall,' though but in a point of honour, never expect to 'prevail against him,' for thou 'shalt surely fall before him,'" ver. 13. Miserable comforters are they all; they did not advise him to repent, and ask Mordecai's pardon for his bad design against him, but foretell his destiny as fatal and unavoidable. Two things they foresee, 1. That Haman would be disappointed in his enterprise against the Jews: "'Thou shalt not prevail,' to root out that people; Heaven plainly fights against thee." 2. That he himself would be destroyed: "Thou shalt surely fall before him." The contest between Michael and the dragon will not be a drawn battle, no, Haman must fall before Mordecai. Two things they ground their prognostications upon. (1.) This Mordecai is "of the seed of the Jews; feeble Jews," their enemies sometimes called them, but formidable Jews they sometimes found them. They are a holy seed, a praying seed, in covenant with God, and a seed that the Lord hath all along blessed, and therefore let not their enemies expect to triumph over them. (2.) Haman had begun to fall, and therefore he is certainly a gone man. It has been observed of great court favourites, that when once they have been frowned upon, they have fallen utterly, as fast as they rose; it is true of the church's enemies, that when God begins with them, he will make an end.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. Esther's Request.—Ver. 2—4. While the king repeatedly urged Esther to make her request, and, in language more expressive than before, promised to grant it, though it were to the value of half his kingdom, chap. iv. 4, 6; she, with the greatest modesty and respect, and in the most simple and affecting manner, besought him, that her own life might be spared, and the lives of her people, which were all involved in one common danger. Without complaining of his conduct in any degree, she stated, that she and her people had been sold as sheep for the slaughter; alluding to the money which Haman had offered to pay into the treasury for their destruction: she quoted the words of the unrighteous decree, "to be destroyed, to be slain, and to perish," as proving that her life, as well as those of the other Jews, was certainly in danger, chap. iii 13: and she added, that if they had been only sold for slaves, she would not have interposed; though the enemy could never have made up the loss which the king would have sustained, by thus oppressing his peaceable and industrious subjects. Some interpret the last clause to mean, that if the sufferings of the enslaved Jews, though extreme and undeserved, had not been likewise detrimental to the king's interest, Esther would have held her peace. The whole speech, however, was repleto with natural eloquence, and suited to affect and persuade the king.—Scott.

Retribution.—Ver. 10. The sentence is short, "Hang him thereon;" and the execution speedy. "So they hanged Haman on the gallows," ver. 10. See here, 1. Pride brought down. He that expected every one to do him reverence is now made an ignominious spectacle to the world, and himself sacrificed to justice, who disdained that less than a whole nation should be sacrificed to his revenge. 2. Persecution punished. Haman was, upon many accounts, a wicked man, but his enmity to God's church was his most provoking crime. 3. Mischief returned upon the person himself that contrived it; the "wicked snared in the work of his own hands," Ps. vii. 15, 16; ix. 15, 16. Haman is justly hanged on the very gallows he had unjustly prepared for Mordecai. If he had not set up that gallows, perhaps the king would not have thought of ordering him to be hanged; but if he rear a gallows for "the man whom the king delights to honour," the thought is very natural, that he should be ordered to try it himself, and see how it fits him, see how he likes it. The enemies of God's church have often been thus taken in their own craftiness. In the morning, Haman was designing himself for the robes, and Mordecai for the gallows; but the tables are turned; Mordecai has the crown, Haman the cross.—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. Mordecai's Advancement.—Ver. 1. The king makes him lord privy-seal in the room of Haman; all the trust he had reposed in him, and all the power he had given him, are here transferred to Mordecai; for the ring which he had taken from Haman, he gave to Mordecai, and made this trusty humble man as much his favourite, his confidant, and his agent, as ever that proud perfidious wretch was; a happy change he made of his bosom friend, and so, no doubt, he and his people soon found it. The queen makes him her steward, for the management of Haman's estate, and for getting and keeping possession of it. "She set Mordecai over the house of Haman." See the vanity of laying up treasure upon earth; he that "heapeth up riches knoweth not who shall gather them," Ps. xxxix. 6, not only "whether he shall be a wise man or a fool," Eccl. ii. 19, but whether he shall be a friend or an enemy. With what little pleasure, nay, with what constant vexation, would Haman have looked upon his estate, if he could have foreseen that Mordecai, the man he hated above all men in the world, should have "rule over all that wherein he had laboured," and thought that he showed himself wise! —Henry.

chief of Haman the Agagite, and his device that he had devised against the Jews.

4 Then the king [s]held out the golden sceptre toward Esther. So Esther arose, and stood before the king,

5 And said, If it please the king, [h]and if I have found favour in his sight, and the thing seem right before the king, and [i]I be pleasing in his eyes, let it be written to reverse[2] the †letters devised by Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, ‡which he wrote to destroy the Jews which are in all the king's provinces:

6 For [k]how can I [§]endure to see [l]the evil that shall come unto my people? or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?

7 ¶ Then the king Ahasuerus said unto Esther the queen, and to Mordecai the Jew, [m]Behold, I have given Esther the house of Haman, and [n]him they have hanged upon the gallows, because he laid his hand upon the Jews.

8 Write ye also for the Jews, as it liketh you, [o]in the king's name, and seal it with the king's ring: for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, [p]may no man reverse.

9 Then were [q]the king's scribes called at that time in the third month,[3] that is, the month Sivan, on the three and twentieth day thereof; and it was written according to all that Mordecai commanded, unto the Jews, [r]and to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces, which are from India unto Ethiopia, an hundred twenty and seven provinces, unto every province according to the writing thereof, and unto every people after their language, and to the Jews according to their writing, [s]and according to their language.

10 And he wrote [t]in the king Ahasuerus' name, and sealed it with the king's ring, and sent letters [u]by posts on horseback, and riders on mules, camels, and [x]young dromedaries;

11 Wherein the king granted the Jews which were in every city [y]to gather themselves together, and to stand for their life,[4] to destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish, all the power of the people and province, that would assault them, both little ones and women, [z]and to take the spoil of them for a prey,

12 Upon [a]one day, in all the provinces of king Ahasuerus, namely, [b]upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar.[5]

13 The copy of the writing for a commandment to be given in every province was *published unto all people, and that the Jews should be ready against that day to [c]avenge themselves on their enemies.

17 And in every province, and in every city, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, the Jews had joy and gladness, [k]a feast and a good day. And [l]many of the people of the land became Jews; [m]for the fear of the Jews fell upon them.

CHAP. IX.

The Jews slay their enemies, with the ten sons of Haman, 1. The two days of Purim are appointed as an annual festival, 20.

NOW [a]in the twelfth month, that is, the month Adar, on the thirteenth day of the same, when the king's commandment and his decree drew near to be put in execution, in the day that the enemies of the Jews [b]hoped to have power over them, ([c]though it was turned to the contrary, that the Jews had rule over them that hated them;)

2 The Jews [d]gathered themselves together in their cities, throughout all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, to lay hand on such [e]as sought their hurt: and no man could withstand them; for [f]the fear of them fell upon all people.

3 And all [g]the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and *officers[1] of the king, helped the Jews; because [h]the fear of Mordecai fell upon them.

4 For Mordecai was great in the king's house, and his fame went out throughout all the provinces: for this man Mordecai [k]waxed greater and greater.

5 Thus the Jews [l]smote all their enemies with [m]the stroke of the sword, and slaughter, and destruction,[2] and did †what they would unto those that hated them.

6 And in [n]Shushan the palace[3] the Jews slew and destroyed five hundred men.

7 And Parshandatha, and Dalphon, and Aspatha,

8 And Poratha, and Adalia, and Aridatha,

9 And Parmashta, and Arisai, and Aridai, and Vajezatha,

10 The [o]ten sons of Haman the son of Hammedatha, the [p]enemy of the Jews, slew they; but [q]on the spoil laid they not their hand.[4]

11 On that day the number of those that but another edict might counteract its operation, and that would also become irreversible: and Esther and Mordecai were allowed to frame one for the purpose, as explicit as they pleased. Thus, that most absurd law, or constitution, made it necessary to authorize a civil war throughout this vast empire; both parties acting by, and against, the king's authority, at the same time!—The maxim in our government, that "no act can be so framed, but that the same authority which enacted it may repeal it," is immensely more suited to the state of human nature: for no human wisdom can foresee all the effects of any regulation, till experience has evinced them. Ver. 11—13. This last decree evidently showed the king's intentions, though the former edict remained in force: so that they who assaulted the Jews were, in reality, though not formally, rebelling against his authority. The Jews were not allowed to assault their enemies: but they might legally assemble and combine in defending themselves, and slay any number of those who attacked them. As the children, women, and spoil, were included in Haman's decree, they were also mentioned in this: but the Jews did not avail themselves of the clause; neither did they take any spoil. Haman aimed at extermination, they only at self-defence. If this edict had not been granted, the Jews would have been punishable for taking previous measures in order to defend themselves; so that they could not have engaged with concert or prospect of success, in any measure for that purpose; and they who escaped the massacre would have been exposed as criminals to the sword of the magistrate, for resisting the execution of the law.—Scott.

Results of an Overruling Providence.—Ver. 17. Observe, When "the Jews had joy and gladness," then "many of the people of the land became Jews;" the holy cheerfulness of those that profess religion is a great ornament to their profession, and will invite and encourage others to be religious. The reason here given why so many became Jews at this time is, because "the fear of the Jews fell upon them." When they observed how wonderfully Divine Providence had owned them, and wrought for them in this critical juncture, 1. They thought them great, and those happy that were among them; and therefore they came over to them, as was foretold, Zech. viii. 23. "We will go with you, for we have heard," we have seen, "that God is with you, the Shield of your help, and the Sword of your excellency," Deut. xxxiii. 29. When the church prospers and is smiled upon, many will come in to it, that will be shy of it when it is in trouble. 2. They thought them formidable, and those miserable that were against them. They plainly saw, in Haman's fate, that if any offered injury to the Jews, it was at their peril; and therefore, for their own security, they joined themselves to them. It is folly to think of contending with the God of Israel, and therefore it is wisdom to think of submitting to him.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—Ver. 1—6. Many of those who most prosper in the world would have little alacrity in their pursuits, or joy in their possessions, if they could foresee to whom their riches would devolve, and what use would be made of them. It is, however, a good thing when, consistently with justice, that wealth, which has pampered pride and luxury, and increased insolence and oppression, is transferred to those who will improve it to the glory of God and the benefit of mankind.—No advancement should render us forgetful of our indigent relatives, or indifferent about the public good, and the peace and prosperity of the church. These especially should be dearer to us than life itself; and when we have obtained our requests for ourselves, we should be the more fervent in prayer for our brethren, and in using our influence, and venturing all consequences, for their good.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. A Day of Blood and Self-defence.—Ver. 5. So strangely were the Jews strengthened and animated, and their enemies weakened and dispirited, that none of those who had marked themselves for their destruction escaped, but they "smote them with the stroke of the sword." Particularly, 1. On the 13th day of the month Adar, they slew in the city Shushan 500 men, ver. 6, and the ten sons of Haman, ver. 10. The Jews, when, on the feast of Purim, they read this book of Esther, oblige themselves to read the names of Haman's ten sons all in one breath, without any pause, because they say that they were all killed together, and all gave up the ghost just in the same moment, (Buxt. Synag. Jud. c. 24.) The Chaldee paraphrase says, that when these ten were slain, Zeresh, with seventy more of his children, escaped, and afterward begged their bread from door to door. 2. On the 14th day they slew in Shushan 300 more, who had escaped the sword on the former day of execution, ver. 15. This Esther obtained leave of the king for them to do, for the greater terror of their enemies, and the utter crushing of that malignant party of men. The king had taken account of the numbers that were put to the sword the first day, ver. 11, and told Esther, ver. 12, and asked her what more she desired. "Nothing," says she, "but commission to do such another day's work." Esther surely was none of the blood-thirsty, none of those that delight in slaughter, but she had some very good reasons that moved her to make this request. She also desired that the dead bodies of Haman's ten sons might be hanged up on the gallows on which their father was hanged, for the greater disgrace of the family, and terror of the party, ver. 13, and it was done accordingly, ver. 14; it is supposed that they were hanged in chains, and left hanging for some time. 3. The Jews in the country kept to their orders, and slew no more of their enemies than what were slain the 13th day, which were in all, among all the provinces, 75,000, ver. 16. If all these were were slain in Shushan the palace [t]was brought before the king.

12 ¶ And the king said unto Esther the queen, The Jews have slain and destroyed five hundred men[s] in Shushan the palace, and the ten sons of Haman; what have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? now [r]what is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: or what is thy request further? and it shall be done.

13 Then said Esther, If it please the king, let it be granted to the Jews which are in Shushan to do to-morrow also [u]according unto this day's decree, and [x]let Haman's ten sons be hanged upon the gallows.

14 And the king commanded it so to be done; and the decree was given at Shushan; and they hanged Haman's ten sons.

15 For the Jews that were in Shushan [y]gathered themselves together, on the fourteenth day also of the month Adar, and slew three hundred men at Shushan; [z]but on the prey they laid not their hand.

16 But the other Jews, that were in the king's provinces, gathered themselves together, and [a]stood for their lives, and had rest from their enemies, and slew of their foes seventy and five thousand;[6] but they laid not their hands on the prey.

17 On the thirteenth day of the month Adar, and on the fourteenth day ‖of the same rested they, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

18 But the Jews that were at Shushan assembled together [b]on the thirteenth day thereof, and on the fourteenth thereof; and on the fifteenth day of the same they rested,[7] and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

19 Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwalled towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar a day of [c]gladness and feasting, and a good day, and of sending portions one to another.[8]

20 ¶ And Mordecai [d]wrote these things, and sent letters unto all the Jews that were [e]in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, both nigh and far;

21 To stablish this among them, that they should keep the fourteenth day of the month Adar, and the fifteenth day of the same, yearly,

22 As [f]the days wherein the Jews rested from their enemies, and the month which was turned unto them [g]from sorrow to joy, and from mourning into a good day: that they should make them days of feasting and joy, and of [h]sending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor.

23 And the Jews undertook to do as they had begun, and as Mordecai had written unto them:

24 Because Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, [i]the enemy of all the Jews, had devised against the Jews to destroy them, and had cast [k]Pur, that is, the lot, to [l]consume them, and to destroy them;

25 But [m]when Esther came before the king, he commanded by letters, that his wicked device which he devised against the Jews, should [n]return upon his own head, and that he and his sons should be hanged on the gallows.

26 Wherefore [o]they called these days Purim, after the name of [p]Pur. Therefore for all the words of [q]this letter, and of that which they had seen concerning this matter, and which had come unto them,

27 The Jews ordained, and took upon them, [r]and upon their seed, and upon [s]all such as joined themselves unto them, so as it should not [t]fail, that they would keep these two days, according to their writing, and according to their appointed time every year;

28 And that these days should be [u]remembered and kept throughout every generation, every family, every province, and every city; and that these days of Purim should not ‖fail from among the Jews,[9] nor [v]the memorial of them [w]perish from their seed.

29 Then Esther the queen, [x]the daughter of Abihail, and Mordecai the Jew, wrote with all [y]authority, to [z]confirm this second letter of Purim.

30 And he sent the letters unto all the Jews, to [a]the hundred twenty and seven provinces of the kingdom of Ahasuerus, with [b]words of peace and truth,

31 To confirm these days of Purim in their times appointed, according as Mordecai the Jew and Esther the queen had enjoined them, and as they decreed for [c]themselves [d]and for their seed, the matters of [e]the fastings and their cry.

32 And the decree of Esther confirmed these matters of Purim; and it was written in the book.

Amalekites, (as the Jews say,) surely now it was that the remembrance of Amalek was utterly put out, Exod. xvii. 14. However, that which justifies them in the execution of so many is, that they did it in their own just and necessary defence; they "stood for their lives," authorized to do so by the law of self-preservation, as well as by the king's decree.—Henry.

FEAST OF PURIM.—Ver. 21—32. These verses contain the institution of the feast of Purim, which the Jews observe to this day. When the second decree of Ahasuerus was published, they had in every place "joy, and gladness, a feast, and a good day." And when they prevailed in the contest in all parts of the empire, on the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, they with one common impulse observed the fourteenth as a festival, with joy and gladness. But the Jews at Shushan were, on that day likewise, engaged in conflict, and the fifteenth day of the month was their day of joy and festivity, ver. 17—19. Mordecai therefore wrote to his people in every place, proposing the observance of both these days annually, in commemoration of their deliverance, by both Jews and proselytes, throughout their dispersions, and to all future generations. And upon the receipt of these letters, the Jews everywhere consented to the proposal. Yet it seems that they afterwards grew negligent; and therefore a second letter was written, with all authority, by Esther and Mordecai, enjoining the observance: which was accompanied "with words of peace and truth," ver. 30; that is, with affectionate good wishes, prayers, and congratulations: and with wholesome counsels and instructions. The festival therefore was appointed by authority and by royal proclamation, yet under the direction and according to the mind of the Spirit of God. It was evidently proper to perpetuate the memory of so extraordinary a deliverance: and no doubt Esther and Mordecai did right in requiring the Jews, on this great occasion, thus to keep it in remembrance, and transmit the memorial of it to their posterity. It was thus appointed that these days should be spent in feasting and joy, in hospitality and liberality to the poor. But, as the prayers, which without doubt attended the fasting of the Jews in Shushan, are not mentioned; so we may be sure that praises and thanksgivings to God at first attended their feasting and rejoicing, though not recorded. Even to this day, the Jews are used to assemble, at the time appointed, in their synagogues, to read over this book of Esther, and to perform some acts of religious worship: but the feast has long since degenerated into a season of riot and excess. The word Purim signifies the [illegible] (being the plural of the word Pur,) in remembrance of the lots cast by Haman, by [illegible] day was deferred till time was allowed for defeating the whole design, and all [illegible] frustrated. The fastings, lamentations, and prayers, which preceded [illegible] were to be remembered with peculiar joy and gratitude, ver. 31. Some think it was intended, that the thirteenth day should be observed as a day of fasting and prayer, as an introduction to the festival; and the Jews at present profess to observe it as such: but the decree does not admit of this construction. Finally, the decree was added to this book of Esther, in which the history of these transactions was recorded, that the institution might never be forgotten.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—16. The obstinate enemies and persecutors of the church are often left to act in the most infatuated manner; being urged on by malice, in opposition to the most evident dictates of prudence. For the records of history show, that when the enemies of God's people "have hoped to have power over them," it has generally been "turned to the contrary," and they have gained the advantage "over them that hated them." Yet neither observation, nor experience, nor demonstration, can subdue the enmity of the carnal mind, which seizes every opportunity of exerting itself: and even the protection of the ruling powers, if not very decisive, has generally been found insufficient to repress the spirit of persecution; though men commonly fear the displeasure of a king, or of powerful courtiers, more than the wrath of almighty God.—Scott.

CHAP. X.—PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The concerns of the despised worshippers of God are deemed more important by the Spirit of inspiration, than the greatest exploits of the most illustrious monarch upon earth.—They, who enjoy the benefits of civil government, are reasonably required to contribute to the expense of it: but it is happy for the people when taxes are imposed with justice and equality; and the advancement of wise and good men forms the most honourable part of the conduct of powerful princes. Rulers should consult the advantage of all their peaceable subjects: but they are peculiarly required to seek the welfare of the church, by protecting it from oppression, and encouraging the worship and ordinances of God.—That greatness is truly honourable which is usefully employed: and when those fill exalted stations, who behave with humility and condescension, and who manifest a due regard to religion, and affection for their inferiors; they will be most likely to escape envy, and to be honoured and accepted by the multitude of their brethren.—Contentment, diligence, and fidelity in lower employments, form a hopeful presage of good conduct in more important and exalted situations: and though men of superior talents and excellency may for a season appear to be buried in obscurity; yet if the Lord have work for them to do, he will bring them forth to more extensive usefulness. We should be thankful for equitable and peaceful rulers and temporal privileges; but all earthly grandeur is passing away: may we then seek those [illegible] shall endure to all

BOOK OF JOB.

SOME learned men have employed much pains—ingeniously, but very unwarrantably—to interpret the Book of Job as an allegory. The prophet Ezekiel mentions Job, Noah, and Daniel, as three persons of eminent piety (xiv. 14, 20); and the apostle James illustrates the advantages of patience by the example of Job, as he had before done his doctrine of faith and works by the examples of Abraham and of Rahab (Jam. ii. 21-25; v. 11). No reasonable doubt, therefore, can remain that the narrative of this book is historical truth, though we may safely allow that, as the discourses of Job and his friends are recorded in poetical language, their sentiments and arguments alone are transmitted to us, and not the exact words which they used in conversation. But there is no sufficient ground for questioning whether the transactions relating to the world of spirits, good and evil, actually in substance occurred. It is indeed evident that this could not be known, except by revelation; but, as the book itself records several supernatural visions, and a glorious appearance of God himself speaking from the whirlwind, this creates no difficulty to those who consider it as true, and as a part of the sacred canon. As such the Jews have always regarded it, though not favourable to Job, because he was a Gentile—that is, not an Israelite, or descendant of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and St Paul's manner of quoting it, with "It is written," shews that he considered it as a part of the oracles of God (compare Job v. 13; 1 Cor. iii. 19). A very high antiquity is generally ascribed to this book; nay, some think it the most ancient work now extant in the world. The long life to which Job attained; the great remains of patriarchal religion in the land of Uz—the worship of the sun and moon being the only idolatry mentioned in it; and no express allusion being made to the Mosaic law, or the wonderful works of God towards Israel; with several peculiarities in the style and composition of the work—give sanction to this opinion. Some learned men, indeed, perceiving a similarity of sentiment between some parts of this book and passages in the Psalms and Proverbs, would assign it a much later origin; but wise and pious persons will often, without copying from each other, give the same instructions, and be of the same opinion; and it is at least as probable that David and Solomon alluded to the book of Job, as that the writer of that book alluded to their works, if any intended reference be supposed. Indeed, the date of the events which it records cannot be exactly ascertained; but it is very likely that Job was in his first prosperity between the time when Joseph died and the appearance of Moses in Pharaoh's court as Israel's deliverer; and the language used by God himself, that "there was none like him in all the earth," seems to give probability to this opinion; for there is no other eminent character mentioned in Scripture as flourishing during that period. It opens with an account of Job's piety and prosperity, the charge of hypocrisy and selfishness which Satan brought against him, and the permission which he obtained from God to reduce him to the deepest distress, as a trial of his integrity. It proceeds to relate how his former friends, witnessing his unprecedented misery, were led to condemn him as a wicked man. This gave rise to a warm controversy, whether heavy afflictions prove any person, who is apparently pious, to be a hypocrite. In disputing this point, the principles of true religion were argued from by all parties as undoubted truths, and many excellent things were spoken; but the whole had in it a sad mixture of human infirmity. When they could by no means come to an agreement upon the subject, Elihu, who had heard the debate, with great modesty and solemnity interfered; and, having first censured the other disputants for groundlessly condemning Job, he proceeded to reprove him for his improper eagerness in justifying himself, by which he had reflected on the justice of God. While he was discoursing, the Lord himself spake out of a whirlwind, and, by a discovery of his incomprehensible majesty and glory, made Job sensible of his presumption, and brought him to humble himself before Him as a vile and polluted sinner. This being effected, He justified Job from the charge of hypocrisy, and condemned the conduct and language of his friends; and having decided the controversy in favour of Job, He appointed him to sacrifice and intercede in their behalf, that they might be forgiven. The whole closes with an account of Job's deliverance, and redoubled prosperity, honour, and comfort.

CHAP. I.

The holiness, riches, and religious care of Job for his children, 1. Satan appearing before God, obtaineth leave to tempt him, 6.

THERE was a man in the land of [a]Uz, whose name was [b]Job; and that man was [c]perfect and upright, and [d]one that feared God, and eschewed evil.

2 And there were born unto him [e]seven sons and three daughters.

3 His [*]substance also was [f]seven thousand sheep, and three thousand camels, and five hundred yoke of oxen, and five hundred she-asses, and a very great [†]household; so that this man was the [g]greatest of all the [‡]men [h]of the east.[1]

4 And his sons went and feasted in their houses, every one his day;[2] and [i]sent and called for their three sisters to eat and to drink with them.

5 And it was so, when the days of their feasting were gone about, that Job sent and [k]sanctified them, and [l]rose up early in the morning, and [m]offered burnt-offerings [n]according to the number of them all: for Job said, [o]It may be that my sons have sinned, and [p]cursed God [q]in their hearts. [r]Thus did Job [s]continually.

6 ¶ Now []there was a day when [t] the sons of God [u]came to present themselves[3] before the LORD, and [‡]Satan [x]came also []among them.

7 And the LORD said unto Satan, [y]Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, [z]From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

8 And the LORD said unto Satan, Hast thou [†]considered [a]my servant Job, that there is [b]none like him in the earth, [c]a perfect and an [d]upright man, [e]one that feareth God, and [f]escheweth evil?

9 Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, [g]Doth Job fear God for nought?[5]

10 Hast not thou made [h]an hedge about him, and about his house, and [i]about all that he hath on every side? [k]thou hast blessed the work of his hands, and his [‡]substance is increased in the land.

11 But [l]put forth thine hand now, and [m]touch all that he hath, [§]and he will [n]curse thee to thy face.

12 And the LORD said unto Satan, [o]Behold, all that he hath is in thy [l]power; [p]only upon himself put not forth thine hand. [q]So Satan went forth from the presence of the LORD.

13 ¶ And there was a day [r]when his sons and his daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house:

CHAP. I. JOB.—Ver. 1. Job was a very good man, eminently pious, and better than his neighbours. "He was perfect and upright." This is intended to show us, not only what reputation he had among men, (that he was generally taken for an honest man,) but what was really his character; for it is the judgment of God concerning him, and we are sure that is according to truth. 1. Job was a religious man, one that "feared God," that is, worshipped him according to his will, and governed himself by the rules of the divine law in every thing. 2. He was sincere in his religion; he was perfect, not sinless; he himself owns, chap. ix. 20, "If I say I am perfect, I shall be proved perverse." But, having a respect to all God's commandments, aiming at perfection, he was really as good as he seemed to be, and did not dissemble in his profession of piety; his heart was sound, and his eye single. Sincerity is gospel perfection; I know no religion without it. 3. He was upright in his dealings both with God and man; was faithful to his promises, steady in his counsels, true to every trust reposed in him, and made conscience of all he said and did. See Isa. xxxiii. 15. Though he was not of Israel, he was indeed an "Israelite without guile." 4. The fear of God reigning in his heart was the principle that governed his whole conversation. That made him perfect and upright, inward and entire for God, universal and uniform in religion; that kept him close and constant to his duty. He "feared God," had a reverence for his majesty, a regard to his authority, and a dread of his wrath. 5. He dreaded the thought of doing what was wrong; with the utmost abhorrence and detestation, and with a constant care and watchfulness, he "eschewed evil," avoided all appearances of sin and approaches to it, and this "because of the fear of God," Neh. v. 15. "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil," Prov. viii. 13, and then, "by the fear of the Lord men depart from evil," Prov. xvi. 6. Job was a man who prospered greatly in this world, and made a considerable figure in his country. He was prosperous, and yet pious. Though it is hard and rare, it is not impossible, for "a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven:" with God, even this is possible, and by his grace the temptations of worldly wealth are not insuperable. He was pious, and his piety was a friend to his prosperity; for godliness has the promise of the life that now is. He was prosperous, and his prosperity put a lustre upon his piety, and gave him, who was so good, so much greater opportunity of doing good. The acts of his piety were grateful returns to God for the instances of his prosperity, and, in the abundance of the good things God gave him, he [illegible]

[illegible] AND REVIV.—Ver. 5. We may notice [illegible]

"Doth Job fear God for nought?" Observe, 1. How impatient the devil was of hearing Job praised, though it was God himself that praised him. Those are like the devil, who cannot endure that any body should be praised but themselves, but grudge at the just share of reputation others have, as Saul, 1 Sam. xviii. 5, &c., and the Pharisees, Matt. xxi. 15. 2. How much at a loss he was for something to object against him; he could not accuse him of any thing that was bad, and therefore charges him with by-ends in doing good. Had the one half of that been true, which his angry friends, in the heat of dispute, charged him with, chap. xv. 4, xxii. 5, Satan would, no doubt, have brought it against him now; but no such thing could be alleged, and therefore, 3. See how silly he censures him as a hypocrite; not asserting that he was so, but only asking, "Is he not so?" This is the common way of slanders, to suggest that, by way of query, which yet they have no reason to think is true, whisperers, backbiters! Note, It is not strange if those that are approved and accepted of God, be unjustly censured by the devil and his instruments; if they are otherwise unexceptionable, it is easy to charge them with hypocrisy, as Satan charged Job, and they have no way to clear themselves, but patiently to wait for the judgment of God. As there is nothing we should dread more than being hypocrites, so there is nothing we need dread less than being called and counted so without cause. 4. How unjustly he accuses him as mercenary, to prove him a hypocrite. It was a great truth that Job did not fear God for nought; he got well by it, for godliness is great gain: but it was a falsehood that he would not have feared God if he had not got this by it, as the event proved, Job's friends charged him with hypocrisy, because he was greatly afflicted; Satan, because he greatly prospered. It is no hard matter for those to calumniate that seek an occasion. It is not mercenary to look at the eternal recompense in our obedience: but to aim at temporal advantages in our religion, and to make it subservient to that, is spiritual idolatry, worshipping the creature more than the Creator, and is likely to end in a fatal apostacy; men cannot long "serve God and mammon."—Henry.

JOB'S AFFLICTION AND RESIGNATION.—Ver. 18, 19. This greatest affliction was reserved for the last, that it might drive Job desperate, when the hand of God seemed to be thus gone forth against him. 5 But [j]put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, and [k]he will curse thee to thy face.

6 And the LORD said unto Satan, [l]Behold, he is in thine hand; [†]but [m]save his life.

7 ¶ So went Satan forth from the presence of the LORD, and smote Job with sore boils[2] from the sole of his foot unto his crown.

8 And he took him a potsherd[3] to scrape himself withal; and he sat down among the ashes.

9 ¶ Then said his wife unto him, Dost thou still [t]retain thine integrity? [u]curse God, and die.

10 But he said unto her, Thou speakest as one of the foolish women[4] speaketh. What? [s]shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? [n]In all this did not Job sin with his lips.

11 ¶ Now when Job's three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, they came every one from his own place; Eliphaz the [o]Temanite,[5] and Bildad the [p]Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite: for they had made an appointment together to come [q]to mourn with him, and to [r]comfort him.

12 And when they lifted up their eyes afar off, and knew him not, [s]they lifted up their voice, and wept; and [t]they rent every one his mantle, and [u]sprinkled dust upon their heads toward heaven.

13 So they sat down with him upon the ground seven days and seven nights, and none spake a word unto him; for they saw that his grief was very great.

Job curseth the day of his birth, 1, and wisheth for the ease of death, 13: he complaineth of life because of his anguish, 20.

[a]AFTER this [b]opened Job his mouth, and [c]cursed his day.[1]

2 And Job [*]spake, and said,

3 [d]Let the day perish wherein I was born, and the night in which it was said, There is a man child conceived.

4 Let that day be [e]darkness; let not [f]God regard it from above; neither let the light shine upon it.

5 Let darkness and [g]the shadow of death [†]stain it; [h]let a cloud dwell upon it; let the blackness of the day terrify it.

6 As for that night, let darkness seize upon it; let it not be joined unto the days of the year, let it not come into the number of the months.

7 Lo, let that night be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein.

8 Let them curse it that curse the day, who are ready to raise up their mourning.

have driven most men distracted, or to have urged them to bitter complaints, or even desperate imprecations. When we have endeavoured to conceive aright of Job's circumstances, comforts, and prospects, on the morning of this eventful day, and of the dreadful change which took place before evening; and when we realize, from experience and observation, the feelings of the human heart under trials comparatively trivial, we shall be able to form some faint idea of the immense load which was at once laid upon this eminent servant of God; and the strength of his faith and grace appear in the manner in which he supported it. Ver. 20—22. Job acted as one who felt the weight of his afflictions, but did not sink under them, or lose possession of his soul. He expressed his inward anguish in the customary manner; and behaved, not like one furious or distracted, but with silent and reflecting sorrow. Having rent his mantle and shaved his head, he prostrated himself, and worshipped the Lord. He acknowledged, that he came into the world naked and indigent, and was no poorer, after all his losses, than when he was born. He recollected that he should soon leave the world, and restore his body to the earth, from which it was taken, as the common parent of all; and that he could carry nothing away with him. He had received all from the unmerited bounty of God, who had seen good to remand his substance and his children, a little before the time when otherwise he must have left them: and his body and soul, his faith and hope, his heavenly inheritance, and his God, still remained to him. Whoever were the instruments, the Lord was acknowledged as the author of his calamities; he had no heart to revile the Sabeans and Chaldeans, and others concerned in his losses. He was assured, in his judgment, whatever his feelings were, that God had a sovereign right to dispose of him and his as he pleased, and that he had done nothing inconsistent with his infinite wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness. Instead therefore of blaspheming, as Satan had predicted, he praised, blessed, and thanked the Lord, in faith, love, and humble resignation.—Thus far he stood the trial most honourably, and did not even utter a single expression, which in any measure reflected upon the divine conduct.—Scott.

CHAP. II. JOB'S DISEASE.—Ver. 7. The disease was very grievous with which Job was seized: Satan "smote him with boils, sore boils," all over him, from head to foot: with an "evil inflammation," so some render it; an erysipelas perhaps, in a higher degree. One boil, when it is gathering, is torment enough, and gives a man abundance of pain and uneasiness. What a condition was Job then in that had boils all over him, and no part free, and those of as raging a heat as the devil could make them, and, as it were, "set on fire of hell!" The small-pox is a very grievous and painful disease, and would be much more terrible than it is, but that we know the extremity of it ordinarily lasts but a few days; how grievous then was Job's disease, who was smitten all over with sore boils or grievous ulcers, which make him sick at heart, put him to exquisite torture, and so spread themselves over him, that he could lay himself no way for any ease. If at any time we be exercised with sore and grievous distempers, let us not think ourselves dealt with any otherwise than as God has sometimes dealt with the best of his saints and servants. We know not how much Satan may have a hand (by divine permission) in the diseases with which the children of men, and especially the children of God, are afflicted; what infections that prince of the air may spread, what inflammations may come from that fiery serpent. We read of one whom Satan had bound many years, Luke xiii. 16. Should God suffer that roaring lion to have his will against any of us, how miserable would he soon make us! Instead of healing salves he took a potsherd, a piece of a broken pitcher, "to scrape himself withal:" a very sad pass this poor man was come to. When a man is sick and sore, he may bear it the better, if he be well tended and carefully looked after; many rich people have, with a soft and tender hand, charitably ministered to the poor in such a condition as this; even Lazarus had some ease from the tongues of the dogs that came and "licked his sores;" but poor Job has no help afforded him.—Henry.

JOB'S WIFE.—Ver. 9. When Satan deprived Job of his children, he reserved his wife to be his tempter; perhaps knowing her to be a woman of an impatient spirit, who had great influence with her husband. She had shared the former afflictions with him, yet it is probable, that she was full of hard and rebellious thoughts, though she did not openly give vent to them. But when this additional calamity oppressed Job, she was driven to despair of help, and to upbraid him as preposterous in adhering to his religion, seeing God rewarded his fidelity and resignation with nothing but one dire calamity after another.—Scott.

CHAP. III. JOB'S ANGUISH AND DESPERATION.—Ver. 2—10. The wildness, absurdity, and impossibility of these wishes, denote the tempest of Job's soul: the cruelty to his mother, whose miserable death should, as he thought, have prevented his wretched life; and the ill-will to mankind, to whom he would bequeath such a dreadful day, may properly be noticed: but such exclamations, being the language of passion, cannot be measured by the standard of reason. They imply, however, an ungrateful contempt of God's gifts and rebellion against his will; and are utterly unbecoming a sinner under a dispensation of mercy, or a believer in a state of grace. But during inward darkness and temptation, Satan so stirs up the corruption of the heart, that the plainest truths

Eliphaz reproveth Job for want of religion, 1; he teacheth God's judgments to be not for the righteous, but for the wicked, 7; his fearful vision, to humble the excellencies of creatures before God, 12.

THEN [a]Eliphaz the Temanite [b]answered and said,

2 If we essay *to commune with thee, [c]wilt thou be grieved? but who can [†]withhold himself from speaking?

3 Behold, thou hast instructed many, and thou hast strengthened the weak hands.

4 Thy words have upholden him that was falling, and thou hast strengthened the [‡]feeble knees.

5 But now [§]it is come upon thee,[1] and [h]thou faintest; it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled.

6 Is not this thy fear, thy confidence, thy hope, and the uprightness of thy ways?

7 Remember, I pray thee, who ever perished, being innocent? or where were the righteous cut off?

8 Even as I have seen, they that plow iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same.

9 By the blast of God they perish, and by [§]the breath of his nostrils are they consumed.

16 It stood still, but I could not discern the form thereof: an image was before mine eyes, [‡]there was silence, and I heard a voice, saying,

17 Shall mortal man be more just than God? [c]shall a man be more pure than his Maker?

18 Behold, [f]he put no trust in his servants; [§]and his angels he charged with folly:

19 How much less in them that [g]dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust, which are [h]crushed before the moth?[4]

20 They are [l]destroyed [l]from morning to evening: [k]they perish for ever without any regarding it.

21 Doth not their excellency which is in them go away? they [l]die even without wisdom.

and promises are forgotten; former and present mercies are disregarded; future prospects are clouded; and the soul verges to despondency and blasphemy; yet is held back by the counteracting efficacy of divine grace, which subsists and operates, though it does not decidedly prevail; thus the more dreadful effects are prevented, and in time the soul recovers its composure.—Doubtless, Job was afterwards heartily ashamed of this language: but what must his judgment be of it now, in the full enjoyment of unchangeable felicity! Does he now curse the day of his birth? Does he now wish that he had never been born? His own reproof of his wife belonged also to himself, though not in the same degree; for on this occasion he spake as "one of the foolish men speak," and thus confirmed his friends in their unfavourable opinion of him. Ver. 11—19. When Job had exhausted his rhetoric in cursing the day of his birth, he next inquired, Why he did not die as soon as he was born? and thus he not only murmured against God for sparing his life; but expostulated with those who were present at his birth, as if now before him, for their tender attention to him in that helpless state! for had none nursed and suckled him when a new-born infant, he should not have lived to endure his present sufferings. The event of his afflictions, to himself and to the church, through successive ages, fully resolves his questions, and shows for what important purposes he was preserved.—Scott.

THE EQUALITY AND REPOSE OF THE GRAVE.—Ver. 17. 1. Those that now are troubled will there be out of the reach of trouble. "There the wicked cease from troubling:" when persecutors die, they can no longer persecute, their "hatred and envy are now perished." Herod had vexed the church, but when he became a prey for worms, he ceased from troubling. When the persecuted die, they are out of the danger of being any further troubled. Had Job been at rest in his grave, he had had no disturbance from the Sabeans and Chaldeans, none of all his enemies had created him any trouble. 2. Those that are now toiled, will there see the period of their toils; "there the weary are at rest:" heaven is more than a rest to the souls of the saints, but the grave is a rest to their bodies; their pilgrimage is a weary pilgrimage; sin and the world they are weary of; their services, sufferings, and expectations, they are wearied with; but in the grave they "rest from all their labours," Rev. xiv. 13; Isa. lvii. 2. They are easy there, and make no complaints; there believers sleep in Jesus. 3. Those that were here enslaved are there at liberty: death is the prisoner's discharge, the relief of the oppressed, and the servant's manumission, ver. 18. There the prisoners, though they walk not at large, yet they rest together, and are not put to work to grind in that prison-house. They are no more insulted and trampled upon, menaced and terrified by their cruel task-masters; "they hear not the voice of the oppressor."—Henry.

CHAP. IV. ELIPHAZ.—Ver. 2. Eliphaz introduced his discourse with apparent modesty: yet the abrupt manner in which he addressed Job showed that he was about to censure and reprove him. He purposed to converse with Job on the subject of his extraordinary sufferings, and his despondency under them; but he was afraid he would be grieved at his words. The case, however, was urgent: for who, in such circumstances, "could refrain from words?" This intimated that he thought Job extremely culpable, nay, in danger of final destruction. Ver. 3—6. It seems that Job had possessed a singular talent of giving seasonable counsel, and encouragement, as circumstances required. He knew how, by animating exhortations, to strengthen and comfort the desponding, that with renewed alacrity they might resume their work. He was also capable of giving suitable cautions to those who were ready to fall into sin, and to excite them to resist the temptation. And he had assiduously improved his talent; thus becoming a blessing to many. This Eliphaz allowed; and, along with due commendation, he might very properly have given Job a plain, but gentle, reproof, for his present impatience, and for seeming to abandon all hope. But his application of it was too harsh, and more suited to dishearten, and even exasperate, one in Job's situation, than to convince and humble him. He certainly made much too light of Job's afflictions, as if not much greater than those, under which he had comforted others. "It is come upon thee." "It toucheth thee." He seems to have also spoken too strongly of Job's impatience. He indeed bitterly complained, and uttered many vain and rebellious wishes: but he did not faint; for then he would have yielded to Satan's temptation, and followed the counsel of his wife. And in the question Eliphaz proposes, "Is this thy fear?" &c., he appears to have expressed himself in a manner suited to give Job the idea, that he considered his former reputation for piety, confidence in God, and integrity of life, as unmerited; seeing he had now cast off all reverence of God, and hope in his mercy; and had broken out into the language of despair and rebellion.

HIS VISION.—Ver. 12—16. Before there was any written word of God, believers received their knowledge in divine things either by tradition, or immediate revelation: and there is reason to conclude, that, when necessary, they were generally directed in the latter way, either personally, or by their brethren. Accordingly, Eliphaz, perhaps while meditating on the case of Job, had a remarkable vision, which he supposed to be a divine confirmation of his doctrine: for the instruction was brought to him unexpectedly, and seemed apposite to the present case, as far as he was enabled to receive it.—When musing in retirement on various subjects, or on former visions with which he had been favoured, at a time when others were asleep; he was suddenly seized with excessive consternation and amazement at what he saw and heard; for a spirit, or angel, pass-

CHAP. VI.

Job sheweth that his complaints are not causeless, 1; he wisheth for death, wherein he is assured of comfort, 8; he reproveth his friends of unkindness, 14.

BUT Job [a]answered and said,

2 Oh that my grief were [b]thoroughly weighed, and my calamity [*]laid in the balances together!

3 For now it would be [c]heavier than the sand of the sea: therefore [†]my words [d]are swallowed up.[1]

4 For [e]the arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poison whereof[2] [f]drinketh up my spirit: [g]the terrors of God do set themselves in array against me.

5 Doth the wild ass bray [‡]when he hath grass? or [h]loweth the ox over his fodder?

6 Can [i]that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any [k]taste in the white of an egg?

7 The things that my soul refused to touch are [l]as my sorrowful meat.

8 Oh that I might have my request; and that God would grant me [§]the thing that I long for!

9 Even [m]that it would please God to destroy me; [n]that he would let loose his hand, and cut me off!

10 Then [o]should I yet have comfort; yea, [p]I would harden myself in sorrow: [q]let him not spare; for I [r]have not concealed the words of [s]the Holy One.

11 What is my strength, that I should hope? and what is mine end, that I should prolong my life?

12 Is my strength the strength of stones? or is my flesh [t]of brass?

13 [u]Is not my help in me? [x]and is wisdom driven quite from me?

14 To [y]him that is afflicted pity should be shewed from his friend; but he forsaketh the fear of the Almighty.

15 [a]My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, and [b]as the stream of brooks they pass away;

16 Which are blackish by reason of the ice, and wherein the snow is hid:

17 What time they wax warm, they [*]vanish: [†]when it is hot, they are consumed out of their place.

18 The paths of their way are turned aside;[3] they go to nothing, and perish.

19 The troops of [c]Tema looked, the companies of [d]Sheba [4] waited for them.

20 They [e]were confounded, because they had hoped: they came thither, and were ashamed.

21 For now [‡]ye are [§]nothing; ye see my casting down, and are afraid.

CHAP. V. SOURCE OF AFFLICTION.—Ver. 6, 7. No affliction comes by chance, nor is to be attributed to second causes. It "doth not come forth of the dust," nor "spring out of the ground," as the grass doth, ver. 6. It doth not come of course, at certain seasons of the year, as natural productions do, by a chain of second causes. The proportion between prosperity and adversity is not so exactly observed by Providence, as that between day and night, summer and winter, but according to the will and counsel of God, when and as he thinks fit. Some read it, "Sin comes not forth of the dust, nor iniquity out of the ground." If men be bad, they must not lay the blame upon the soil, the climate, or the stars, but on themselves. "If thou scornest, thou alone shall bear it." We must not attribute our afflictions to fortune, for they are from God, nor our sins to fate, for they are from ourselves; so that, whatever trouble we are in, we must own that God sends it upon us, and we procure it to ourselves; the former is a reason why we should be very patient, the latter why we should be very penitent, when we are afflicted. Trouble and affliction are what we have all reason to expect in this world. "Man is born to trouble," ver. 7, not as man, (had he kept his innocency, he had been born to pleasure,) but as sinful man, as "born of a woman," chap. xiv. 1, who was in the transgression. Man is born in sin, and therefore born to trouble. Even those that are born to honour and estate, yet are born to trouble in the flesh. In our fallen state, it is become natural to us to sin, and the natural consequence of that, is affliction, Rom. v. 12. There is nothing in this world we are born to, and can truly call our own, but sin and trouble; both are as the sparks that fly upward. Actual transgressions are the sparks that fly out of the furnace of original corruption.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 17—27. "Happy is the man whom God correcteth!" We should therefore consider our afflictions as so many kind warnings to examine ourselves, confess our sins, seek mercy from God, and walk more diligently in his ways: we should humble ourselves before him, and neither despise his rod, nor seek help or relief from any one else. He alone can effectually remove temporal afflictions, and give peace to the wounded conscience, or relief to the troubled spirit. And when we have found pardon of sin, peace with God, and deliverance from the power of sin, we may without reserve venture our all in his hands. He will provide for our real wants, and [illegible] in the way of duty, so that no evil can hurt us: and deliver us from all the [illegible] he may please to prove us. Our reputations may be torn by the scourge of the slanderer's tongue; but he will hide us from the effects of such accusers, and clear up our characters in due time. Our habitations, families, and the time and circumstances of our death, may be safely trusted to him; all creatures shall be instruments of good to us, though perhaps contrary to their nature or intention; all events will benefit us; and we may smile when others tremble. We may go out and come in, lie down and rise up, without distrustful fear, assured of the special care of heaven, till the Lord see good to call us home. We are not authorized to expect great wealth, long life, flourishing families, or exemption from tribulations: but we are assured that all will be ordered in the best manner possible, and that we shall not be summoned by death till we are ripe for glory, and have lived as long as it is good for us in this world. This has been the confidence, observation, and experience of godly men, in all ages; may we hear it, and know it for our good!—Scott.

CHAP. VI. JOB'S COMPLAINT.—Ver. 4. Poor Job sadly complains here, 1. Of what he felt: "The arrows of the Almighty are within me." It was not so much the troubles themselves he was under that put him into this confusion, his poverty, disgrace, and bodily pain; that which cut him to the heart, and put him into this agitation, was, to think that the God he loved, and served, had brought all this upon him, and laid him under these marks of his displeasure. Note, Trouble of mind is the sorest trouble: "a wounded spirit who can bear?" Whatever burthen or affliction, in body or estate, God is pleased to lay upon us, we may well afford to submit to it as long as he continues to us the use of our reason, and the peace of our consciences; but if, in either of these, we be disturbed, our case is bad indeed, and very pitiable. The way to prevent God's fiery darts of trouble is, with the shield of faith, to quench Satan's fiery darts of temptation. Observe, He calls them the "arrows of the Almighty;" for it is an instance of the power of God above that of any man, that he can with his arrows reach the soul. He that made it can make his sword to approach to it. The poison or heat of these arrows is said to drink up his spirit, because it disturbed his reason, shook his resolution, exhausted his vigour, and threatened his life; and therefore his passionate expressions, though they could not be justified, yet might be excused. 2. Of what he feared. He saw himself charged by the terrors of God, as by an army set in battle-array, and surrounded by them. God, by his terrors, fought against him: as he had no comfort when he retired inward into his own bosom, so he had none when he looked upward toward Heaven. He that used to be encouraged with the consolations of God, not only wanted them, but was pursued with the [illegible] God.

26 Do ye imagine to reprove words, and the speeches of one that is desperate, which are as wind?

CHAP. VII.

Job excuseth his desire of death, by representing the vanity of his life, 1; he complaineth of his own restlessness, and God's watchfulness, 12.

IS [a]there not *an appointed time to man upon earth? are not his days also [b]like the days of an hireling?

2 As a servant [†]earnestly desireth [c]the shadow, and as [d]an hireling looketh for the reward of his work:

3 So am I made to possess [e]months of vanity, and wearisome nights are appointed to me.

4 When I lie down,[1] I say, [f]When shall I arise, and [‡]the night be gone? and I am full of [g]tossings to and fro unto the dawning of the day.

5 My [h]flesh is clothed with worms and clods of dust; my skin is broken,[2] and become [i]loathsome.

6 My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope.

7 Oh [m]remember that [n]my life is wind: mine eye shall [s]no more see good.

8 The [o]eye of him that hath seen me shall see me no more: [p]thine eyes are upon me, and [l]I am not.

9 As [q]the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away: so [r]he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more.

10 He [s]shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more.

11 Therefore [t]I will not refrain my mouth; I will speak in [u]the anguish of my spirit; I will complain in [x]the bitterness of my soul.

Emblem of Disappointment.—The similitude is very elegant, ver. 15—20. 1. The pretensions of false comforters are fitly compared to the great show which the brooks make, when they are swelled with the waters of a land-flood, by the melting of the ice and snow, which makes them blackish or muddy, ver. 16. 2. His expectations from them, which their coming so solemnly to comfort him had raised, he compares to the expectation which the weary thirsty travellers have of finding water in the summer there, where they have often seen it in great abundance in the winter, ver. 19. "The troops of Tema and Sheba," the caravans of the merchants of those countries, whose road lay through the deserts of Arabia, looked and waited for a supply of water from those brooks: "Hard by here," says one, "A little further," says another, "when I last travelled this way, there was water enough, we shall have that to refresh us." Where we have met with relief and comfort, we are apt to expect it again; and yet it does not follow: for, 3. The disappointment of his expectation is here compared to the confusion which seizes the poor travellers, when they find heaps of sand where they expected floods of water. In the winter, when they were not thirsty, there was water enough; every one will applaud and admire those that are full and in prosperity: but, in the heat of summer, when they needed water, then it failed them, it was consumed, ver. 17, it was turned aside, ver. 18. When those who are rich and high, are sunk and impoverished, and stand in need of comfort, then those who before gathered about them, stand aloof from them, who before commended them, are forward to run them down; thus they who raise their expectations high from the creature, will find it fail them then when it should help them; whereas they who make God their confidence, have help "in the time of need," Heb. iv. 16. They who make gold their hope, sooner or later will be ashamed of it, and of their confidence in it, Ezek. vii. 19; and the greater their confidence was, the greater their shame will be; "They were confounded because they had hoped," ver. 20. We prepare confusion for ourselves by our vain hopes: the reeds break under us, because we lean upon them. If we build a house upon the sand, we shall certainly be confounded, for it will fall in the storm, and we must thank ourselves for being such fools to expect it would stand. We are not deceived unless we deceive ourselves.—Henry.

Chap. VII. Job's Reflection on his State.—Ver. 7. Observe, 1. The pious reflections Job makes upon his own life and death. Such plain truths as these concerning the [illegible] vanity of life, the unavoidableness and irredeemableness of death, then do [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that are seen: that are temporal. The eye of the body must be closed, and shall no more see good, the good which most men set their hearts upon, for their cry is, "Who will make us to see good?" Ps. iv. 6. If we be such fools as to place our happiness in visible good things, what will become of us when they shall be for ever hid from our eyes, and we shall no more see good? Let us therefore live by that faith which is the substance and evidence of things not seen. 8. That we must then remove to an invisible world; "the eye of him that hath" here "seen me, shall see me no more" there. It is Adar—an unseen state, ver. 8. Death removes our lovers and friends into darkness, Ps. lxxxviii. 18, and will shortly remove us out of their sight; when we "go hence, we shall be seen no more," Ps. xxxix. 13, but go to converse with the things that are not seen, that are eternal. 4. That when we are once removed to another world, we must never return to this. There is constant passing from this world to the other; but Vestigia nulla retrorsum—There is no repassing. "Therefore, Lord, show me kindness while I am here, for I shall return no more to receive kindness in this world." Or, "Therefore, Lord, kindly ease me by death, for that will be a perpetual ease, I shall return no more to the calamities of this life." When we are dead, we are gone, to return no more. (1.) "From" our house "under ground," ver. 9. "He that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more," until the general resurrection; shall come up no more to his place in this world. Dying is work that is to be done but once, and therefore it had need be well done: an error there is past retrieve. This is illustrated by the blotting out and scattering of a cloud. It is consumed, and vanisheth away, is resolved into air, and never knits again; other clouds arise, but the same cloud never returns: so a new generation of the children of men is raised up, but the former generation is quite consumed, and vanishes away. When we see a cloud which looks great, as if it would eclipse the sun and drown the earth, of a sudden dispersed and disappearing, let us say, "Just such a thing is the life of man; it is 'a vapour that appears for a little while and then vanishes away.'" (2.) To return no more to our house "above ground," ver. 10. He shall return no more to his house, to the possession and enjoyment of it, to the business and delights of it: others will take possession and keep it, till they also resign to another generation. The rich man in hell desired Lazarus might be sent to his house, knowing it was to no purpose to ask that he might have leave to go himself. Glorified saints shall return no more to the cares, and burthens, and sorrows of their house; nor damned sinners to the [illegible] and pleasures of their house.—Henry.

CHAP. IX.

Job acknowledges and celebrates God's justice, wisdom, power, and wonderful works, 1. He disclaims all attempts to justify himself, 14; but insists that a man's innocency should not be judged of by what befalls him in this world, 22. He alleges his sufferings, but will not presume to dispute with the Author of them, 25.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 I know it is so of a truth: but [e]how should man be just [*]with God?

3 If [b]he will contend with him, [c]he cannot answer him one of a thousand.[1]

4 He is [d]wise in heart, and mighty in strength: [e]who hath hardened himself against him, and hath prospered?

14 How much less shall I answer him, and choose out my words to reason with him?

15 Whom, [b]though I were righteous, yet would I not answer, but I would make supplication to my judge.

16 If I had called, and he had answered me; yet would I not believe that he had hearkened unto my voice.

17 For [g]he breaketh me with a tempest, and [h]multiplieth my wounds [i]without cause.

him, though not for them: but many think he designed to warn him, by the example of sudden vengeance thus set before him. It was, however, very unfeeling thus to introduce so distressing a subject; and still more to intimate that his children had been cut off for their sins, and had perished in them. The language also in which Bildad conveys his good counsel seems to imply, that Job's integrity and piety must at least remain dubious, unless manifested by his returning prosperity; whereas, had he died of his disease, or worn out many years in penury and pain, it would have been no just impeachment of his character, especially if he had recovered the composure of his mind, in submission to the will of God. It was right, however, to exhort Job without delay to seek and pray unto God; and to encourage him to hope for the recovery of his health and comforts, from the goodness of the Almighty; who was able to raise him from very small beginnings to a great increase of wealth, honour, and happiness. Ver. 8—10. Job had slighted Eliphaz's discourse as insipid, and his arguments as inconclusive. Bildad therefore allowed that, by reason of the comparative shortness of their lives, they did not know so much as their fathers did, who had had longer time for making observations, and could speak more decidedly from their own heart or experience. To their testimony, therefore, he appealed, and desired Job to bestow pains to examine the traditions or records which they had of their sentiments. Some think that Bildad, being descended from Abraham by Keturah, had especial reference to the eminent piety and prosperity of that patriarch.—It has been observed that Job and his friends seem to have possessed all that superiority of knowledge on every useful subject, especially on things relating to true religion, which has been groundlessly ascribed to the Egyptians, &c.; and that they traced this knowledge back to the tradition of the fathers or patriarchs; that is, to traditional revelation. Ver. 11—19. It seems to have been Bildad's design, in this passage, to represent by various similitudes, the apparent piety and the fading prosperity of the hypocrite; and to insinuate that this was applicable to the case of Job. A rush or flag growing by the river's side, or in a fenny soil, flourishes when well watered; but when the mire and water fail through drought, it needs not be cut down, but withers of itself more speedily than other herbs. Thus the hypocrite's professed religion and confidence in God are maintained while worldly interests nourish them; but they come to nothing when these supports fail. Having no root of faith and grace, his piety dies away in persecution or tribulation: and, in like manner, God may often expose his hypocrisy, by taking away his prosperity. This, indeed, is the proper emblem of all those who forget God; but especially of the hypocrite.—Scott.

course of nature, and turns back its streams, ver. 5—7. By the common law of nature, the mountains are settled, and are therefore called "everlasting mountains;" the earth is established, and cannot be removed, Ps. xciii. 1, and the pillars thereof are immoveably fixed, the sun rises in its season, and the stars shed their influences on this lower world; but, when God pleases, he can not only drive out of the common track, but invert the order, and change the law, of nature. 1. Nothing more firm than the mountains; when we speak of removing mountains, we mean that which is impossible; yet the divine power can make them change their seat; he removes them, and they know not; removes them whether they will or no; he can make them lower their heads; he can level them, and overturn them in his anger; he can spread the mountains as easily as the husbandman spreads the mole-hills, be they ever so high, and large, and rocky. Men have much ado to pass over them: but God, when he pleases, can make them pass away. He made Sinai shake, Ps. lxviii. 8. The "hills skipped," Ps. cxiv. 4. The "everlasting mountains were scattered," Hab. iii. 6. 2. Nothing more fixed than the earth on its axle-tree; yet God can, when he pleases, shake that out of its place, heave it off its centre, and make even its pillars to tremble; what seemed to support it, will itself need suport, when God gives it a shock. See how much we are indebted to God's patience; God has power enough to shake the earth from under that guilty race of mankind, which makes it groan under the burthen of sin, and so to "shake the wicked out of it," chap. xxxviii. 13, yet he continues the earth, and man upon it, and makes it not still, as once, to swallow up the rebels. 3. Nothing more constant than the rising sun, it never misses its appointed time; yet God, when he pleases, can suspend it. He that at first commanded it to rise, can countermand it. Once the sun was bid to stand, and another time to retreat, to show that it is still under the check of its great Creator. Thus great is God's power; and how great then is his goodness, which causes his sun to shine even upon the evil and unthankful, though he could withhold it! He that made the stars also, can, if he pleases, seal them up, and hide them from our eyes. By earthquakes and subterraneous fires, mountains have sometimes been removed, and the earth shaken: in very dark and cloudy days and nights, it seems to us as if the sun were forbidden to rise, and the stars were sealed up, Acts xxvii. 20. It is sufficient to say, that Job here speaks of what God can do; but if we must understand it of what he has done in fact, all these verses may perhaps be applied to Noah's flood, when the mountains of the earth were shaken, and the sun and stars were darkened. The world that now is, we believe to be reserved for that fire which will consume the mountains, and melt the earth with its fervent heat, and which will turn the sun into darkness.—Henry.

Job taking liberty of complaint, expostulateth with God about his afflictions, 1; he complaineth of life, and craveth a little ease before death, 18.

MY [a]soul []is weary of my life; [b]I will leave my complaint upon myself; [c]I will speak in the bitterness of my soul.

2 I will say unto God, [d]Do not condemn me; [e]shew me wherefore thou contendest with me.

3 Is it good unto thee that thou shouldest oppress, that thou shouldest despise the [†]work of thine hands, and shine upon the counsel of the wicked?

4 Hast thou eyes of flesh? or [k]seest thou as man seest?

5 Are [l]thy days as the days of man? are thy years as man's days,

6 That [m]thou enquirest after mine iniquity, and searchest after my sin?

7 [‡]Thou [n]knowest that I am not wicked; [1] [o]and there is none that can deliver out of thine hand.

8 Thine [p]hands [§]have made me and fashioned me together round about; [q]yet thou dost destroy me.

9 [r]Remember, I beseech thee, that [s]thou hast made me as the clay; and wilt thou bring me [t]into dust again?

10 Hast thou not [u]poured me out as milk,[2] and curdled me like cheese?

11 Thou hast [x]clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast [l]fenced me with bones and sinews.

12 Thou hast granted me [y]life and favour, and thy visitation hath preserved my spirit.

13 And these things hast thou [z]hid in thine heart: I know that this is with thee.

14 If I sin, [b]then thou markest me, and [c]thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity.

15 If [d]I be wicked, woe unto me; and [e]if I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head. [f]I am full of confusion; therefore [g]see thou mine affliction;

16 For it increaseth. Thou huntest me as a fierce lion: and again thou shewest thyself marvellous upon me.

17 Thou renewest thy *witnesses against me, and increasest thine indignation upon me; changes and [l]war are against me.

18 Wherefore then [m]hast thou brought me forth out of the womb? Oh that I had [n]given up the ghost, and no eye had seen me!

19 I should have been [o]as though I had not been; I should have been carried from the womb to the grave.

20 Are not [p]my days few? [q]cease then, and let me alone, that I may take comfort a little.

21 Before [r]I go whence I shall not return, even [s]to the land of darkness and [t]the shadow of death;

4 For thou hast said, [f]My doctrine is pure, and [g]I am clean in thine eyes.

5 But [h]Oh that God would speak, and open his lips against thee;

6 And that he would [i]shew thee the secrets of wisdom, that they are double to that which is![2] Know therefore that [k]God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity deserveth.

7 Canst [l]thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?

8 It is [‡]as [m]high as heaven; what canst thou do? [n]deeper than hell;[3] what canst thou know?

Practical Observations.—The wisdom, power, and sovereignty of God are displayed in the works of creation and providence: we may collect what he can do from what he hath done; and when these subjects are duly considered, they, who harden themselves against him in presumptuous wickedness, appear to be perfectly infatuated. How can they, who despise the favour and defy the vengeance of the Almighty, expect to prosper, or to escape final misery? But they are no less infatuated who proudly attempt to justify themselves before that God, who possesses infinite purity and justice, and who knows us better than we know ourselves. He will prove every indictment which he hath brought, and vindicate every sentence which he hath denounced, against any of his creatures. It is therefore our only wisdom to supplicate mercy, and not to demand justice, from our Judge. Every attempt to "establish our own righteousness," forms an additional demonstration of our pride, perverseness, and rebellion. The Lord can produce against us innumerable transgressions, which have escaped our own notice or recollection: he views us with an impartial eye, while we flatter ourselves in our own sight: he sees our iniquity to be hateful, when we are attempting to palliate it. If then "we know nothing by ourselves, we are not thereby justified:" and it is far better to submit to his righteousness, than to argue, either against the sentence of his law, or the appointments of his providence, which unitedly testify against us. In like manner, all endeavours to vindicate our character, if indeed we are hypocrites, must be in vain: we shall soon appear as if newly plunged in the mire, and be exposed to shame and condemnation, without being able to plead any thing in our own behalf. But if consciously sincere, we may humbly maintain our integrity before our fellow-creatures; yet it is often lost labour, except as "by well-doing we put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." And it is commonly best to leave our cause with God, and patiently to bear the unjust suspicions of our brethren, till he sees good to remove the painful trial.—Scott.

CHAP. X. Man—the Creature of God.—Ver. 8—13. God made us: he, and not our parents, who were only the instruments of his power and providence in our production. "He made us, and not we ourselves." "His hands have made and fashioned" these bodies of ours, and every part of them, ver. 8, and they are "fearfully and wonderfully made." The soul also, which animates the body, is his gift. He takes notice of both here. 1. The body is made "as the clay," ver. 9, cast into shape, into this shape, as the clay is formed into a vessel, according to the skill and will of the potter. We are earthen vessels: mean in our original, and soon broken in pieces, made "as the clay; let not," therefore, "the thing formed say unto him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?" We must not be proud of our bodies, because the matter is from the earth, yet not dishonour our bodies, because the mould and shape are from the divine wisdom. The formation of human bodies in the womb is described by an elegant similitude, ver. 10, "Thou hast poured me out like milk," which is coagulated into cheese; and by an induction of some particulars, ver. 11. Though we come into the world naked, yet the body is itself both clothed and armed; the skin and flesh are its clothing; the bones and sinews are its armour, not offensive, but defensive. The vital parts, the heart and lungs, are thus clothed, not to be seen; thus fenced, not to be hurt. The admirable structure of human bodies is an illustrious instance of the wisdom, power, and goodness of the Creator. What pity is it that these bodies should be instruments of unrighteousness, which are capable of being temples of the Holy Ghost! 2. The soul is the life, the soul is the man, and this is the gift of God; "Thou hast granted me life," breathed into me the breath of life, without which the body would be but a worthless carcass. God is the Father of spirits.—Henry.

CHAP. XI. Zophar.—Ver. 1—4. Zophar, probably the youngest of Job's three friends, instead of being softened by his pathetic complaints, took up the argument against him with greater vehemence than Eliphaz and Bildad had done. He represented him as a man who loved to hear himself speak; and who, by affected eloquence, aimed to run down the most evident truth in his own vindication; and as one who maintained palpable falsehoods, and treated the most sacred subjects, and most solid reasonings, with contempt and mockery. It was therefore highly proper that he should be answered, rebuked, and put to shame.—But what ground was there for these high charges? Job had said that "his doctrine was pure," which his friends could not disprove; and he was accused of saying, "I am clean in the eyes of God." He had indeed said that God knew he was not wicked, or one who concealed gross iniquities under the mask of hypocrisy: but he had also confessed himself a sinner, and implored forgiveness. And though he was tempted to question whether God would be merciful to him, and had unadvisedly asserted that justice was rigorously exercised towards him; yet he had never supposed that God dealt unjustly with him. Ver. 5, 6. Zophar despaired of convincing Job; and therefore wished that God would interpose to vindicate his truth, and the justice of his providence: for if God should show him the secret, wise, and righteous reasons of his dispensations; or the extensive and spiritual nature of true holiness, and consequently the number and heinousness of his own sins, all of which were vastly more than he had any conception of; he would acknowledge that God exacted less punishment of him than he deserved.—This, Job would not have denied: and GOD'S UNSEARCHABILITY.—Ver. 7. That God's nature infinitely exceeds the capacities of our understandings; "'Canst thou find out God, find him out to perfection?' No. 'What canst thou do? What canst thou know?' ver. 6, 8. Thou, a poor, weak, short-sighted creature, a worm of the earth, that art but of yesterday? Thou, though ever so inquisitive after him, ever so desirous and industrious to find him out, yet darest thou attempt the search, or canst thou hope to speed in it?" We may by searching "find God," Acts xvii. 27, but we cannot "find him out," in any thing he is pleased to conceal; we may *ap*prehend him, but cannot *com*prehend him; we may know that he is, but cannot know what he is; the eye can see the ocean, but not see over it: we may, by a humble, diligent, and believing search, find out something of God, but cannot find him out to perfection; we may know, but cannot know fully, what God is, nor find out his work "from the beginning to the end," Eccl. iii. 11.—Henry.

CHAP. XII. TEMPORAL PROSPERITY NOT THE MARK OF GOD'S FAVOUR.—Ver. 6. 1. Job asserts it as an undoubted truth, that wicked people may, and often do, prosper long in this world. Even great sinners may enjoy great prosperity. Observe how he describes the sinners; they are robbers, and such as provoke God, the worst kind of sinners, blasphemers, and persecutors; perhaps he refers to the Sabeans and Chaldeans, who had robbed him, and had always lived by spoil and rapine, and yet they prospered; all the world saw they did, and there is no disputing against sense; one observation built upon matter of fact is worth twenty notions framed by an hypothesis. Or, more generally, all proud oppressors are robbers and pirates. It is supposed that what is injurious to men is provoking to God, the Patron of right, and the Protector of mankind. It is not strange if those that violate the bonds of justice break through the obligations of all religion, bid defiance even to God himself, and make nothing of provoking him.—Henry.

GOD'S SOVEREIGNTY.—Ver. 13—25. The transition from the foregoing verse to the subsequent discourse seems as follows. The consideration that "length of days" among men was supposed to increase wisdom and understanding, led Job to think of the "everlasting God," whose wisdom and knowledge are infinite; and thus, without mentioning him he proceeded to expatiate on his perfections and dispensations; showing that he believed the same general truths as his friends did, and could discourse upon them with cogency and fluency. He declared God to be the fountain of knowledge, wisdom, and power; and that his providence rules the world with irresistible authority. He destroys cities, and imprisons the inhabitants; he afflicts the land with drought, or destroys them with a deluge, as he did the earth in the days of Noah. The crafty deceivers, and they who are deluded by them, fall in with his universal plan for his own glory; and even Satan, the great deceiver, accomplishes the purposes of God by his malignant endeavours to defeat them! Kings, legislators, conquerors, orators, are spoiled, disgraced, enslaved, overthrown, infatuated, beyond all expectation, as the Lord pleases; and they are sure to be at length rendered contemptible when they oppose his cause. He detects the most secret conspiracies, and the deepest intrigues of princes; he disposes of nations with absolute authority; and when any stand in his way, he throws them into such confusion, that they are perfectly bewildered, as if lost in a desert, or groping in the dark, or staggering from drunkenness; and thus they become incapable of the least effectual exertion.—These important truths were suited to convince the over-confident disputants, that they had gone out of their depth, in attempting to assign the Lord's reason for afflicting Job; when "his ways are unsearchable, and his judgments past finding out."—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. JOB'S VINDICATION.—Ver. 1—2. Job here warmly expresses his resentments of the unkindness of his friends. He comes up with them as one that understood the matter in dispute as well as they, and did not need to be taught by them. They compelled him, as the Corinthians did Paul, to commend himself and his own knowledge, yet not in the way of self-applause, but of self-justification. All he had said before, his eye had seen confirmed by many instances, and his ear had heard seconded by many authorities, and he well understood it, and what use to make of it. Happy they who do not only see and hear, but understand the greatness, glory, and sovereignty, of God. This, he thought, would justify what he had said before, chap. xii. 3, which he repeats here, ver. 2. "'What ye know, the same do I know also,' so that I need not come to you to be taught; 'I am not inferior unto you' in wisdom." Note, Those who enter into disputation enter into temptation, to magnify themselves, and vilify their brethren, more than is fit, and therefore ought to watch and pray against the workings of pride.

FIRM FAITH.—Ver. 15—19. The first clause in this passage may be properly rendered as an interrogation, "Lo, he will slay me, shall not I trust?" or, "though he should slay me, shall not I trust?" Our version is formed from a change in the text, on the authority of the Jewish writers, which in this case seems not at all necessary.—Even if left to die of his diseases, or to be cut off by a sudden stroke, Job determined not to give up his confidence.—His friends had intimated that the return of his prosperity

16 For now [h]thou numberest my steps: dost thou not watch over my sin?

17 My transgression is [i]sealed up in a bag, and thou sewest up mine iniquity.

18 And surely [k]the mountain falling [l]cometh to nought, and [l]the rock is removed out of his place.

19 The waters wear the stones: thou *washest away the things which grow out of the dust of the earth; and thou [m]destroyest the hope of man.

20 Thou [n]prevailest for ever against him, and he passeth: thou [o]changest his countenance, and sendest him away.

21 His sons come to honour, and [p]he knoweth it not: and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them.

22 But [q]his flesh upon him shall have pain, and [r]his soul within him shall mourn.

would evince his former integrity and his present repentance; but he, conscious that he had walked uprightly, before God, and having an assured belief of his faithfulness and mercy, would confide in him as his salvation, even though he slew him; and would maintain before him that he had not been a wicked dissembler, though he well knew that no hypocrite could escape detection or condemnation in his sight. He desired his friends to attend to his appeal, and to observe how he ordered his cause. He did not deny that he was a sinner, but he pleaded that he was not a hypocrite; from the charge of hypocrisy he knew that God would justify him, and he challenged them to bring forward the proofs of their allegations. He had lost all except his character, the testimony of his conscience, and his hope in God, which they endeavoured to rend from him; and it would be death to him not to vindicate himself from their cruel aspersions.—"For now I shall be silent and expire."—Scott.

Sin and Chastening.—Ver. 26. Afflictions are bitter things; the writing of them denotes deliberation and determination, written as a warrant for execution; it denotes also the continuance of his affliction, for that which is written remains, and "Herein thou 'makest me to possess the iniquities of my youth,'" that is, "thou punishest me for them, and thereby puttest me in mind of them, and obligest me to renew my repentance for them." Note, 1. God sometimes writes very bitter things against the best and dearest of his saints and servants, both in outward afflictions and inward disquiet; trouble in body and trouble in mind, that he may humble them and prove them, and do them good in their latter end. 2. That the sins of youth are often the smart of age, both in respect of sorrow within, (Jer. xxxi. 18, 19,) and suffering without, chap. xx. 11. Time does not wear out the guilt of sin. 3. That when God writes bitter things against us, his design therein is, to make us possess our iniquities, to bring forgotten sins to mind, and so to bring us to remorse for them, as break us off from them. This is all the fruit, to take away our sin.—Henry.

CHAP. XIV. Death and Resurrection.—Ver. 6. Job proceeded to observe, that man's days were determined, and he could not exceed his appointed term of life; therefore he prayed that he might have a little rest from his exquisite anguish, till the wearisome work of life was over, and death should end his sorrows; which would be as welcome to him as night to the day-labourer. Ver. 7—12. Though a tree be cut down, and the stump seem decayed in the earth, yet, if it be in a moist and fruitful situation, it may be expected that tender branches will shoot forth, and grow up as a newly planted tree; and that old tree again revived. But when a man is put off by death, he is for ever removed from his place in this world; no one expects to see him again; and his body returns to the earth whence it was taken, and mingles with it; even as the waters return to the sea, whence they first came. Thus he lieth down, till the consummation of all things, when he shall awake at the general resurrection.—All these expressions imply Job's belief of that great doctrine; though both ancient and modern Sadducees have contrived to misunderstand him. Why else should he speak of death as sleep, and mention a period to it when he shall awake, even "when the heavens be no more?" Either Job meant by these considerations to comfort himself with the hope of having soon and for ever done with this wretched world; or he used them as a plea, why God should grant him respite from trouble to prepare for death, the consequences of which are irreversible.—Scott.

Faith and Hope.—There is a joyful expectation of bliss and satisfaction in this, ver. 15, Then "thou shalt call, and I will answer thee." Now he was under such a cloud, that he could not, he durst not, answer, chap. ix. 15, 35; xiii. 22, but he comforted himself with this, that there would come a time when God would call, and he should answer; then, that is, 1. At the resurrection, "Thou shalt call me out of the grave, by the voice of the arch-angel, and I will answer, and come at the call." The body is the "work of God's hands," and he will have a desire to that, having prepared a glory for it. Or, 2. At death; "Thou shalt call my body to the grave, and my soul to thyself, and I will answer, Ready, Lord, ready, coming, coming; here I am." Gracious souls can cheerfully answer death's summons, and appear to his writ. Their spirits are not forcibly required from them, as Luke xii. 20, but willingly resigned by them, and the earthly tabernacle not violently pulled down, but voluntarily laid down; with this assurance, "Thou 'wilt have a desire to the work of thy hands;' thou hast mercy in store for me, not only as made by thy providence, but new-made by thy grace; otherwise 'he that made them will not save them.'" Note, Grace in the soul is the work of God's own hands, and therefore he will not forsake it in this world, Ps. cxxxviii. 8, but will have a desire to it, to perfect it in the other, and to crown it with endless glory.—Henry.

CHAP. XV. Second Address of Eliphaz.—Ver. 1—13. Instead of being convinced by Job's reasoning, or softened by his pathetic complaints, Eliphaz, with increasing severity, led on a second attack on him. Job had been reputed a wise man: but Eliphaz asked, Whether it consisted with that character, to propagate such empty notions, and to satisfy his conscience with them; when they were as unfit for the purpose as the unwholesome east wind of Arabia be to appease his hunger. Would any wise man reason with such [illegible]? Thus contemptuously did he [illegible]

14 What [x]is man, that he should be clean? and he which is born of a woman, that he should be righteous?

15 Behold, [y]he putteth no trust in his saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight:

18 Which wise men have told [c]from their fathers, and have not hid it:

21 A [i]dreadful sound is in his ears: in prosperity [h]the destroyer shall come upon him.

22 He [i]believeth not that he shall return out of darkness, [k]and he is waited for of the sword.

23 He wandereth abroad for bread, saying, Where is it? he knoweth that [m]the day of darkness is ready at his hand.

24 Trouble and [n]anguish shall make him afraid; they shall prevail against him, [o]as a king ready to the battle.

27 Because [t]he covereth his face with his fatness, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks.

28 And he dwelleth in desolate cities, and in houses which no man inhabiteth, which are ready to become heaps.

29 He shall not be rich, neither shall his substance continue, neither shall he prolong the perfection thereof upon the earth.

30 He shall not [s]depart out of darkness; [a]the flame shall dry up his branches, and [b]by the breath of his mouth shall he go away.

31 Let [c]not him that is deceived [d]trust in vanity:[4] for vanity shall be his recompense.

32 It shall be *accomplished before his time, and his branch shall not be green.

33 He shall [g]shake off his unripe grape as the vine, [h]and shall cast off his flower as the olive.

discourse. Yet in fact his doctrine was true, his cause was good, and many of his observations very wise and pious.—Eliphaz next charged him with casting off the fear of God, and restraining prayer before him: either because he concluded from some hasty expressions, that Job had no reverence for God, and proudly refused to call upon him in his trouble; or, that his doctrine would embolden others to ungodliness with the hopes of impunity, or discourage them from prayer by representing religion as unprofitable.—"Truly thou makest void fear," (or, "the fear of God:") and diminishest meditation, (or, "worship,") "before him."—He further accused him with choosing craftily to cloak his iniquity with the semblance of piety; observing that there needed nothing more than his own words to convict and condemn him.—He next inquired, whether he were the first of men, or had existed before the creation? Whether he were of the secret council of God, or had engrossed all wisdom to himself. If not, why did he presume to know more than any of his friends; when they were themselves, or had on their side, much elder men than he, or even than his father? And he demanded, "Whether the consolations of God were small with him?" That is, whether the consolations, which they proposed to him, if penitent, were so small, that he should contemn them as "physicians of no value?" Or whether he had any better method of comfort and deliverance, which he kept secret from them? In short, Eliphaz expostulated with Job, for letting his own heart carry him into such arrogant behaviour to them, and into such daring impiety against God, as he had just uttered.—Temptation and anguish indeed had extorted several improper expressions from Job: but Eliphaz was evidently angry, because he did not confess himself a hypocrite; but argued against the decision of him and his friends, and treated their discourses with peevish neglect, as either false, or inapplicable to the case.

HIS MISTAKEN VIEWS.—Ver. 17—35. Eliphaz here again laboured to confirm his position, that the righteous prosper, and the wicked are miserable, in this world. He stated that this was not merely his own opinion, but a tradition received from their fathers, and which wise men had always approved and taught; and they especially, whose exclusive authority and prosperity were the reward of their singular piety. It was their uniform observation, that wicked men passed through life in pain, and in constant dread of death: that if they prospered for a little time, some spoiler or murderer soon came upon them: that when they began to be distressed, they were driven to despair; and that in general they were speedily reduced to want and beggary; and had their trouble and anguish embittered by the dread of impending vengeance, which could prevail against them as a victorious potentate. He did not mean that this was the fate of every transgressor; but of the presumptuous rebel, who opposed the [illegible], arraigned his providence, and hardened his heart in defiance of his wrath; who was rendered insolent and secure by prosperity; and who became outrageous in adversity, as if he would run upon the Almighty like a desperate warrior, who rushes upon certain death, that he may attempt revenge upon his enemy. He meant the man whose impiety was connected with rapine and oppression; by whom whole cities had been desolated, and then occupied. The ill-gotten wealth of such a person would never continue, nor the perfection of his prosperity be prolonged.—Many important truths were contained in this discourse: but, as far as it related "to temporal prosperity, or adversity," it admitted of numerous exceptions: and it implied an invidious application to the case of Job. It was evidently intimated, that he was the prosperous sinner, the presumptuous offender, the desperate rebel against God, the oppressor, the hypocrite, the corrupt judge; the ruin of his substance and family, his inward terror and anguish, were so many demonstrations of his guilt; and his vindication of himself completed the evidence, and almost constituted him a blasphemer, as if he charged the Lord with injustice, and set himself in array against him. Thus Eliphaz inadvertently took the part of Satan; and brought in a verdict against Job, as if he had actually and openly cursed God.—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. JOB'S COMPLAINT AGAINST THE HARSH JUDGMENT OF HIS FRIENDS.—Ver. 6—16. These verses contain most grievous complaints, and many harsh expressions, which may easily be accounted for, but cannot be justified.—Job began by observing that he could obtain no relief, either by silence or by speaking; as all he said was misrepresented, and exposed him to further reproach. He declared that He, God himself, "had made him weary," even of his life: and then, turning his discourse to him, he further complained, that he had destroyed his family, dispersed all his companions, and so left his friends to mistake his case, that they had become his tormentors. He had likewise disfigured and wasted his body with dire diseases, so that his wrinkles and leanness were witnesses against him. Job next spoke of "his enemy, who hated him, tear him, and gnashed upon him" with insulting rage, and looked upon him as about to devour him. But it is not certain whether he intended this of the severity with which Eliphaz had treated him; or whether he meant Satan, who doubtless assaulted him with every horrid and terrifying temptation to drive him to despair; or whether he thus spoke of God, as become his enemy. He, however, meant his friends when he spoke of those "who gaped upon him with their mouth, smote him on the cheek reproachfully, and gathered themselves together against him;" (or "filled themselves against him," that is, fully gratified their ill-will;) referring to their unanimous aggravations, by which they wounded his spirit, and [illegible]

HIS CONSCIOUS INTEGRITY.—Ver. 16. Job doubted not but that, 1. God did now take cognizance of his sorrows, "Mine eye pours out tears to God." He had said, that he wept much; here he tells us in what channel his tears ran, and which way they were directed: his sorrow was not that of the world, but he sorrowed after a godly sort, wept before the Lord, and offered to him the sacrifice of a broken heart. Note, Even tears, when sanctified to God, give ease to troubled spirits; and, if men slight our grief, this may comfort us, that God regards them. 2. That he would in due time clear up his innocency, ver. 21, "O that one might plead for a man with God!" If he could but now have the same freedom at God's bar, that men commonly have at the bar of the civil magistrate, he doubted not but to carry his cause, for the Judge himself was a witness to his integrity. The language of this wish is, that (Isa. l. 7, 8,) "I know that I shall not be ashamed, for he is near that justifies me." Some give a gospel-sense of this verse, and the original will very well bear it: "and he will plead" (that is, there is one that will plead) "for man with God, even the Son of man, for his friend or neighbour." Those who pour out tears before God, though they cannot plead for themselves, by reason of their distance and defects, have a friend to plead for them, even the Son of man, and on this we must bottom all our hopes of acceptance with God.—Henry.

CHAP. XVII. THE GRAVE AND CORRUPTION.—Ver. 13. 1. "If I wait, if there be any place where I shall ever be easy again, it must be in the grave." The grave is a house; to the wicked it is a prison-house, chap. xxiv. 19, 20; to the godly it is Bethabara, a passage-house in their way home. "It is my house, mine by descent, I am born to it; it is my father's house; mine by purchase, I have made myself obnoxious to it." We must every one of us shortly remove to this house, and it is our wisdom to provide accordingly; let us think of removing, and send before to our long home. 2. He counted upon no quiet bed but in the darkness; "There," says he, "'I have made my bed.' It is made, for it is ready, and I am just going to it." The grave is a bed, for we shall rest in it the evening of our day on earth, and rise from it in the morning of our everlasting day, Isa. lvii. 2. Let this make good people willing to die; it is but going to bed, they are weary and sleepy, and it is time that they were in their beds; why should they not go willingly, when their Father calls? "Nay, 'I have made my bed,' by preparation for it; have endeavoured to make it easy, by keeping conscience pure, by seeing Christ lying in this bed, and so turning it into a bed of spices, and by looking beyond it to the resurrection." 3. He counted upon no agreeable relations but what he had in the grave, ver. 14. "I have cried to corruption," that is, to the grave, where the body will corrupt, "Thou art my father," for our bodies were formed out of the earth, and "to the worms" there, "Ye are my mother and my sister," to whom I am allied, for "man is a worm," and with whom I must be conversant, for the "worms shall cover us," chap. xxi. 26. Job complained that his kindred were estranged from him, chap. xix. 13, 14; therefore here he claims acquaintance with other relations that would cleave to him, when those disowned him. Note, First, We are all of us near akin to corruption and the worms. Secondly, It is therefore good to make ourselves familiar with them, by conversing much with them in our thoughts and meditations, which would very much help us above the inordinate love of life, and fear of death.—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. BILDAD'S SECOND ADDRESS.—Ver. 2—4. Bildad had before given Job good advice and encouragement; but here he used nothing but rebukes and presages of approaching ruin. He speaks, as if Job had some associates who took his part, when he says, "How long will it be ere you make an end of words?" He thought it long before his own time came to speak; and he calls upon Job, and all who were of his sentiments, to mark with attention, that they might understand, what was spoken by him and his friends.—It must be allowed, that Job had spoken contemptuously enough concerning the discourses of his friends, declaring that "God had hid their hearts from understanding," and that "he could not find one wise man among them;" for he had been too much moved by their unjust suspicions and erroneous principles. Bildad, however, seems to have been much more angry; as if Job had counted him and his friends senseless as beasts.—And because he had said, that he "took his flesh in his teeth," alluding to his exquisite pain, Bildad ascribed it to his furious anger, which prompted him to do himself a mischief; and as he would not allow himself to be a wicked man, Bildad concluded that he wished to alter the fixed laws of the Lord's righteous government, in order that he might be exempted from punishment. Ver. 5–21. The remainder of this chapter is a rhetorical declamation on the miseries of the wicked. There is, indeed, a great deal of truth and animation in the description; but the application of it to Job was unjust and cruel. It does not contain a single proof of the doctrine maintained by him; namely, that the wicked are uniformly exposed to peculiar calamity in this world, or of the wickedness of Job. For the former, Bildad appealed to facts which by no means would bear him out; and the latter he thought undeniable from Job's remarkable calamities.—Yet if we include the state of retribution, as well as that of probation, we may deduce from it much useful instruction.—Job had said, that "his light was short because of darkness." Yea, answered Bildad, it is always so with a notoriously wicked man. A glimmering of prosperity, and a spark of hope, may be given him; but both shall soon go out; and his family will share his misery. His most vigorous efforts to escape destruction will be unavailing, and his craftiest projects will entangle him. He is like one who ventures on forbidden ground, where nets, and snares, and traps, are placed, which he cannot escape wherever he sets his feet; or like a man in a dangerous road, where robbers meet and plunder him. In short, he lives amidst alarms and terrors, and is always ready to flee as from an enemy; famine, penury, or other calamities speedily befall him; afflictions, as it were, greedily devour him; diseases prey upon his strength and comeliness; and some one more dire than the rest, like "the first-born son of death," fastens upon him and cannot be removed.—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. Job's Solemn Confession of his Faith.—Ver. 25. Let us observe it, 1. He believes "the glory of the Redeemer," and his own interest in him; "I know that my Redeemer liveth;" that he is in being, and is my Life, and that he shall stand at last, or stand the last, or at the latter day, upon (or above) the earth. He shall stand "upon the dust," so the word is; upon all his enemies, which shall be put as dust under his feet; and he shall tread upon them and triumph over them. 2. He believes the happiness of the redeemed, and his own title to that happiness, that, at Christ's second coming, believers shall be raised up in glory, and so made perfectly blessed in the vision and fruition of God; and this he believes with application to himself. (1.) He counts upon the corrupting of his body in the grave, and speaks of it with a holy carelessness and unconcernedness; though, "after my skin" (which is already wasted and gone, none of it remaining but "the skin of my teeth," ver. 20,) "they destroy" (they that are appointed to destroy it, the grave, and the worms in it, of whom he had spoken, chap. xvii. 14,) "this body." The word body is added: "Though they destroy this, this skeleton, this shadow, chap. xvii. 7, this that I lay my hand upon," or (pointing perhaps to his weak and withered limbs.) "this that you see, call it what you will, I expect that shortly it will be a feast for the worms." Christ's body saw not corruption, but ours must! And Job mentions this, that the glory of the resurrection he believed and hoped for might shine the more bright. (2.) He comforts himself with the hopes of happiness on the other side death and the grave; "After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed, yet out of my flesh shall I see God." [1.] Soul and body shall come together again. That body which must be destroyed in the grave, shall be raised again, a glorious body; "Yet in my flesh I shall see God." [2.] Job and God shall come together again; "In my flesh shall I see God," that is, the glorified Redeemer, who is God [illegible] shall see God in my flesh," so some read it; the Son of God clothed with a body [illegible] be visible even to eyes of flesh. Though the body, in the grave, seem [illegible] yet it shall be dignified and made happy in the vision of God. Job now complained that he could not get a sight of God, chap. xxiii. 8, 9, but hopes to see him shortly, never more to lose the sight of him, and that sight of him will be the more welcome after the present darkness and distance. Note, It is the blessedness of the blessed that they shall see God, shall see him as he is, see him face to face, and no longer through a glass darkly. See with what pleasure holy Job enlarges upon this; ver. 27, "Whom I shall see for myself," that is, "see and enjoy, see to my own unspeakable comfort and satisfaction. I shall see him as mine, as mine with an appropriating sight," Rev. xxi. 3. "God himself shall be with them, and be their God," they shall be "like him, for they shall see him as he is," that is, seeing for themselves, 1 John iii. 2. Mine eyes shall behold him, and not another. First, "He, and not another for him, shall be seen, not a type or figure of him, but he himself." Glorified saints are perfectly sure that they are not imposed upon, it is no deceptio visûs—illusion of the senses. Secondly, "I, and not another for me, shall see him. Though my flesh and body be consumed, yet I shall not need a proxy, I shall see him with my own eyes." This was what Job hoped for, and what he earnestly desired; which, some think, is the meaning of the last clause, "My reins are spent in my bosom," that is, "All my desires are summed up and concluded in this; this will crown and complete them all; let me have this, and I shall have nothing more to desire; it is enough, it is all." With this the prayers of David, the son of Jesse, are ended.—Henry.

CHAP. XX. Zophar's Second Address.—Ver. 1—3. Zophar seems to have interrupted Job's discourse; and, not taking the least notice of the excellent things contained in it, he hastily answered to the concluding warning. He was full of thoughts upon the subject, which were, in his opinion, so pertinent, that he thought himself warranted in thus hastily interposing. He considered the check, which Job had given to the censures of his friends, as a reproach; and he thought that his own answer would be the result of sound reason, "the spirit of his understanding:" yet he spoke with great severity and harshness.—"The abrupt beginning of this speech of Zophar shows that he was in a passion, which, though he pretends to bridle it, would not let him calmly consider the protestation which Job made of his innocence.—But he goes on in the old common-place way of the certain downfall of the wicked, be they never so powerful and well supported; which he illustrates, indeed, in an excellent fashion, with great variety of figures, and remarks on histories as old as the world.—All the flaw in his discourse was this, (which was common to him with the rest,) that he imagined God [illegible] and therefore Job, without doubt, was a very bad man, [illegible] so, any other way, but by his suffering.—Dr. Patrick. Ver. 4—26 All [u]darkness shall be hid in his secret places: [v]a fire not blown shall consume him; [x]it shall go ill with him that is left in his tabernacle.

27 The [y]heaven shall reveal his iniquity; and [z]the earth shall rise up against him.

28 The increase of his house shall depart, and his goods shall flow away in the day of his wrath.

29 This is [a]the portion of a wicked man from God,[3] and the heritage [†]appointed unto him by God.

CHAP. XXI.

Job sheweth that even in the judgment of man he hath reason to be grieved, 1. Sometimes the wicked do so prosper as they despise God, 7; sometimes their destruction is manifest, 16. The happy and the unhappy are alike in death, 23.

BUT Job answered and said,

2 [a]Hear diligently my speech, and [b]let this be your consolations.

3 Suffer me [c]that I may speak; and after that I have spoken, [d]mock on.

4 As for me, [e]is my complaint to man? and if it were so, why should not my spirit be *troubled?

5 [†]Mark me, and [s]be astonished, and [h]lay your hand upon your mouth.

8 Their [m]seed is established in their sight with them, and their offspring before their eyes.

9 Their houses are [‡]safe from fear, neither is [n]the rod of God upon them.

10 Their bull gendereth, and faileth not; their cow calveth, and casteth not her calf.

11 They [p]send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance.

12 They [q]take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ.[2]

13 They spend their days in [§]wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave.

14 Therefore they say unto God, Depart from us; [t]for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways.

15 What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have, [y]if we pray unto him?

16 Lo, their good is not in their hand: [a]the counsel of the wicked is far from me.

17 How [b]oft is the [‖]candle of the wicked put out? and how oft cometh their destruction upon them? God distributeth sorrows in his anger.

18 They are [d]as stubble before the wind, and as chaff that the storm *carrieth away.

19 God layeth up his [†]iniquity for his children; he rewardeth him, and he shall know it.

20 His eyes shall [‖]see his destruction, and he shall [k]drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

21 For what pleasure hath he in his house after him, when the number of his months is cut off in the midst?

22 Shall any teach God knowledge? seeing he judgeth those that are high.

23 One dieth in his [‡]full strength, being wholly at ease and quiet:

24 His [§]breasts are full of milk,[3] and his bones are [q]moistened with marrow.

25 And another dieth [r]in the bitterness of his soul, and never eateth with pleasure.

26 They shall lie down [t]alike in the dust, and [u]the worms shall cover them.

27 Behold, I know your thoughts, and the devices which ye wrongfully imagine against me.

28 For ye say, Where is the house of the prince? and where are the [‖]dwelling places of the wicked?

asserted the same general truths, and fell into the same mistakes, which his friends before had done. He confounded this state of trial with the future state of retribution: he supposed that the dispensations of providence were conducted by one invariable rule, according to the characters of men: and he misapplied his doctrine to Job, as if it evinced him to be a hypocrite. Ver. 10—29. In these verses Zophar expatiated on the variety of miseries which awaited the wicked man, whether profane or hypocritical. His indigent and distressed children would court the favour of the poor, either for a morsel of bread, or to disarm their revenge for the injuries which they had endured. External compulsion, or inward remorse, would constrain him to restore their property. The licentiousness of his youth would expose him to dreadful diseases in his old age, and bring him down to the grave. The wickedness which he delighted in, concealed, spared, and would not forsake, but reserved as a sweet morsel to eat secretly, would create him such inward horror, such dreadful diseases, and such dire miseries, that it would be like the venom of the asp, or as if he had been bitten by the viper. He would be disappointed of all his expected pleasure and ease: and, along with his ill-gotten wealth, he would be deprived of all which he had laboured for, as a punishment of his injustice and oppression. He would have no comfort of his riches, while they remained; and he would be stripped of all, (as Job had been,) and have nothing for any one to covet. This would come upon him suddenly, in the height of his prosperity, by a combination of wicked men, as Job's had done. Nay, just when he would be ready to say, "Soul, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry;" God himself would pour the fury of his wrath upon him. There would be no escaping from the weapons of Divine indignation: his inward terrors would equal his outward calamities; so that every kind of misery would be laid up in store against him: he would be consumed as dried fuel, which burns of its own accord without being blown; for the judgments of God, without the intervention of men, would desolate his family. If his wickedness were before masked with hypocrisy, it should thus be brought to light. Persons of all descriptions would unite against him. All which he had possessed would be totally dissipated. For this was uniformly the portion of a wicked man from God, and his appointed heritage.—Scott.

CHAP. XXI. JOB'S REPLY.—Ver. 7—16. If the doctrine, maintained by Zophar, and Job's other opponents, was true, and providence discriminated uniformly betwixt the righteous and the wicked; how was it, that so many wicked men lived, grew old, and continued in power and prosperity to death? Perhaps no instance had occurred of a truly pious person being so suddenly and dreadfully afflicted, as Job had been; and it was not possible for man to distinguish exactly between the true believer and the hypocrite. But it was undeniable that numbers of notoriously profane and wicked men were advanced to wealth and authority, continued in prosperity to old age, and witnessed their posterity established in the most desirable settlements, before their death: that they were often more free from alarm and correction than others; that their cattle and substance rapidly increased; that their children whom they trained up in vanity, sensuality, and dissipation, multiplied, and were in health and peace around them; that they lived even to extreme old age, (for so the original word signifies,) in outward ease and indulgence, and died without any remarkable pain or distress. So that, if men were to judge merely by outward prosperity, the wicked might be pronounced the most happy, and even the favourites of heaven. Yet they grew more impious and presumptuous, even by prosperity: they openly cast off all regard to God, and neither knew, nor desired to learn, any thing about his truths, ordinances, and precepts; they despised his favour, defied his vengeance, and counted his service and worship irksome and unprofitable.—Now, it must be allowed, that the Almighty, whom they despised and affronted, gave and continued to them these their good things, and could take them away when he pleased: nor were they so in their own hand that they could retain them for a moment. Job, for his part, was far from approving their counsel, or conduct, or desiring their prosperity: though his friends inferred that he thought the wicked happy; because he argued, that they often prospered, while the righteous were afflicted.—Scott.

SOVEREIGNTY OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE.—1. One dies suddenly, in his full strength, not weakened by age or sickness, ver. 23, being wholly at ease and quiet, under no apprehension at all of the approach of death, nor in any fear of it; but, on the contrary, because his breasts are full of milk, and his bones moistened with marrow, ver. 24, that is, he is healthful and vigorous, and of a good constitution, (like a milch cow that is fat and in good liking,) he counts upon nothing but to live many years in mirth and pleasure. Thus fair does he bid for life, and yet he is cut off in a moment by the stroke of death. Note, It is a common thing for persons to be taken away by death when they are in their full strength, in the highest degree of health, when they least expect death, and think themselves best armed against it, and are ready not only to set death at a distance, but to set it at defiance. 2. Another dies slowly, and with a great deal of previous pain and misery, ver. 25, "in the bitterness of his soul," such as poor Job was himself now in, and never eats with pleasure, has no appetite to his food, nor any relish of it, through sickness, or age, or sorrow of mind. What great reason have those to be thankful, that are in health, and always eat with pleasure! And what little reason have they to complain, who sometimes do not eat thus, when they 31 Who shall declare his way to his face? and who shall repay him what he hath done?

32 Yet shall [f]he be brought to the [†]grave, and shall [‡]remain in the tomb.

33 The clods of the valley shall be [g]sweet unto him, and every man shall draw after him, as there are innumerable before him.

CHAP. XXII.

Eliphaz sheweth that man's goodness profiteth not God, 1; he accuseth Job of divers sins, 5; and exhorteth him to repentance, with promises of mercy, 21.

THEN Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said,

2 Can [a]a man be profitable unto God, [*]as [b]he that is wise may be profitable unto himself?

3 Is it [c]any pleasure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous? or is it gain to him, that [d]thou makest thy ways perfect?

4 Will he [e]reprove thee [f]for fear of thee? [g]will he enter with thee into judgment?

5 Is [h]not thy wickedness great? and [l]thine iniquities infinite?

6 For [k]thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, [l]and [†]stripped the naked of their clothing.[1]

7 Thou hast [m]not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withholden bread from the hungry.

8 But [n]as for the [‡]mighty man, he had the earth; and the [§]honourable man dwelt in it.

9 Thou hast sent [o]widows away empty, and the [p]arms of the fatherless have been broken.

10 Therefore [q]snares are round about thee, and [r]sudden fear troubleth thee;

11 Or [s]darkness, that thou canst not see; and [t]abundance of waters cover thee.

12 Is [u]not God in the height of heaven? and behold the [l]height of [x]the stars, how high they are!

13 And thou sayest, [*]How [y]doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud?

14 Thick [z]clouds are a covering to him, that he seeth not; and he walketh in the circuit of heaven.

15 Hast thou marked [a]the old way,[2] which wicked men have trodden?

16 Which were [b]cut down out of time, [†]whose foundation was overflown with a flood;

17 Which said unto God, [c]Depart from us: [d]and what can the Almighty [‡]do for them?

18 Yet [e]he filled their houses with good things: but [f]the counsel of the wicked is far from me.

3 [c]Oh that I knew where I might find him![1] that [c]I might come even to his seat!

10 But he knoweth [†]the way that I take:

bear of many that never do! How undiscernible is this difference in the grave: as rich and poor, so healthful and unhealthful meet there, ver. 26. "They shall lie down alike in the dust, and the worms shall cover them," and feed sweetly on them. Thus, if one wicked man die in a palace, and another in a dungeon, they will meet in the congregation of the dead and damned, and the worm that dies not, and the fire that is not quenched, will be the same to them, which makes those differences inconsiderable, and not worth perplexing ourselves about.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—It is not easy to obtain an attentive hearing from eager disputants. Interruption and disregard are commonly reciprocal; hence misapprehension, unfair conclusions, and unmerited contempt and reproach: and when men have been suffered to speak, and have spoken to the purpose, their opponents commonly mock on, and treat the whole as trivial and contemptible. But this behaviour is peculiarly improper to the afflicted, who should at least have the consolation of being heard with patience and candour.—Scott.

CHAP. XXII. THIRD ADDRESS OF ELIPHAZ.—Ver. 1—4. Eliphaz still supposed Job to maintain that God favoured the wicked; and therefore he addressed him the third time. He intended in this introduction, to show that God, in all his appointments, acted out of pure love to justice, and was not influenced by interested or selfish affections. Ver. 5—14. In these verses, Eliphaz brought as particular a charge against Job, as if he had had evidences ready to prove every tittle: yet he had no reason for his rash accusation, except that Job was visited as, he supposed, God always visited every wicked man, and none else! He demanded whether Job could deny the greatness and immense number of his crimes? Indeed all have committed innumerable sins, in which there is an inconceivable degree of criminality: but Eliphaz did not mean such transgressions as were common to Job with other believers, or even with men in general; but flagrant iniquities and impieties, which he had cloaked with the mask of hypocrisy.—He therefore directly charged him with depriving his poor brethren of their mean and scanty clothing, by taking it in pledge for debts which he unjustly claimed; and of withholding bread and water, or needful relief from those who were perishing by want; of decreeing as a judge in behalf of the rich and powerful, for their favour and bribes: and of sending away the widows and orphans robbed of their property, and bereaved of all power to recover their right. His unexpected calamities, with which he was surrounded and entangled, were the punishment of these oppressions: and it was no wonder that he complained of being involved in darkness, distracted with terrors, and overwhelmed with afflictions, like impetuous torrents, when he was guilty of such crimes.—[Scott.]

Methinks I can almost forgive Eliphaz his hard censures of Job, which we had in the beginning of the chapter, though they were very unjust and unkind, for this good counsel and encouragement which he gives him in these verses with which he closes his discourse, and than which nothing could be better said, or more to the purpose. Though he thought him a bad man, yet he saw reason to have hopes concerning him, that, for all this, he would be both pious and prosperous. But it is strange, that out of the same mouth, and almost in the same breath, both sweet waters and bitter should proceed. Good men, though they may perhaps be put into a heat, yet sometimes will talk themselves into a better temper, and, it may be, sooner than another could talk them into it. Eliphaz had laid before Job the miserable condition of a wicked man, that he might frighten him into repentance. Here, on the other hand he shows him the happiness which those may be sure of that do repent, that he might allure and encourage him to it. Ministers must try both ways in dealing with people, must speak to them from mount Sinai by the terrors of the law, and from mount Zion by the comforts of the gospel, must set before them both life and death, good and evil, the blessing and the curse. Now here observe the good counsel which Eliphaz gives to Job; and good counsel it is to us all, though, as to Job, it was built upon a false supposition that he was a wicked man, and now a stranger and enemy to God. "Acquaint now thyself in God." "Acquiesce in God;" so some. It is our duty at all times, especially when we are in affliction, to accommodate ourselves to, and quiet ourselves in, all the disposals of the divine providence.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIII. JOB'S REPLY TO ELIPHAZ.—Ver. 3—7. Job perceived that his friends were resolved to condemn him; he therefore referred his cause to the judgment of God, and he was earnest to have it decided, as by a special commission.—Eliphaz had exhorted him to "acquaint himself with God;" and to this Job seems to have referred, when he vehemently expressed his desire of knowing where he might find him. He longed to know where and how he might carry his appeal into the presence and before the tribunal of God, that it might be determined whether he was a righteous man or a hypocrite; which was the point on which he and his opponents were at issue. He was assured that "the judgment of God" would be "according to truth:" before him he could order his cause with confidence, and produce many and conclusive arguments in his own vindication. He should then know what God would answer, and he did not fear submitting to his award: he seems also to have hoped that he should then understand the reason of his uncommon afflictions. He was assured that God would not crush him by his power, or condemn him by prerogative; but would rather support

CHAP. XXVI.

14 The [c]murderer rising with the light killeth the poor and needy, and [d]in the night is as a thief.

15 The [e]eye also of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight, saying, [f]No eye shall see me: and [§]disguiseth his face.

16 In the dark they dig through houses, which they had marked for themselves in the daytime; [h]they know not the light.

17 For the morning is to them even as the shadow of death: if one know them, they are [i]in the terrors of the shadow of death.

18 He is [k]swift as the waters; [l]their portion is cursed in the earth: he beholdeth not the way of the vineyards.

19 [m]Drought and heat [l]consume the snow waters: [n]so doth the grave those which have sinned.

20 The womb shall forget him;[3] [o]the worm shall feed sweetly on him; [p]he shall be no more remembered; and [q]wickedness shall be broken as a tree.

21 He [r]evil entreateth the barren that beareth not: and doeth not good to the widow.

22 He draweth also the mighty with his power: he riseth up, and *no man is sure of life.

23 Though it be given him to be in safety, whereon he resteth; [s]yet his eyes are upon their ways.

24 They are exalted for a little while, but are [†]gone and brought low; they are [‡]taken out of the way as all other, and cut off as the tops of the ears of corn.

25 And if it be not so now, who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth?

CHAP. XXV.

Bildad sheweth that man cannot be justified before God.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite,[1] and said,

2 [a]Dominion and fear are with him, he maketh peace in his high places.

3 Is there any number of his armies? and [b]upon whom doth not his light arise?

4 [c]How then can man be justified with God? or how can he be clean that is born of a woman?

5 Behold [d]even to the moon, and it shineth not; yea, the stars are not pure in his sight.

6 How much less man, that is a worm; and the son of man, which is a worm?

CHAP. XXVI.

Job, reproving the uncharitable spirit of Bildad, 1, acknowledgeth the power of God to be infinite and unsearchable, 5.

BUT Job answered and said,

2 [a]How hast thou [b]helped him that is him by his grace, and encourage him by his condescension, in ordering his cause before him. So that an upright person, when calumniated and condemned by man, might be allowed to argue the matter before God: and, having appealed to his mercy as a Saviour, and being declared a justified believer, he would have nothing more to fear from his just and holy Judge. Some think that he meant Eliphaz, who as his self-constituted judge, had already most unjustly brought him in guilty of many atrocious crimes, and pronounced sentence against him.—Job's consciousness of his integrity, and his confidence that the Lord would graciously decide in his favour, were well grounded: but there was a great want of reverence, humility, and patience, in his vehement manner of stating his desires: and in fact, the Lord did at last silence Job, by showing him his presumption, in thus pleading against his almighty Sovereign.—Scott.

Divine Power.—Ver. 13. 1. God's counsels are immutable; "He is in one mind, and who can turn him? He is one." So some read it, or "in one;" he has no counsellors by whose interest he might be prevailed with to alter his purpose: he is one with himself, and never alters his mind, never alters his measures. Prayer has prevailed to change God's way and his providence, but never was his will or purpose changed; for "known unto God are all his works." 2. His power is irresistible; "What his soul desires" or designs, even that he does, and nothing can stand in his way, or put him upon new counsels. Men desire many things, which either they may not do, or cannot do, or dare not do; but God has an incontestible sovereignty; his will is so perfectly pure and right, that it is highly fit he should pursue all its determinations; and he has an uncontrollable power; "none can stay his hand." "Whatever the Lord pleased, that did he," Ps. cxxxv. 6, and always will, for it is always best. 3. All he does is according to the counsel of his will, ver. 14; "He performs the thing that is appointed for me;" whatever happens to us, it is God that performs it, Ps. lvii. 2, and an admirable performance the whole will appear to be, when the mystery of God shall be finished. He performs all that, and that only, which was appointed, and in the appointed time and method.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIV. Job's Triumphant Argument.—Ver. 1. Job's friends had been very positive in it, that they should soon see the fall of wicked people, how much soever they might prosper for a while. By no means, says Job, "though times are not hidden from the Almighty," yet "they that know him do not presently see his day." 1. He takes it for granted, that times are not hid from the Almighty, past times are not hid from his judgment, Eccl. iii. 15, present times are not hid from his providence, Matt. x. 29, future times are not hid from his prescience, Acts xv. 18. God governs the world, and therefore we may be sure he takes cognizance of it: bad times are not hid from him, though the bad men, that make the times bad, say one to another that he has "forsaken the earth," Ps. xciv. 6, 7. Every man's times are in his hand and under his eye, and therefore it is in his power to make the times of wicked men in this world miserable; he foresees the time of every man's death, and therefore, if wicked men die before they are punished for their wickedness, we cannot say, "They escaped him by surprise:" he foresaw it, nay, he ordered it. Before Job will inquire into the reasons of the prosperity of wicked men, he asserts God's omniscience, as one prophet, in a like case, asserts his righteousness, Jer. xii. 1, another his holiness, Hab. i. 13, another his goodness to his own people, Ps. lxxiii. 1. General truths must be held fast, though we may find it difficult to reconcile them to particular events. 2. He yet asserts, that they who know him, that is, wise and good people who are acquainted with him, and with whom his secret is, "do not see his days," not the day of his judging for them; this was the thing he complained of in his own case, chap. xxiii. 8. That he could not see God appearing on his behalf to plead his cause; nor the day of his judging against open and notorious sinners, that is called "his day," Ps. xxxvii. 13. We believe that day will come, but we do not see it, because it is future, and its presages secret. 3. Though this is a mystery of providence, yet there is reason for it, and we shall shortly know why the judgment is deferred; even the wisest, and those who know God best, do not yet see it. God will exercise their faith and patience, and excite their prayers for the coming of his kingdom, for which they are to "cry day and night to him," Luke xviii. 7.—Henry.

CHAP. XXV. Third Address of Bildad.—Ver. 1—6. The appeal to undeniable facts which Job had made, seems to have reduced his opponents to great difficulties. They were not convinced of their error: but they could not answer his arguments. Bildad, therefore, spoke but few words in reply; Zophar did not answer the third time; and Eliphaz declined leading on another attack. Bildad, however, thought that Job had spoken without a proper reverence of God, or a due sense of his own vileness. He reminded him therefore, that the sovereign authority over all creatures belonged solely to the Lord; and that all ought to reverence his Majesty, and to fear his omnipotent displeasure. All the inhabitants of heaven, in perfect unity and harmony, obeyed him: his innumerable creatures, marshalled in exact order, were observant of his commands, and entirely under his control: and, as the light of his sun pervaded all the earth, so, all that partook of his goodness ought to submit to his authority. But if the heavenly bodies were obscure when compared with his infinite glory and in his view of them, without power? how savest thou the arm that hath no strength?

3 How hast thou counselled him that hath no wisdom? and how hast thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?

4 To whom hast thou uttered words? and [a]whose spirit came from thee?

5 Dead things are formed from under the waters, [*]and the inhabitants thereof.

6 [g]Hell[1] is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering.

7 He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing.

8 He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds; [m]and the cloud is not rent under them.

9 He holdeth back the face of his throne, and spreadeth his cloud upon it.

10 He hath compassed the waters with bounds, [p]until the [†]day and night come to an end.

11 The pillars of heaven tremble, and [r]are astonished at his reproof.

12 He [s]divideth the sea with his power, and by his understanding he smiteth through [‡]the proud.

13 By [u]his spirit he hath garnished the heavens; his hand hath formed [x]the crooked serpent.

14 Lo, these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him? but [z]the thunder of his power who can understand?

CHAP. XXVII.

Job protesteth his sincerity, 1. The hypocrite is without hope, 8. The blessings which the wicked have are turned into curses, 11.

MOREOVER [a]Job [*]continued his parable, and said,

2 As [b]God liveth, who hath taken away my judgment;[1] and the Almighty, who hath [†]vexed my soul;

3 All the while my breath is in me, and [‡]the spirit of God is in my nostrils;

4 My lips shall not speak wickedness, nor my tongue utter deceit.

5 God forbid that I should justify you: till I die [f]I will not remove mine integrity from me.

6 My righteousness [g]I hold fast, and will not let it go: [h]my heart shall not reproach me [§]so long as I live.

7 Let [i]mine enemy be as the wicked, and he that riseth up against me as the unrighteous.

8 For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul?

9 Will [l]God hear [m]his cry when trouble cometh upon him?

10 Will he [n]delight himself in the Almighty?[2] will he always call upon God?

11 I [*]will [p]teach you [l]by the hand of God: that which is with the Almighty will I not conceal.

12 Behold, all ye yourselves have seen it; why then are ye thus [s]altogether vain?

13 This is [t]the portion of a wicked man with God, and the heritage of oppressors, which they shall receive of the Almighty.

14 If his [x]children be multiplied, it is for the sword: and [y]his offspring shall not be satisfied with bread.

15 Those that remain of him shall be buried in death: and [a]his widows shall not weep.

16 Though he [b]heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay;[3]

17 He may prepare it, [d]but the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver.

18 He buildeth his house as a moth, and as a booth that the keeper maketh.

19 The rich man [e]shall lie down, but he shall not be [h]gathered: he openeth his eyes, and he is not.

20 [l]Terrors take hold on him as waters, [m]a tempest stealeth him away in the night.

21 The [n]east wind carrieth him away, and he departeth: and as [o]a storm hurleth him out of his place.

22 For God shall cast upon him, and [q]not spare: [*]he would fain [r]flee out of his hand.

23 Men shall clap their hands at him,[4] and shall [t]hiss him out of his place.

CHAP. XXVIII.

There is a knowledge of natural things, 1; but wisdom is an excellent gift of God, 12.

SURELY there is a [*]vein for [a]the silver, and a place for gold [b]where they fine it.

2 [c]Iron is taken out of the [†]earth, and brass is molten out of the stone.

3 He setteth an end to darkness, and [d]searcheth out all perfection: [e]the stones of darkness, and the shadow of death.

4 The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant; even the waters forgotten of the foot: they are dried up, they are gone away from men.

5 As for the earth, [f]out of it cometh bread: and under it is turned up as it were [§]fire.

6 The stones of it are the place of [h]sapphires: and it hath [‡]dust of gold.

7 There is [i]a path which no fowl knoweth, and which the vulture's eye hath not seen:

8 The lion's whelps have not trodden it, nor the fierce lion passed by it.

9 He putteth forth his hand upon the [§]rock; [j]he overturneth the mountains by the roots.

CHAP. XXVI. Job's Reply to Bildad.—Ver. 5—13. To show Bildad that he did not want his instructions, Job began more particularly to discourse on the works of God. The word translated "dead things," may be rendered giants, or monsters. Enormous creatures are produced under the waters, among the numberless inhabitants of the deep, by the mighty power of God. Or, "The dead, even the most mighty, tremble before him; the waters," &c. Neither the bodies, which all over the earth are laid in the grave, nor the state of the departed souls of men, are concealed from his all-seeing eye; and even the place of punishment allotted to the wicked is under his inspection; the heavens are stretched out by him over the vast expanse of this northern hemisphere; and the earth is so wonderfully suspended in the pure space, that it needs no support. (It seems this was known to some persons at this early period.) Immense quantities of water are treasured up in the atmosphere; and are so confined in the clouds as not to rush down impetuously, but gradually, as it is necessary for watering the earth. The throne of God in the heavens is hid by interposing clouds, being too dazzling for us frail mortals to behold; he confineth the raging ocean within its appointed bounds; nor will it ever break forth to cover the earth while day and night endure. The mountains (which appear as "the pillars of heaven,") or the heavens themselves, are astonished and tremble when the Lord speaketh in his wrath. He powerfully raises such storms in the ocean as "divide it into ridges of mountains;" and he knoweth how to abase the proudest and stoutest of his enemies.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVII. Vanity of Hypocrisy.—Ver. 8. "For what is the hope of the hypocrite?" Bildad had condemned it, chap. viii. 13, 14, and Zophar, chap. xi. 20. Job here concurs with them, and reads the death of the hypocrite's hope with as much assurance as they had done; and this fitly comes in as a reason why he would not remove his integrity, but still hold it fast. Note, The consideration of the miserable condition of wicked people, and especially hypocrites, should engage us to be upright, (for we are undone, for ever undone, if we be not,) and also to get the comfortable evidence of our uprightness; for how can we be easy, if the great concern lie at uncertainties? Job's friends would persuade him that all his hope was but the hope of the hypocrite, chap. iv. 6. "Nay," says he, "I would not, for all the world, be so foolish as to build upon such a false foundation; for 'what is the hope of the hypocrite?'" See here, 1. The hypocrite deceived. He has gained, and he has hope; this is his bright side; it is allowed that he has gained by his hypocrisy, has gained the praise and applause of men and the wealth of this world. Jehu gained a kingdom by his hypocrisy, and the Pharisees many a widow's house. Upon this gain he builds his hope, such as it is; he hopes he is in good circumstances for another world, because he finds he is so for this, and he blesses himself in his own way. 2. The hypocrite undeceived; he will at last see himself wretchedly cheated: for, (1.) God shall take away his soul, sorely against his will, (Luke xii. 20,) "Thy soul shall be required of thee." God, as the judge, takes it away, to be tried and determined to its everlasting state. He shall then fall into the hands of of the living God, to be dealt with immediately. (2.) What will his hope be then? It will be vanity and a lie; it will stand him in no stead. The wealth of this world, which he hoped in, he must leave behind him, Ps. xlix. 17. The happiness of the other world, which he hoped for, he will certainly miss of: he hoped to go to heaven, but he will be shamefully disappointed: he will plead his external profession, privileges, and performances, but all his pleas will be overruled as frivolous; "Depart from me, I know you not." So that, upon the whole, it is certain a formal hypocrite, with all his gains and all his hopes, will be miserable in a dying hour.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—No greater misery can be imprecated than the doom of the most prosperous sinner; no more dreadful case imagined than that of the successful, specious hypocrite.—He may indeed call on God, when frighted or distressed; but he will soon desist in weariness or despondency, and seek some other relief. But the humble penitent will knock at mercy's door till it is opened, and not be induced by any delay to depart without a blessing; and he who delights in God will always call upon him in adversity and prosperity, in life and death.—If we would teach others, we must depend on the help of the Almighty, and not conceal his truth: and if we would convince the erroneous, we must guard against misconstructions, and carefully show in how many things we are agreed. In this, at least, all good men are of one judgment: that the wicked may be, and often are grievously afflicted upon earth with outward calamities; and that they must be subject to inward terrors and vexations.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVIII. Value of Wisdom.—Ver. 18. Two things cannot be found out concerning this wisdom. I. The price of it, for that is inestimable; its worth is infinitely more than all the riches in this world. "Man knows not the price thereof," that is, 1. Few put a due value upon it. Men know not the worth of it, its innate excellency, their need of it, and of what unspeakable advantage it will be to them; and therefore, though they have many a price in their hand to get this wisdom, yet they have no heart to it," Prov. xvii. 16. The fools in the text know not the value of it; stone he found in the dunghill, and therefore would rather have lighted on a barley-corn. Men know not the worth of grace, and therefore will take no pains to get it. 2. None can possibly give a valuable consideration for it, with all the wealth this world can furnish them with. This Job is large upon, ver. 15, &c. where he makes an inventory of the Bona notabilia—The most valuable treasures of this world: gold is five times mentioned, silver comes in also, and then divers precious stones, the onyx and sapphire, pearls, and rubies, and the topaz of Ethiopia; these are the things that are highest prized in the world's markets: but if a man would give not only these, heaps of these, but all the substance of his house, all he is worth in the world for wisdom, it would utterly be contemned; these may give a man some advantage in seeking wisdom, as they did to Solomon, but there is no purchasing wisdom with these. It is a gift of "the Holy Ghost," which "cannot be bought with money," Acts viii. 20. As it does not run in the blood, and thus come to us by descent, so it cannot be got for money, nor does it come to us by purchase. Spiritual gifts are conferred without money and without price, because no money can be a price for them. Wisdom is likewise a more valuable gift to him that has it, makes him richer and happier, than gold or precious stones. It is "better to get wisdom than gold." Gold is another's, wisdom our own; gold is for the body and time, wisdom is for the soul and eternity. Let that which is most precious in God's account be so in ours. See Prov. iii. 14, &c. II. The place of it, for that is undiscoverable. "Where shall wisdom be found?" ver. 12. He asks this, 1. Ask the miners, and by them "the depth will say, It is not in me," ver. 14. Those who dig into the bowels of the earth, to rifle the treasures there, cannot in these dark recesses find this rare jewel, nor with all their art make themselves masters of it. 2. Ask the mariners, and by them "the sea will say, It is not in me." It can never be got either by trading on the waters, or diving into them; can never be "sucked from the abundance of the seas, or the treasures hid in the sand. Where there is a vein for the silver, there is no vein for wisdom, none for grace. Men can more easily break through the difficulties they meet with in getting worldly wealth, than through those they meet with in getting heavenly wisdom; and they will take more pains to learn how to live in this world, than how to live for ever in a better world. So blind and foolish is man become, that it is in vain to ask him, "Where is the place of wisdom," and which is the road that leads to it.—Henry.

When Job speaks of "his preparing his seat," it is extremely natural to understand him of his sending his servants to lay a cushion and a carpet on one of the public seats, or something of that sort, as Sir John Chardin supposes. —HARMER.

CHAP. XXIX. JOB'S FORMER PROSPERITY.—Ver. 1—6. It is probable that when Job had finished his commendation of wisdom, he paused, to hear whether his friends had any thing to add; but as they were silent, he proceeded to contrast his former prosperity, and his honourable conduct as a magistrate, with his present abject misery; in order to excite their compassion, and to excuse his complaints, and, perhaps, to engage their more fixed attention to the other parts of his discourse. Indeed, he could not but ardently desire that matters were so with him at the present as formerly. Then God preserved his health, his property, his family, his honour, and his peace, having "made a hedge about him." Ver. 7—11. Job next expatiated on the honour which had been rendered him. He had acquired great authority, and was become chief ruler over the neighbouring tribes; probably through his reputation for wisdom and justice, as well as on account of his affluence. So that when he went through the city to the gate, where his throne for administering justice was prepared, the young men stood so much in awe of him, and so feared his reprehension for their irregularities, that they kept out of the way; the aged rose, in respect of his character; and the nobles and princes were silent, as if bereft of speech, that they might attend to, and be instructed by his arguments and decisions; and, indeed, all who saw and heard him, applauded his impartial justice, and bare testimony to his wisdom and discretion. Ver. 12—17. "Because Job's adversaries did so much charge him with wickedness, he is compelled to render an account of his life." As no one attempted to disprove his attestations, no doubt he spoke what was undeniably true. He could confidently protest that it was his constant object to redress the grievances of the orphans and destitute, who demanded justice against their powerful oppressors; so that widows and other persons, who were about to be crushed, murdered, or starved, thanked him, and prayed for him, as their patron, with joyful hearts. He never appeared in public, but with an evident determination to do justice; the equity of his conduct was to him the "robe," or the "badge of his authority," and he deemed it more his honour than any "royal diadem." Ver. 18—25. Thus respected, useful, and conscientious, and considering all as coming from the favour of God, Job had hoped to live long in prosperity, and to die in peace and honour in a good old age; for he seemed like a tree which had struck deep root in a well-watered soil, and was refreshed every night by the kindly dew. Heaven and earth seemed to favour him continually.——Scott.

CHAP. XXX. JOB'S TERRIBLE REVERSE.—Ver. 1—14. Here Job most pathetically contrasts his present condition with his former honour and authority. Now the youths, who before had hid themselves lest they should be punished for their crimes, treated him with the greatest contempt; nay, the children of the most abject persons imaginable insulted him, whom he described as the vilest outcasts of society. These objects were so destitute of fidelity and honesty, so lazy and ignorant, that they were not capable of doing so much good as the dogs of his flock; and he would have disdained to have employed them in the meanest services about his cattle. Their lives, wasted in wickedness, had left them debilitated and ignorant, debauched and infamous in old age; and being burdens and nuisances by their crimes, they were expelled from society in a most miserable manner. Incapable of obtaining an honest livelihood, and afraid of being punished for their past offences, they had fled into the most desolate parts of the wilderness, and there miserably subsisted upon roots and herbs not fitted to sustain the life of man. For they were driven away as thieves, and concealed themselves in dens and caves from the search of pursuers; or among the weeds and bushes, where they grew savage like the wild asses. Such worthless wretches, of whom Job's active magistracy had rid the country, returned with their families when he was reduced; and, though their ignorant and profligate parents had neglected to give them any good instructions, yet they had learned to make songs and jests about Job, and to show their contempt and abhorrence, by affecting to shun him as a loathsome object, or drawing near him to spit in his face. It may be supposed that these were the expressions of their resentment for his former opposition to their villany; and of their joy that his authority was terminated. Because the Lord had loosed his cord, by depriving him of power and affluence, they behaved with unbridled insolence, and attempted to injure and destroy him by every means which they could devise. It is likely that they accused Job of oppression, because he had punished them for their crimes; and thus they endeavoured to "fortify against him the ways of their destruction," or to secure themselves from punishment in their abandoned courses. By these methods they marred or vilified his path, and helped forward his calamity, exciting his friends to treat him as a hypocrite, and "no helper unto them;" they had no need of help from Job's former friends, being already sufficiently daring and ingenious in their malice. For they came upon him as a torrent of waters, which bursts the banks, and rolls on with rapid desolation.—Scott.

His Sore Affliction.—Ver. 17. His bodily diseases were very grievous: for 1. He was full of pain, piercing pain, pain that went to the bone, to all his bones. It was a "sword in his bones," which "pierced him in the night season," when he should have been refreshed with sleep; his nerves were affected with strong convulsions, his sinews took no rest. By reason of his pain, he could take no rest, but sleep departed from his eyes. "His bones were burnt with heat," ver. 30. He was in a constant fever, which dried up the radical moisture, and even consumed the marrow in his bones. See how frail our bodies are, which carry in themselves the seeds of our own disease and death, and are full of sores. Some, that are pained in their bones, yet sleep in a whole skin; but Satan's commission against Job extending both to his bone and to his flesh, he spared neither. His "skin was black upon him," ver. 30. The blood settled, and the sores suppurated, which made his skin look black. Even his garment had its colour changed with the continual running of his boils, and the soft clothing he used to wear was now grown so stiff, that all his garments were "like his collar," ver. 18. It would be noisome to describe what a condition poor Job was in, for want of clean linen and good attendance, and what filthy rags all his clothes were. Some think, that, among other diseases, Job was ill of a quinsy, or swelling in his throat, and that that was it which bound him about like a stiff collar.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXI. Job's Chastity.—Ver. 1—4. Job first appeals to God, that he had avoided all unchastity, and had kept to the original institution of marriage; and that he strictly inhibited his eyes from gazing upon any woman, however beautiful, to lust after her, though she were unmarried, or his inferior. He had covenanted with them, that they should be confined to the beholding of the beauties of creation, and the examining of the works of God, and not be allowed to admit a licentious desire into his heart: and no doubt his imagination was equally forbidden to entertain the polluting thought, by which lust is conceived and sin is produced. For, however man might excuse these things, Job knew that God abhorred them: and if he were guilty of them, he could expect nothing from above, but destruction in another world; and perhaps some strange punishment in this life, such as befell the inhabitants of Sodom: (for that seems referred to:) for God saw all his ways and marked his steps, though he might conceal them from man.—In this chapter and in the twenty-ninth, vastly more is contained of genuine purity and equity; of condescending, liberal, self-denying kindness to the poor and needy; of superiority to the love of the world and the fear of men, and all corrupt motives, as well as of sterling piety, than in all the writings of pagan antiquity combined. The standard of duty is fixed as high as in the moral law, and explained as spiritually as in our Saviour's sermon on the mount.—Scott.

His tender Benevolence.—Ver. 16. If a poor person begged a kindness of him, he was ready to gratify him; if he could but perceive, by the widow's mournful craving look that she expected an alms from him, though she had not confidence enough to ask it, he had compassion enough to give it, and "never caused the eyes of the widow to fail." He put a respect upon the poor, and did them honour; for he took the fatherless children to eat with him at his own table, they should fare as he fared, and be familiar with him, and he would show himself pleased with their company, as if they had been his own, ver. 17. As he is one of the greatest grievances of [illegible] exposes to contempt, so it is [illegible] to the poor.

if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep;

21 If I have [l]lifted up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate:

22 Then let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone.

23 For destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure.

35 [m]Oh that one would hear me! behold, [l]my desire is, [n]that the Almighty would answer me, and that [o]mine adversary had written a book.

36 Surely I would take it upon my shoulder, and bind it as a crown to me.

SO these three men ceased [*]to answer Job, because he was [a]righteous in his own eyes.

2 Then was [b]kindled the wrath of Elihu the son of Barachel the [c]Buzite,[1] of the kindred of Ram: against Job was his wrath kindled, [d]because he justified [†]himself rather than God.

3 Also against his three friends was his wrath kindled, [e]because they had found no answer, [f]and yet had condemned Job.

4 Now Elihu had [‡]waited till Job had spoken, because they were [§]elder than he.

5 When Elihu saw that there was no answer in the mouth of these three men, then [g]his wrath was kindled.

6 And Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite answered and said, [h]I am [l]young, and [i]ye are very old; wherefore I was afraid, and [*]durst not shew you mine opinion.

7 I said, [k]Days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom.

8 But there is a spirit in man: and [l]the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.[2]

9 [m]Great men are not always wise: [n]neither do the aged understand judgment.

10 Therefore I said, [o]Hearken to me; I also will shew mine opinion.

11 Behold, [p]I waited for your words; I gave ear to your [†]reasons, [q]whilst ye searched out [‡]what to say.

12 Yea, I attended unto you, and, [r]behold, there was none of you that convinced Job, or that answered his words;

13 [s]Lest ye should say, [t]We have found out wisdom: [u]God thrusteth him down, not man.

14 Now he hath not [§]directed his words against me: neither will I answer him with your speeches.

15 They were [x]amazed, they answered no more: they [l]left off speaking.

16 When I had waited, (for they spake not, but stood still, and answered no more;)

17 I said, [z]I will answer also my part, I also will shew mine opinion.

18 For I am full of [*]matter, [a]the spirit [†]within me constraineth me.

19 Behold, my belly is as wine which [‡]hath no vent; it is ready to burst like [b]new bottles.

20 [c]I will speak, that [§]I may be refreshed; [d]I will open my lips, and answer.

21 Let me not, I pray you, [e]accept any man's person, neither let me give [f]flattering titles unto man.

22 For [g]I know not to give flattering titles: in so doing my Maker would soon take me away.

He was very tender of them, and had a fatherly concern for them, ver. 18. He was a father to the fatherless, took care of orphans, brought them up with him under his own eye, and gave them not only maintenance but education. He was a guide to the widow, who had lost the guide of her youth: he advised her in her affairs, took cognizance of them, and undertook the management of them. Those that need not our alms, may yet have occasion for our counsel, and it may be a real kindness to them. This Job says he did "from his youth, from his mother's womb," that is, he had something of tenderness and compassion woven in his nature; he began betimes to do good ever since he could remember; he had always some poor widow or fatherless child under his care. His parents taught him betimes to pity and relieve the poor, and brought up orphans with him. He provided food convenient for them; they ate of the same morsels that he did, ver. 17, not after him, of the crumbs that fell from his table, but with him, of the best dish upon his table.

THE PURITY OF HIS WORSHIP.—Ver. 26. 1. Job never so much as beheld the sun or the moon in their pomp and lustre, with any other admiration of them, than what led him to give all the glory of their brightness and usefulness to their Creator. Against spiritual as well as corporal adultery he made a covenant with his eyes; and this was his covenant, that, whenever he looked at the lights of heaven, he should by faith look through them, and beyond them, to the Father of lights. 2. He kept his heart with all diligence, that that should not be secretly enticed to think that there is a divine glory in their brightness, or a divine power in their influence, and that therefore divine honours are to be paid to them. Here is the source of idolatry; it begins in the heart; every man is tempted to that, as to other sins, when he is drawn away by his own lust and enticed. 3. He did not so much as put a compliment upon these pretended deities, did not perform the least and lowest act of adoration. "His mouth did not kiss his hand," which, it is likely, was a ceremony then commonly used, even by some that yet would not be thought idolaters.

HIS CHALLENGE TO HIS ACCUSERS.—Ver. 35. "'Oh that mine adversary had written a book'—That my friends, who charge me with hypocrisy, would draw up their charge in writing, that it might be reduced to a certainty, and that we might the better join issue upon it." Job would be very glad to see the libel, to have a copy of his indictment; he would not hide it under his arm, but take it upon his shoulder, to be seen and read of all men; nay, he would bind it as a crown to him, would be pleased with it, and look upon it as his ornament: for, 1. If it discovered to him any sin he had been guilty of, which he did not yet see, he should be glad to know it, that he might repent of it, and get it pardoned. A good man is willing to know the worst of himself, and will be thankful to those that will faithfully tell him of his faults. 2. If it charged him with what was false, he doubted not but to disprove the allegations, that his innocency would be cleared up as the light, and he should come off with so much the more honour. But, 3. He did believe that, when his adversaries came to consider the matter so closely as they must do, if they put the charge in writing, the accusations would be trivial and minute, and every one that saw them would say, "If this was all they had to say against him, it was a shame they had given him so much trouble."—Henry.

CHAP. XXXII. ELIHU.—Ver. 1—12. Elihu here appears to be a man of great modesty and humility, though a young man, and a man of abilities, yet not pert, and confident, and assuming; his face shone, and, like Moses, he did not know it, which made it shine so much the brighter. Let it be observed by all, especially by young people, as worthy their imitation, 1. What a diffidence he had of himself, and of his own judgment, ver. 6, "'I am young, and therefore I was afraid, and durst not show you mine opinion,' for fear I should either prove mistaken, or do that which was unbecoming me." He was so observant of all that passed, and applied his mind so closely to what he heard, that he had formed in himself a judgment of it; he neither neglected it as foreign, nor declined it as intricate: but, how clear soever the matter was to himself, he was afraid to deliver himself upon it, because he differed in his sentiments from those that were elder than he. Note, It becomes us to be suspicious of our own judgment in matters of doubtful disputation, to be swift to hear the sentiments of others, and slow to speak our own, especially when we go contrary to the judgment of those whom, upon the score of their learning and piety, we justly have a veneration for. 2. What a deference he paid to his seniors, and what great expectations he had from them, ver. 7, "I said, Days should speak." Note, Age and experience give a man great advantage in judging of things, both as they furnish a man so much the more matter for his thoughts to work upon, and as they ripen and improve the faculties he is to work with; which is a good reason why old people should take pains both to learn themselves, and to teach others, (else the advantages of their age are a reproach to them,) and why young people should attend on their instructions: it is good "lodging with an old disciple," Acts xxi. 16, Tit. ii. 4. Elihu's modesty appeared in the patient attention he gave to what his seniors said, ver. 11, 12. He waited for their words, as one that expected much from them, agreeably to the opinion he had of these grave men. He gave ear to their reasons that he might take their meaning, and fully understand what was the drift of their discourse, and what the force of their arguments.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Elihu offereth himself instead of God, with sincerity and meekness, to reason with Job, 1. He excuseth God, by his greatness, from giving man an account of his ways, 8. He inciteth Job to attention, 31.

WHEREFORE, Job, I pray thee, [a]hear my speeches, and hearken to all my words.

2 Behold, now [b]I have opened my mouth, my tongue hath spoken in my [*]mouth.

3 My words shall be of the uprightness of my heart: and my lips shall utter knowledge [†]clearly.

4 The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.

5 If thou canst answer me, set thy words in order before me, [b]stand up.

6 Behold, I am according to thy [‡]wish [k]in God's stead: I also am [l]formed out of the clay.

7 Behold, [m]my terror shall not make thee afraid, neither shall [n]my hand be heavy upon thee.

8 Surely thou hast spoken in mine [‡]hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, saying,

9 I am clean without transgression, I am [p]innocent; neither is there iniquity in me.

10 Behold, he findeth occasions against me, [r]he counteth me for his enemy.

11 He [s]putteth my feet in the stocks,[1] [t]he marketh all my paths.

12 Behold, in this thou art not just: I will answer thee, that [y]God is greater than man.

13 Why dost thou strive against him? for he [*]giveth not account of any of his matters.

14 For [b]God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not.

15 In [d]a dream, in a vision of the night, when [e]deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed;

16 Then he [†]openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction,

17 That he may [h]withdraw man from his [‡]purpose, and [i]hide pride from man.[2]

18 He [k]keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from [§]perishing by the sword.

19 He is [l]chastened also with [m]pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with strong pain:

20 So that [n]his life abhorreth bread, and his soul [‡]dainty meat.

21 [o]His flesh is consumed away, that it cannot be seen; and [p]his bones that were not seen stick out.

22 Yea, [q]his soul draweth near unto the grave, and [r]his life to the destroyers.

23 If there be [s]a messenger with him, [t]an interpreter, [u]one among a thousand, [x]to shew unto man his uprightness:

24 [y]Then he is gracious unto him, and saith, [z]Deliver him from going down to the pit: [a]I have found [*]a ransom.

25 His flesh shall be fresher than a [†]child's: he shall return to the days of his youth:

26 He shall [d]pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him: [e]and he shall see his face with joy:[3] for [f]he will render unto man his righteousness.

27 He [‡]looketh upon men, and if any say, [h]I have sinned, and [i]perverted that which was right, and it profited me not;

28 He [§]will [m]deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall [n]see the light.[4]

29 Lo, all these things worketh God [l]oftentimes with man,

30 [p]To bring back his soul from the pit, to be enlightened with the light of the living.

31 Mark well, O Job, hearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I will speak.

32 If thou hast any thing to say, answer me: speak, for I desire to justify thee.

33 If not, hearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I shall teach thee wisdom.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Elihu accuseth Job for charging God with injustice, 1. God Omnipotent cannot be unjust, 10. Man must humble himself unto God, 31. Elihu reproveth Job, 34.

FURTHERMORE Elihu answered and said,

2 Hear my words, [a]O ye wise men; and give ear unto me, ye that have knowledge.

3 For [b]the ear trieth words, as the [*]mouth tasteth meat.

4 Let us choose to us judgment: let us [d]know among ourselves what is good.

5 For Job hath said, [e]I am righteous: and [f]God hath taken away my judgment.

6 Should [g]I lie against my right?[1] my [†]wound is incurable without transgression.

7 What man is like Job, who [h]drinketh up scorning like water?

8 Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.

9 For he hath said, [k]It profiteth a man nothing, that he should [l]delight himself with God.

10 Therefore hearken unto me, ye men of [‡]understanding: far be it from God, that he should do wickedness; and from the Almighty, that he should commit iniquity.

11 For the work of a man shall he render unto him, and cause every man to find according to his ways.

12 Yea, [p]surely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty [q]pervert judgment.

CHAP. XXXIII. PURPOSE OF ELIHU'S ADDRESS.—Ver. 1. Observe, 1. That Elihu does not join with his three friends against Job: he has, in the foregoing chapter, declared his dislike of their proceedings, disclaimed their hypothesis, and quite set aside the method they took of healing Job. "Wherefore, Job, 'I pray thee, hear my speech,' ver. 1. They all spake in the same strain; but I am trying a new way, 'therefore hearken to all my words,' and not to some of them only;" for we cannot judge of a discourse unless we take it entire, and hearken to it all. 2. That he intended to make a solemn business of it, not to put in a word by the by, or give a short repartee, to show his wit; after long silence, 'he opened his mouth,' ver. 2, with deliberation and design; upon mature consideration, he had already begun to speak, and was prepared to go on, if Job would encourage him by his attention. 3. That he was resolved to speak as he thought, and not otherwise; ver. 3, "'My words shall be of the uprightness of my heart,' the genuine product of my convictions and sentiments." There was reason to suspect that Job's three friends did not think, in their consciences, that Job was so bad a man as they had, in their discourses, merely for the support of their hypothesis, represented him to be; and that was not fair. 4. That what he said should be easy, and not dark and hard to be understood; "My lips shall utter knowledge clearly." Job shall readily take his meaning, and perceive what he aims at. Those that speak of the things of God, should carefully avoid all obscurity and perplexedness, both of notion and expression, and speak as plainly and clearly as they can; for by that it will appear that they do themselves understand what they speak of, that they mean honestly, and design the edification of those they speak to. 5. That he would, in his discourse, make the best use he could of the reason and understanding God had given him, that life, that rational soul which he received from "the Spirit of God" and "the breath of the Almighty," ver. 4. He owns himself unfit to enter into the lists with his seniors, yet he desires they will not despise his youth, for that he is God's workmanship as well as they, made by the same hand, endued with the same noble powers and faculties, and designed for the same great end.—Henry.

PATRIARCHAL THEOLOGY.—Ver. 23. As interpreters were scarce, not one among a thousand being capable of the service, they were the more to be valued; for they would show the sinner the justice of God in his sufferings and condemnation; his way of pardoning and justifying the penitent believer; his sincerity and faithfulness to his promises; and the way of holiness. Such a messenger frequently proved the instrument of a man's conversion; and the Lord in mercy commanded his deliverance from the pit of destruction, through the ransom, or atonement, which he had appointed and revealed, even that of the promised Messiah; and sometimes restored his health, vigour, and comeliness, as if he were become young again. Thus the sinner was taught to pray unto God, and he forgave him; he had comfortable communion with him at his mercy-seat, and hoped to see his face with joy in heaven; and would be graciously recompensed for all the works of righteousness, which he had performed in humble faith and love.—Some interpret this Messenger, or Angel, of Christ himself, the Interpreter of God's will to man, the chief amongst the ten thousands of his saints and servants. But, as in general he comes to men by his messengers, or ministers; and as their instructions and encouragements are deduced from his mediation, and are made effectual by his gracious presence, it is not very material, whether we interpret the passage, of the messengers of God pointing to the Saviour, or the Saviour revealing himself by their ministry. It is equally immaterial, whether the words, "deliver him from going down to the pit," be considered as the language of Christ's intercession, pleading the ransom of his blood in behalf of the sinner; or the words of the Father accepting of this plea, and giving command to save the sinner, satisfied with that appointed ransom. It cannot reasonably be doubted, but that Elihu had reference to the promised Redeemer, though he might also intend the sacrifices which prefigured the great atonement.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXIV. ELIHU'S REPROOF OF JOB.—Ver. 5—9. In vindicating his character, Job had used language which seemed to imply an intention of fully justifying himself; and, whilst he complained that God dealt rigorously with him, he expressed himself so vehemently, that he appeared to charge God with injustice; when urged to confess his crimes, he still more earnestly protested his righteousness, and a determination not to accuse himself falsely; and, in his bitter complainings, he spake of his "wound as incurable," without admitting that his "transgressions had deserved it." These expressions induced Elihu to conclude that Job allowed himself in an astonishing license of language; that he took pleasure in scoffing at the works and truths of God, as well as in scorning the warnings and counsels of his friends; and that he agreed in principles and practice with wicked men, whose company he seemed to prefer, and whose conduct he encouraged; having, indeed, asserted, that no profit would accrue to those who delighted in the service of God; yet Job by no means intended all that Elihu charged upon him. He had not spoken precisely all the words which Elihu, quoting from memory, attributed to him; those which he had used, might admit of a more favourable construction; and other parts of his discourse plainly showed that his deliberate judgment widely differed from the sentiments apparently conveyed by some of his detached expressions. He had repeatedly owned that he was a sinner; and he spoke of the wicked as reserved to the day of wrath and destruction. But Elihu, [illegible] Job as a the earth? or who hath disposed [t]the whole world?

14 If he [s]set his heart [l]upon man, if [t]he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath;

15 All flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust.

16 If now [x]thou hast understanding, hear this: hearken to the voice of my words.

17 Shall even he that hateth right *govern? and [z]wilt thou condemn him that is most just?

18 Is it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? and to princes, Ye are ungodly?

19 How much less to him that accepteth not the persons of princes, nor [d]regardeth the rich more than the poor? for [e]they all are the work of his hands.

20 In [f]a moment shall they die,[2] and the people shall be [g]troubled at midnight, and pass away: and [†]the mighty shall be taken away [h]without hand.

21 For [i]his eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings.

22 There is [k]no darkness, [l]nor shadow of death, where [m]the workers of iniquity may hide themselves.

23 For he will not lay upon man more than right; [o]that he should [‡]enter into judgment with God.

24 He shall [p]break in pieces mighty men without [§]number, and set others in their stead.

25 Therefore [r]he knoweth their works, and he overturneth them [s]in the night, so that they are [l]destroyed.

26 He striketh them as wicked men [t]in the open sight of others;[3]

27 Because they [u]turned back *from him, and [x]would not consider any of his ways:

28 So that [y]they cause the cry of the poor to come unto him, [z]and he heareth the cry of the afflicted.

29 When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? and [b]when he hideth his face, [c]who then can behold him? whether it be done against a nation, or against a man only:

30 That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be ensnared.

31 Surely it is meet to be said unto God, I have borne chastisement, I will not offend any more:

32 That which I see not teach thou me: if I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

33 [d]Should it be [†]according to thy mind? [k]he will recompense it, [l]whether thou refuse, or whether thou choose; and not I: therefore speak [m]what thou knowest.

34 Let men of [‡]understanding tell me, and let a wise man hearken unto me.

35 Job hath spoken without knowledge, and his words were without wisdom.

CHAP. XXXV.

Comparison is not to be made with God, because our good or evil cannot extend unto him, 1. Many cry in their afflictions, but are not heard for want of faith, 9.

ELIHU spake moreover, and said,

2 [a]Thinkest thou this to be right, that thou saidst, [b]My righteousness is more than God's?

3 For thou saidst, [c]What advantage will it be unto thee? and, What profit shall I have, if I be cleansed* from my sin?

4 I will [†]answer thee, and thy companions with thee.

5 [e]Look unto the heavens, and see; and behold [f]the clouds which are higher [l]than thou.

6 If thou sinnest, what doest thou against him? or if thy transgressions be multiplied, what doest thou unto him?

7 If thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand?

8 Thy wickedness may hurt a man as thou art; and thy righteousness may profit the son of man.

9 By reason of the multitude of oppressions [l]they make the oppressed to cry: they cry out by reason of [m]the arm of the mighty.

10 But [n]none saith,[1] [o]Where is God [p]my maker, [q]who giveth songs in the night;

11 Who [r]teacheth us more than the beasts of the earth, and maketh us wiser than the fowls of heaven?

12 [s]There they cry, but none giveth answer, [t]because of the pride of evil men.

13 Surely God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it.

14 Although thou sayest thou shalt not see him, yet judgment is before him; therefore [u]trust thou in him.

15 But now, because it is not so, [‡]he hath [c]visited in his anger; yet [§]he knoweth it not [d]in great extremity:

16 Therefore doth Job [e]open his mouth in vain; he multiplieth words without knowledge.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Elihu sheweth how God is just in his ways, 1, and how Job's sins hinder God's blessings, 16. God's works are to be magnified, 24.

ELIHU also proceeded, and said,

2 [a]Suffer me a little, and I will shew thee that I have* yet to speak [b]on God's behalf.

3 I will [c]fetch my knowledge from afar,[1] and will [d]ascribe righteousness to my Maker.

4 For truly [e]my words shall not be false:

therefore quietly submitted to his reproof, choosing, as we may suppose, rather to bear more blame than he deserved, than to vindicate himself when he knew that he had been criminal.—Scott.

Submission to God Enjoined.—Ver. 20. God is to be acknowledged and submitted to in all that he does. Divers considerations Elihu here suggests to Job, to beget in him great and high thoughts of God, and so to persuade him to submit, and proceed no further in his quarrel with him. God is almighty, and able to deal with the strongest of men when he enters into judgment with them. Observe the suddenness of this destruction; "In a moment shall they die." It is not a work of time, with God, to bring down his proud enemies, but, when he pleases, it is soon done; nor is he bound to give them warning, no, not an hour's warning; "This night thy soul shall be required." Observe the reason of it; "They shall be troubled at midnight," when they are secure and careless, and unable to help themselves; as the Egyptians, when their first-born were slain. This is the immediate work of God; they are taken away, without hand, insensibly, by secret judgments. God can himself humble the greatest tyrant, without the assistance or agency of any man. Whatever hand he sometimes uses in the accomplishing of his purposes, he needs none, but can do it without hand. Nor is it one single mighty man only that he can thus overpower, but even hosts of them; ver. 24, "He shall break in pieces mighty men without number;" for no combined power can stand it out against Omnipotence. Yet, when God destroys tyranny, he does not design anarchy; if those are brought down that ruled ill, it does not therefore follow that people must have no rulers; for, when he breaks mighty men, he sets others in their stead, that will rule better; or, if they do not, he overturns them also in the night, or in a night, so that they are destroyed, ver. 25. Witness Belshazzar.

Resignation Inculcated.—Ver. 31. Elihu directs Job, 1. To humble himself before God for his sins, and to accept the punishment of them; "'I have borne chastisement.' What I suffer comes justly upon me, and therefore I will bear it, and not only justify God in it, but acknowledge his goodness." Many are chastised, that do not bear chastisement, do not bear it well, and so, in effect, do not bear it at all. Penitents, if sincere, will take all well that God does, and will bear chastisement as a medicinal operation intended for good. 2. To pray to God to discover his sins to him; ver. 32, "'That which I see not, teach thou me.' Lord, upon the review, I find much amiss in me, and much done amiss by me, but I have reason to fear there is much more that I am not aware of; greater abominations, which, through ignorance, mistake, and partiality to myself, I do not yet see: Lord, give me to see it, awaken my conscience to do its office faithfully." A good man is willing to know the worst of himself, and particularly, under affliction, desires to be told wherefore God contends with him, and what God designs in correcting him. 3. To promise reformation; ver. 31, "I will not offend any more." "'If I have done iniquity,' (or, Seeing I have,) 'I will do so no more;' whatever thou shalt discover to me to have been amiss, by thy grace I will amend it for the future." This implies a confession that we have offended, true remorse and godly sorrow for the offence, and a humble compliance with God's design in afflicting us, which is to part between us and our sins.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXV. Man's Superiority to the Lower Creation.—Ver. 11. God preserves to us the use of our reason and understanding, "who teaches us more than the beasts of the earth," that is, who has endued us with more noble powers and faculties than they are endued with, and has made us capable of more excellent pleasures and employments here and for ever. Now this comes in here, 1. As that which furnishes us with matter for thanksgiving, even under the heaviest burthen of affliction. Whatever we are deprived of, we have our immortal souls, those jewels more worth than all the world, continued to us; even those that kill the body cannot hurt them. 2. As a reason why we should, under our afflictions, inquire after God our Maker, and seek unto him. This is the greatest excellency of reason, that it makes us capable of religion, and it is in that especially that we are "taught more than the beasts and the fowls." They have wonderful instincts and sagacities in seeking out their food, their physic, their shelter; but none of them are capable of inquiring, "Where is God my Maker?" Something like logic, and philosophy, and politics, has been observed among the brute-creatures, but never any thing of divinity or religion; these are peculiar to man. If, therefore, the oppressed only "cry by reason of the arm of the mighty," and do not look up to God, they do no more than the brutes, (who complain when they are hurt,) and they forget that instruction and wisdom by which they are advanced so far above them. God relieves the brute-creatures, because they cry to him according to the best of their capacity, Ps. civ. 21, chap. xxxviii. 41. But what reason have men to expect relief, who are capable of inquiring after God as their maker, and yet cry to him no otherwise than as brutes do?—Henry.

CHAP. XXXVI. Providence.—Ver. 5—15. In this passage Elihu laid down his system of divine providence; in which he spake more accurately than the other disputants had done, without aiming to decide upon Job's character. Yet he seems to have leaned to the sentiments of Job's friends, that, in some way or other, temporal deliverance and prosperity, or the contrary, generally distinguished betwixt the righteous and the wicked.

9 Then he sheweth them their work, and their transgressions that they have exceeded.

10 He [t]openeth also their ear to discipline, and [u]commandeth that they return from iniquity.

11 [x]If they obey and serve him, they shall [y]spend their days in prosperity, and their years in pleasures.

12 But [z]if they obey not, they shall [§]perish by the sword, and they shall [a]die without knowledge.

13 But the hypocrites in heart [b]heap up wrath: they cry not when he bindeth them.[2]

14 [‖]They die in youth, and their life is among the [*]unclean.

15 He delivereth the poor in [†]his affliction, and [§]openeth their ears[3] in oppression.

17 But thou hast fulfilled the judgment of the wicked: judgment and justice [§]take hold on thee.

18 Because there is wrath, beware lest he take thee away with his stroke: then a great ransom cannot [‖]deliver thee.

19 Will he esteem thy riches? no, not gold, nor all the forces of strength.

20 Desire not the night, when people are cut off in their place.

21 Take heed, [‖]regard not iniquity: for this hast thou chosen rather than affliction.

22 Behold, God exalteth by his power: who teacheth like him?

23 Who hath enjoined him his way? or who can say, [z]Thou hast wrought iniquity?

24 Remember that thou [a]magnify his work, [b]which men behold.

25 Every man may see it; man may behold it afar off.

26 Behold, [c]God is great, and [d]we know him not, [e]neither can the number of his years be searched out.

27 For [f]he maketh small the drops of water: they pour down rain according to the vapour thereof;

28 Which the clouds do drop and distil upon man abundantly.

29 Also can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle?

30 Behold, he spreadeth his light upon it, and covereth the [*]bottom of the sea.

31 For [n]by them judgeth he the people;[4] [o]he giveth meat in abundance.

32 [p]With clouds he covereth the light;[5] and commandeth it not to shine by the cloud that cometh betwixt.

33 The noise thereof sheweth concerning it, the cattle also concerning [†]the vapour.

CHAP. XXXVII.

God is to be feared for his great works, 1. His wisdom is unsearchable in them, 15.

AT this also my heart trembleth, and is moved out of his place.

2 [*]Hear attentively the noise of his voice, and the sound that goeth out of his mouth.

3 He directeth it under the whole heaven, and his [†]lightning unto the [‡]ends of the earth.

4 After it [d]a voice roareth: he thundereth with [*]the voice of his excellency; and [f]he will not stay them when his voice is heard.

5 God [g]thundereth marvellously with his voice; great things doeth he, which we cannot comprehend.

6 For [1]he saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth; [§]likewise to the small rain, and to the [k]great rain of his strength.

7 [1]He sealeth up the hand of every man; that all men may know his work.

8 Then [n]the beasts go into dens, and remain in their places.

9 Out of the [‖]south cometh [o]the whirlwind: and cold out of the [*]north.

10 By the breath of God [p]frost is given: and the breadth of the waters is straitened.

11 Also by watering [q]he wearieth the thick cloud:[1] he [r]scattereth [†]his bright cloud:

12 And it is turned round about by his counsels: that they may do whatsoever he commandeth them upon the face of the world in the earth.

13 He causeth it to come, [u]whether for [‡]correction, or for his land, or [y]for mercy.

14 Hearken unto this, O Job: stand still, and [a]consider the wondrous works of God.

15 Dost thou know when God disposed them, and caused the light of his cloud to shine?

16 Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds, the wondrous works of him which is perfect in knowledge?

17 How thy garments are warm,[2] when he quieteth the earth by the south wind?

—He observed that God was mighty in strength and wisdom: yet, contrary to the common example of the wise and powerful in this world, he despised not the persons or the causes of the meanest of his subjects; he overlooked none, and oppressed none; and he noticed the most ignorant, poor, and contemptible of the earth, and would surely do them justice; yea, they all partook of his common benefits, and the vilest likewise of his special mercies, when willing to seek for them. Elihu further stated, that wicked men were not under the "peculiar protection" which secured the righteous; and therefore their lives were more exposed, and generally terminated prematurely; and this, indeed, might often take place by the judgment of God, in doing right to the poor whom they had injured. But assuredly He continually noticed and took care of his people; sometimes he advanced them to temporal authority; they were at all times watched over, with as much care as the greatest monarchs, whose lives were of vast importance to multitudes; and they would be sure at last to be established for ever in the most exalted and glorious state. If in this world they were imprisoned by oppressors, or any other way afflicted and distressed, it was intended for their benefit: the Lord would then show them whatever was sinful in their conduct: thus he would dispose them to receive instruction, and enforce their obligations to repent and turn from every sin, and follow after holiness. When they were brought more humbly and faithfully to submit to, obey, and worship him, he would restore and increase their comforts and prosperity, and they would spend their lives in peace and pleasure. But if any continued obstinate and impenitent, they might expect to be cut off by some sudden judgment, and to perish in their sins. Thus hypocrites, who cloaked their secret crimes with a show of piety, treasured up wrath: because, when bound with the cords of affliction, they refused to humble themselves, and cry for help unto God. They were therefore often cut off prematurely, or left to apostatize, and spend their lives amongst the most atrocious sinners, increasing their own condemnation: and at last they would be doomed to misery with the most abominable transgressors, such as were the "unclean inhabitants of Sodom."

CREATION.—Ver. 22, 23. Elihu here again renewed his attempt to convince Job of his presumption, by representing to him the incomprehensible majesty and power of God. It was madness to contend with him, who alone was able to deliver or exalt; or to dictate to him, who alone could teach man wisdom, and from whom Job should have sought instruction how to behave under his afflictions, and obtain deliverance from them. Who could arrogate a right to enjoin to the Sovereign of the universe, the fountain of life and excellence, how He ought to act? Or to find fault with any of his appointments? It was far more proper for men to remember their duty, and to magnify, admire, and praise the works of God, as presented to their view, than to pass a judgment upon those dispensations, which are beyond their comprehension. The most distant view of the creation, and of the course of nature, discovered his eternal power and Godhead, to those who would behold them: but the greatness of the infinite and eternal God could not be known or searched out. Even the rain, which Eliphaz had before noticed, displayed exceedingly his wisdom and goodness: as he pleased, the clouds distilled their contents, in gentler rains or heavier showers, for the abundant benefit of man. But none could fully comprehend how the clouds were formed and spread abroad, or the thunders produced in those pavilions of the Almighty. For whilst a glorious light was at one moment diffused over the clouds, at the next that light was veiled by the water, drawn even from the bottom of the sea; or the thick clouds seem to darken the sea even to the bottom. Thus by dreadful thunder storms, inundations, or deluges, the Lord sometimes executed his judgments upon sinners; and at others he made the earth yield in abundance food for man and beast.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXVII. THUNDER.—Ver. 1, 2. Observe here, 1. How Elihu was himself affected, and desired to affect Job, with the appearances of God's glory in the thunder and lightning, "For my part," (says Elihu,) "my heart trembles at it; though I have often heard it, often seen it, yet it is still terrible to me, and makes every joint of me tremble, and my heart beat as if it would move out of its place." Thunder and lightning have been dreadful to the wicked; the emperor Caligula would run into a corner, or under a bed, for fear of them: those who are very much astonished, we say, are thunder-struck. Even good people think thunder and lightning very awful: that which makes them the more terrible, is the hurt often done by lightning, many having been killed by it: Sodom and Gomorrah were laid in ruins by it: it is a sensible indication of what God could do to this sinful world, and what he will do, at last, by the fire to which it is reserved. Our hearts, like Elihu's, should tremble at it for fear of God's judgments, Ps. cxix. 120. He also calls upon Job to attend to it, ver. 2, "Hear attentively the noise of his voice." Perhaps, as yet, it thundered at a distance, and could not be heard without listening: or rather, though the thunder itself will be heard, and, whatever we are doing, we cannot help attending to it, yet, to apprehend and understand the instructions God thereby gives us, we have need to hear with great attention and application of mind. Thunder is called "the voice of the Lord," Ps. xxix. 3, &c., because by it God speaks to the children of men, to fear before him, and it should put us in mind of that mighty word by which the world was at first made, which is called thunder; Ps. civ. 7, "At the voice of thy thunder, they hasted away," namely, the waters, when God said, "Let them be gathered into one place." greatness should labour to affect others. 2. How he describes them. (1.) Their original; not their second causes, but the first. God directs the thunder, and the lightning is his, ver. 3. Their production and motion are not from chance, but from the counsel of God, and under the direction and dominion of his providence, though, to us, they seem accidental and ungovernable. (2.) Their extent. The claps of thunder roll under the whole heaven, and are heard far and near; so are the lightnings darted to the ends of the earth, they come out of the one part under heaven, and shine to the other, Luke xvii. 24. (3.) Their order. The lightning is first directed, and "after it a voice roars," ver. 4. The flash of fire, and the noise it makes in a watery cloud, are really at the same time; but, because the motion of light is much quicker than that of sounds, we see the lightning some time before we hear the thunder, as we see the firing of a great gun at a distance before we hear the report of it. The thunder is here called "the voice of God's excellency," because by it he proclaims his transcendent power and greatness. "He sends forth his voice, and that a mighty voice," Ps. lxviii. 33.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXVIII. APPEARANCE OF GOD.—Ver. 1. Both Job and his opponents had appealed to the Lord, and earnestly desired that he would decide the controversy. Job had silenced, but he had not convinced, his friends: Elihu had silenced Job, but had not brought him to plead guilty; and his character was yet undecided. The debate would therefore have terminated inconclusively, had it not pleased God to interpose: but he soon made Job sensible of his faults; and he convinced his friends that he was a righteous man, and that they had done him injustice: and thus all parties were humbled and profited by the transaction.—With terrible majesty the Lord spake out of the cloud or tempest, which, probably, was raised to a vehement whirlwind whilst he was speaking. He addressed Job, and continued Elihu's argument; "but in inimitable words, excelling his and all other men's in the loftiness of the style, as much as a thunder doth a whisper." He rebuked Job first, and then his friends: but Elihu, who had come nearest to the truth, and had spoken with reverence, seriousness, and temper, was not reproved, though in some things he bare too hard upon Job.—Scott.

SONG AT CREATION.—Ver. 7. The angels are called "the sons of God," because they bear much of his image, are with him in his house above, and serve him as a son does his father. Now observe here, 1. The glory of God, as the Creator of the world, is to be celebrated with joy and triumph by all his reasonable creatures; for they are qualified and appointed to be the collectors of his praises from the inferior creatures, who can praise him merely as objects that exemplify his workmanship. 2. The work of angels is to praise God; the more we abound in holy, humble, thankful, joyful praise, the more we do the will of God as they do it; and whereas we are so barren and defective in praising God, it is a comfort to think that they are doing it in a better manner. 3. They were unanimous in singing God's praises; they sang together with one accord, and there was no jar to their harmony. The sweetest concerts are in praising God. 4. They all did it, even those who afterward fell and left their first estate; even those who have praised God may, by the deceitful power of sin, be brought to blaspheme him, and yet God will be eternally praised.—Henry.

OCEAN.—Ver. 8—11. Job was next called to consider the mighty ocean. At the Creator's word, the seas separated from the dry land, issuing forth as an infant from the womb. The clouds that hover over the ocean, and the unknown shores which surround it, form, as it were, the swaddling band and garment of it, "as if it were but as a little babe in the hands of God." The vast hollows of the earth are its appointed place, in which it is confined, as with bolts and bars: and though it is vehemently tossed by tempestuous winds, and the tides roll its billows to the shore, as if it were about to cover the earth again; yet, at the Lord's command the storm subsides, and the tide rolls back; and he deals with this most furious element as easily as with an infant; and this, not so much by the barrier of the shores, as by virtue of that inexplicable property, which we call gravitation.—Thus he stays the proud or swelling waves of the sea, and assigns them their bounds, which they cannot pass.

MYSTERIES OF NATURE.—Ver. 22—30. To convince Job of his ignorance, and of the unsearchable wisdom and knowledge of God, some other perplexing questions were proposed to him. The snow and hail seem to be brought forth out of a treasury. But had Job ever entered thither? Did he understand the manner of their production? or were they at his command? With them the Lord troubles and fights against his enemies when he sees good: but could Job employ them in his own cause, after the same manner? Could he explain the way in which the "morning light is divided, and the east," (or, from the east,) "scattered over the whole earth?" Could he suppose that any but God directed the clouds, as a water-course to convey the waters above the firmament, to their appointed places, attended by the thunder and lightning; so that even the uncultivated parts of the earth were watered, and made to produce food for the beasts which inhabit them? Could any account be given of the formation of the rain into larger or smaller drops? Was any one instrumental in the production of the dew, the ice, or the hoar-frost? Were not all these entirely the work of God, and inexplicable to man? Thus the course of rivers was arrested, the fluidity of the water changed, and covered as with a pavement of stone.—Scott.

5 Once have I spoken; [h]but I will not answer: yea, [i]twice; [k]but I will proceed no further.

6 ¶ Then answered the LORD[1] unto Job [l]out of the whirlwind, and said,

7 [m]Gird up thy loins now like a man: I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

8 [n]Wilt thou also [o]disannul my judgment? [p]wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayest be righteous?

—the seven stars, that constellation which lies in so small a compass, (none in less,) and yet sheds very benign influences upon the earth. Nor can we alter theirs that introduce the rigour of the winter; "Canst thou loose the bands of Orion?"—that magnificent constellation which makes so great a figure, (none greater,) and dispenses rough and unpleasing influences, which we cannot control or repel. It is not in our power to order the motions of the stars, nor are we intrusted with the conduct of them. God, who "calls the stars by their names," Ps. cxlvii. 4, calls them forth in their respective seasons, appoints them the time of their rising and setting; but this is not in our province, we cannot bring forth Mazzaroth—the stars in the southern signs, nor guide Arcturus—those in the northern, ver. 32. God can bring forth the stars to battle, (as he did when in their courses they fought against Sisera,) and guide them in the attacks they are ordered to make; but man cannot do so.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIX. THE WILD ASS.—Ver. 5—8. Some animals are evidently created for labour; others scorn the yoke: the tame ass is formed for a patient drudge; but the wild ass cannot be subjected. He has liberty as it were by charter: the barren wilderness is his residence, and its scanty productions his subsistence: yet it would be vain to attempt enticing him into populous cities, for the sake of a more plentiful support; or rendering him obedient to a driver's voice. But who gave him this liberty? Did not the Lord? And would Job suppose that he had not wise reasons for so doing? And as no human power can alter the nature of this animal, or render him serviceable to man; so it is equally impossible to alter the appointments of God, whether we are satisfied with them or not.—Scott.

THE UNICORN.—Rhem; a strong creature, Num. xxiii. 22, a stately proud creature, Ps. xcii. 10. He is able to serve, but not willing; and God here challenges Job to force him to it. Job expected every thing should be just as he would have it. "Since thou dost pretend," says God, "to bring every thing beneath thy sway, begin with the unicorn, and try thy skill upon him. Now that thine oxen and asses are all gone, try whether he will be willing to serve thee in their stead, ver. 9, and whether he will take up with the provision thou usest to make for them. 'Will he abide by thy crib?' No. Thou canst not tame him, nor 'bind him with his band,' nor set him to 'draw the harrow,'" ver 10. Though the wild bull (which some think is meant here by the unicorn) will not serve man, nor submit to his band in the furrows, yet there are tame bullocks that will, and other animals that are not feræ naturæ—of a wild nature, in whom man may have a property, for whom he provides, and to whose service he is entitled. "Lord, what is man, that thou art thus mindful of him." "Thou darest not trust him; though his strength is great, yet thou wilt not 'leave thy labour to him,' as thou dost with thine asses or oxen, whom a little child may lead or drive, leaving to them all the pains."—Henry.

THE HORSE.—Ver. 19—25. This description of the horse hath been universally admired, as inimitably sublime. It especially relates to those horses which are used in war; and in which the Eastern countries have always excelled.—God alone hath given the war-horse his strength and courage; the flowing mane, which clothes his neck, adds to the fierceness of his appearance, and seems to indicate his triumph. When going to the battle, he cannot be made afraid, or driven back like the puny grasshopper: the snorting of his nostrils, by which he bids defiance to his enemies, is dreadful. He paweth with his feet, as if he would tear up the earth in his impatience to engage: he glorieth and exulteth in his strength, and in going out to meet the armed men: in his eagerness to start, and his fierceness and rage for the fight, he, as it were, devoureth the intervening space. He can scarcely wait for the signal for the battle, or stand still, because of his impatience; and he deems the dreadful alarm of the trumpet a joyful sound; he has an instinctive sense of the battle, at a distance; and is all on fire to rush amongst the captains, who with terrific shouts are marching to the assault.—Yet, is this fierce intrepid animal easily subjected to man, made to fear the touch of the whip, or spur, obey the motion of the bridle, or even the voice of the rider, and almost that of a child! So wonderfully hath God formed and fitted him for the service of man!—Scott.

CHAP. XL.—BEHEMOTH, OR HIPPOPOTAMUS. Observe, 1. The description here given of the Behemoth. His body is very strong and well built; "His strength is in his loins," ver. 16. His bones, compared with those of other creatures, are like bars of iron, ver. 18. His back-bone is so strong, that, though his tail be not large, yet he moves it like a cedar, with a commanding force, ver. 17. Some understand it of the trunk of the elephant, for the word signifies any extreme part, and in that there is indeed a wonderful strength; so strong is the elephant in his back and loins, and the sinews of his thighs, that he will carry a large wooden tower, and a great number of fighting men in it. No animal whatsoever comes near the elephant for strength of body, which is the main thing insisted on in this description. 2. He feeds on the productions of the earth, and does not prey upon other animals, he "eats grass as an ox," ver. 15, the "mountains bring forth food," ver. 20, and the beasts of the field do not tremble before him, nor flee from him, as from a lion, but they play about him, knowing they are in no danger from him. 3. He lodges "under the shady trees," ver. 21, which "cover him with their shadow," ver. 22, where he has a free and open air to breathe in, while lions, which live by prey, when they [illegible]

13 Hide them in the dust together; and [c]bind their faces in secret.

14 Then will I also confess unto thee [d]that thine own right hand can save thee.

15 ¶ Behold now *behemoth, [e]which I made with thee; [f]he eateth grass as an ox.[2]

16 Lo now, his strength is in his loins, and his force is in the navel of his belly.

17 He [†]moveth his tail like a cedar: [g]the sinews of his stones are wrapped together.

19 He is [i]the chief of the ways of God: [k]he that made him can make his sword to approach unto him.

20 Surely [l]the mountains bring him forth food, [m]where all the beasts of the field play.

21 He lieth under the shady trees, in the covert of [n]the reed, and fens.

22 The shady trees cover him with their shadow; [o]the willows of the brook compass him about.

23 Behold, [‡]he drinketh up a river, and [p]hasteth not:[4] he trusteth that he can draw up [q]Jordan into his mouth.

themselves, are obliged to retire into a close and dark den, to live therein, and to abide in the covert of that, chap. xxxviii. 40. They who are a terror to others, cannot but be sometimes a terror to themselves too; but they will be easy, who will let others be easy about them; and the reed and fens, and the willows of the brook, though a very weak and slender fortification, yet are sufficient for the defence and security of those who therefore dread no harm, because they design none. 4. That he is a very great and greedy drinker, not of wine and strong drink, (to be greedy of that is peculiar to man, who by his drunkenness makes a beast of himself,) but of fair water. His size is prodigious, and therefore he must have supply accordingly, ver. 23. He drinks so much, that one would think he could drink up a river, if you would give him time, and not hasten him. Or, when he drinks, he hasteth not, as those do that drink in fear; he is confident of his own strength and safety, and therefore makes no haste when he drinks.—Henry.

CHAP. XLI.—Leviathan, or Crocodile. Ver. 1—34. The Lord, in order more deeply to convince Job of his presumption in contending with him, demanded of him, whether he was able to master leviathan. Could he draw him out of the sea with a line and a hook, which might fasten through his tongue, nose, or jaws, after the various methods of taking other fishes?—Could he bring this prodigious animal to yield, and become his supplicant, to speak him fair and court his favour? Could he engage him in a covenant to be his servant, and to labour for him? Or could he tame and confine him for the amusement of his family? Would he and his acquaintance make a feast upon his flesh? He was therefore directed to consider, whether he was able to wound leviathan in his body, or head, with barbed irons, or fish-spears, and thus to take him? He was challenged to lay his hand on him if he dared: but should he attempt it, and escape with his life, he would remember his perilous situation so well, that he would not make another attempt. How could Job then expect to prevail on his almighty Creator to alter his plan of government to please him, or to use his power to serve his interests, or humour his wayward inclinations? For where was that man, who had first given to the Lord and made him his debtor, that he should have a right to demand payment; when all things in the whole universe were the work and property of God? The Lord declared that he did not mean, by confining this prodigious animal in the vast ocean, to conceal from man "his parts, and power, and comely portion:" for, though we call such creatures monsters, and deem them uncomely, the Creator sees them to be formed in a suitable and becoming proportion of one part to another.—At first sight leviathan appears exceedingly formidable; and who can draw near to him, to examine particularly his whole skin, which serves as his garment, or to strip it off from him? Who would undertake to bridle him like a horse for his use? Or to look into his mouth; when a sight of his teeth would make any man dread immediate destruction? The scales, (or strong pieces of shields,) with which he is covered, as with an impenetrable coat of mail, are his confidence: by them he is secured, as if a seal fastened one part to another, so that no air can penetrate between them, no separation can be effected. When he "neeses," or spouts the water into the air, his breath sparkles like fire, and his eyes appear like the morning-light; so that burning lamps and sparks, and smoke appear to be emitted from his mouth, as from under a furnace; and the flame, which attends his breath, seems as if it would set coals on fire. His head is joined to his body with the most surprising strength: and it is as if sorrow, or fainting, marched before him, exulting in the havoc which he makes of other creatures; or, however assaulted, his confidence in his own strength turns all his sorrows into joy. His muscles are immoveably firm, and his heart as incapable of fear, or compassion, as if it were a millstone. When he appears above water, he causes such commotion and agitation in the waves, that the stoutest mariners are terrified, as in a furious storm; and betake themselves to confessions and prayers, expecting immediate death.—Scott.

CHAP. XLII. Job's Penitence.—Ver. 1—6. Job, borne down, as it were, with a torrent of light and conviction, at length answered; not in his own vindication, but with unreserved submission. He was fully assured, that the Lord could do every thing; and therefore it was madness to contend with him, and folly to despair of help from him. He knew that none of his impatient thoughts could be concealed from God: or, rather he meant, that the Lord could not be prevented from accomplishing every thing which he intended. He had allowed these truths before, peevishly, but he now acknowledged them with humble acquiescence, and not without hope of relief.—In reproof of his presumption, God had said, "Who is this, that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?" And Job here, in indignant astonishment at his own presumption, repeats the sentiment, and pleads guilty to the charge, as if he had said, "Who, indeed, am I, a poor sinful worm, that I should venture to darken such deep subjects, by my ignorant and impatient discourses?" He confessed that he had spoken things beyond his knowledge, and too wonderful, or mysterious, for him to comprehend; and in a manner which merited the severest punishment.—God had likewise commanded Job to prepare his answer whilst he proposed some questions to him, and blamed him for presuming to instruct the Almighty; but Job now humbly besought the Lord, that he would condescend to answer the questions which he desired to propose, solve those difficulties with which he was perplexed, declare his truth unto him, and become his instructor. He had indeed obtained some distant knowledge of God from education, instruction, and understood not; [d]things too wonderful for me, which I knew not.

4 [c]Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak: [f]I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

5 I have [g]heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but now [h]mine eye seeth thee.

6 Wherefore [i]I abhor myself, and [k]repent in dust and ashes.

7 ¶ And it was so, that after the LORD had spoken these words unto Job, the LORD said to [l]Eliphaz the Temanite, [m]My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends: for [n]ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right,[1] as my servant Job hath.

8 Therefore take unto you now [o]seven bullocks and seven rams, and [p]go to my servant Job, and [q]offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering; and [r]my servant Job shall pray for you: for [s]him will I accept: [t]lest I deal with you after your folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job.

9 ¶ So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite, went, and [u]did according as the LORD commanded them: the LORD also accepted *Job.

10 And the LORD [v]turned the captivity of Job, [x]when he prayed for his friends: also [y]the LORD [z]gave Job twice as much as he had before.

11 Then came there unto him [a]all his brethren, and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house: and they bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the LORD had brought upon him: [b]every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an earring of gold.

12 [c]So the LORD blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning: for he had fourteen thousand sheep, and six thousand camels, and a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she asses.

13 ¶ He had also seven sons and three daughters.[2]

14 And he called the name of the first, Jemima; and the name of the second, Kezia; and the name of the third, Keren-happuch.

15 And in all the land were [f]no women found so fair as the daughters of Job: and their father [g]gave them inheritance among their brethren.

16 ¶ After this lived Job an hundred and forty years, [l]and saw his sons, and his sons' sons, even four generations.

17 So Job died, being old and [k]full of days.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

THE Hebrew name of this book is Tehillim, or Praises; because the praises of God form its grand scope and object, to which all other subjects contained in it are, in one way or another, rendered subservient. The word Psalms is taken from the Greek, and denotes that these sacred hymns were, when sung, accompanied with the psaltery, harp, or lute: and, indeed, from the time of David, psalmody, with various kinds of instrumental music, formed a considerable part of the daily worship at the sanctuary. (Notes, 1 Chr. ix. 33; xv. 16-22; xvi. 4-6, 37-46; xxv.) The whole collection is often called "The Psalms of David." He, indeed, was undoubtedly the writer of the greatest part of them: his name is prefixed to above seventy Psalms: and he certainly wrote some, and probably many, of those which are not expressly ascribed to him: concerning others, it remains doubtful who composed them; but one is entitled "The Prayer of Moses, the Man of God" (xc.); and there is internal proof that some were written long after the time of David, and even during, or subsequent to, the Babylonish captivity. David, however, was the first who especially employed his poetical talents, by the guidance of the Holy Spirit, in composing sacred poems, and who established or regulated the psalmody at the sanctuary, was warranted to call himself "the sweet Psalmist of Israel," and to add, "the Spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his word was on my tongue." (Notes, 2 Sam. xxiii. 1-4.) Josephus informs us, that the Levites were enjoined to preserve at the temple all such hymns as might be composed in honour of God: and it is thought by some learned men, that the book of Psalms, which we now have, was selected from a much larger number, as divinely inspired, and so admissible into the canon of Scripture; while many others were rejected, as not entitled to this honourable distinction. However this may be, the entire book has certainly been considered as a part of "the oracles of God" in every age, by an invariable testimony. St Paul quotes the second Psalm expressly as a prophecy of Christ (Acts xiii. 33); which implies that the Psalms were arranged after the same order, in general, as they now are. Nearly fifty of the Psalms are quoted, or referred to, in the New Testament. Our Lord, proposing a question to the Scribes concerning the Messiah, introduces a passage from the hundred and tenth Psalm, in this manner, "David himself said by the Holy Ghost;" or, "David in Spirit calls him Lord:" and when instructing his disciples after his resurrection, he says, "All things must be fulfilled which are written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me." (Notes, Matt. xxii. 41-46; Mark xii. 35-37; Luke xxiv. 44-49.) In like manner, the apostle Paul, quoting a passage from the ninety-fifth Psalm, which he ascribes to David, uses this language—"Wherefore, as the Holy Ghost saith, To-day, if ye will hear his voice" (Notes, Acts iv. 23-28; Heb. iii. 7-13; iv. 3-11); and the assembled Christian Church applies the second Psalm to Christ, in these words—"Lord, thou art God, who, by the mouth of thy servant David, hast said." In so decided a manner is the Divine inspiration of the Old Testament attested by Christ and his apostles. The Jewish writers, indeed, are unwilling to bestow on David the title of prophet, and ascribe to him only a subordinate kind of inspiration, according to the several distinctions which they have devised in this respect; but St Peter expressly calls him a prophet (Note, Acts ii. 33-36); and the number and clearness of the predictions which he delivered, and which were evidently fulfilled after many ages, most fully prove him entitled to that character. Indeed, the several particulars respecting the descent, kingdom, and priesthood of Christ, the contempt and persecutions which he endured, and the intenseness and variety of his sufferings, the manner of his death, his resurrection, ascension, and glory, with the success of his gospel, and the calling of the Gentiles, are so circumstantially foretold in one or other of the Psalms, that a history of these events might in a great measure be compiled from them, and in some cases with a minuteness to which historians seldom descend. The words which our Lord used on the cross, in two instances, were taken from the Psalms; and the insulting language of his persecutors was the very same which David, above a thousand years before, had put into their mouths. (Notes, Ps. xxii. 1, 7, 8; xxxi. 5; Matt. xxvii. 39, 46; Luke xxiii. 46.) Many Psalms indeed are, directly and throughout, prophecies of Christ; various passages in others must be interpreted of him; and David was so eminent a type of the Saviour, that his very name, in some instances in the prophecies, is given to this his most illustrious descendant. (Notes, Is. lv. 1-5; Ez. xxxiv. 23-31; xxxvii. 25; Hos. iii. 4, 5.) But, besides this, that union which subsists betwixt the Redeemer and his people, and the conformity thence resulting, are of such a nature, that it is impossible but the same things should apply in many respects to both, though a discrimination must needs be observed in others. "The Psalms are an epitome of the Bible, adapted to the purposes of devotion. They treat occasionally of the creation and formation of the world, the dispensation of providence, and the economy of grace; the transactions of the patriarchs; the exodus of the children of Israel, their journey through the wilderness, and settlement in Canaan; their law, priesthood, and ritual; the exploits of their great men, wrought by faith; their sins and captivities; their repentance and restoration; the sufferings and victories of David; the peaceful and happy reign of Solomon; the advent of Messiah, with its effects and consequences; his incarnation, birth, life, passion, death, resurrection, ascension, kingdom, and priesthood; the effusion of the Spirit; the conversion of the nations; the rejection of the Jews; the establishment, increase, and perpetuity of the Chris-conference with his friends; and he had thought himself competent to discourse on such subjects; but the scene which he had now witnessed had made such discoveries to him of the Divine glory, and had so affected his heart, that, compared with this intuitive knowledge, all that he ever knew before seemed to be like hearing a report of some absent person or transaction. He was now far more sensible than ever of his own guilt and pollution; so that he despised and "abhorred himself," as an abominable sinner in heart and life; but especially for his presumption and impiety, in murmuring against God.—Scott.

ATONEMENT FOR THE ERRORS OF JOB'S FRIENDS.—God assures them he was angry with them: "My wrath is kindled against thee and thy two friends." God is very angry with those who despise and reproach their brethren, who insult over them, and judge hardly of them, either for their calamities or for their infirmities. Though they were wise and good men, yet, when they spake amiss, God was angry with them, and let them know it. He requires from them a sacrifice, to make atonement for what they had said amiss: they must bring each of them seven bullocks, and each of them seven rams, to be offered up to God for a burnt-offering; for it should seem, that, before the law of Moses, all sacrifices, even those of atonement, were wholly burnt, and therefore were so called. They thought they had spoken wonderfully well, and that God was beholden to them for pleading his cause, and owed them a good reward for it; but they are told, that, on the contrary, he is displeased with them, requires from them a sacrifice, and threatens, that, otherwise, he will deal with them after their folly. God is often angry at that in us, which we are ourselves proud of, and sees much amiss in that which we think was done well. He orders them to go to Job, and beg of him to offer their sacrifices, and pray for them, otherwise they should not be accepted. By this, God designed, to humble them and lay them low. They thought that they only were the favourites of heaven, and that Job had no interest there; but God gives them to understand that he had a better interest there than they had, and stood fairer for God's acceptance than they did.—Henry.

JOB'S ULTIMATE PROSPERITY.—Ver. 10—17. Job's health was re-established, his spirits were calmed, and his comforts renewed. All his relations and neighbours, who before had treated him with disdain on account of his poverty and supposed hypocrisy, now came around him: being either afraid of disregarding one who was a favourite of heaven, or desiring the benefit of his prayers and instructions, or through love and esteem. They condoled with him and comforted him; and, according to the custom of those times, every one of them made him a present of a piece of money, stamped with the figure of a lamb (as the original word is supposed to imply,) and an ornament of gold for the ear or face. He seems likewise to have been again acknowledged, and submitted to, as ruler, and in process of time his substance was in every thing exactly doubled. But, as a testimony that his children were not extinct, or lost to him by death, he had only the former number replaced to him, which, with those who had been removed to another world, doubled them likewise. After this he lived in prosperity and honour no less than one hundred and forty years, probably above two hundred years in all; and, instead of being written childless, as he once feared, he saw his posterity to the fourth generation.—Scott.

HIS DEATH.—Ver. 16—17. His life was long What age he was, when his troubles came, we are no where told; but here we are told he lived 140 years; whence some conjecture that he was 70 when he was in his troubles, and that so his age was doubled, as his other possessions. 1. He lived to have much of the comfort of this life, for he saw his posterity to the fourth generation, ver. 16. Though his children were not doubled to him, yet, in his children's children, (and those are the crown of old men,) they were more than doubled. As God appointed to Adam another seed instead of that which was slain, so he did to Job with advantage. God has ways to repair the losses, and balance the griefs, of those who are written childless, as Job was, when he had buried all his children. 2. He lived till he was satisfied, for he died full of days, satisfied with living in this world, and willing to leave it; not peevishly so, as in the days of his affliction, but piously so, and thus, as Eliphaz had encouraged him to hope, he "came to his grave like a shock of corn in his season."—Henry.

LESSON.—Though Job's trials and their happy event are replete with instruction and consolation to the suffering tempted believer: yet we shall be still more edified and encouraged by looking unto Jesus. His abasements, temptations, and sufferings were vastly greater than those of Job; and he endured them with perfect patience, and they issued far more gloriously. For us he was tempted, and suffered, and emerged, and triumphed, and is glorified: for us when we were enemies, he offered himself a sacrifice, and now for us he pleads before the throne.—In him believers are pardoned and accepted: "He sees his seed, and prolongs his days, and the pleasure of the LORD prospers in his hands:" but there is no salvation in any other. To him we must come, in him we must confide, to him we must submit, and from him receive all that we can want; but we can give him nothing, except the honour of our whole salvation, and ourselves to be, by his grace, his redeemed and devoted servants. May we then experience his grace, share his victories, tread in his steps, and copy his patience; and we shall find in the event, "that the Lord is pitiful, and of tender mercy." But we have need of patience, that after having done the will "of God, we may receive the promise."—Scott.

tian Church; the end of the world; the general judgment, the condemnation of the wicked, and the final triumph of the righteous with their Lord and King. These are the subjects here presented to our meditation. They are adorned with the figures, and set off with the graces of poetry; and poetry itself is designed yet further to be recommended by the charms of music, thus consecrated to the service of God; that so delight may prepare the way for improvement, and pleasure become the handmaid of wisdom; while every turbulent passion is calmed by sacred melody, and the evil spirit is still dispossessed by the harp of the son of Jesse. They present religion to us in its most engaging dress, communicating truths which philosophy could never investigate, in a style which poetry can never equal; while history is made the vehicle of prophecy, and creation lends all its charms to paint the glories of redemption. Besides their incomparable fitness to express our sentiments, they are at the same time memorials of, and appeals to, former mercies and deliverances; they are acknowledgments of prophecies accomplished."—(Bishop Horne's Preface to the Psalms.)

Various divisions of this book have been made, apparently without much reason. The present order seems to have been very ancient, though by no means coincident with the date of the several Psalms, which, indeed, have seldom much connexion with each other. The Septuagint throw the ninth and tenth Psalms into one, as also the hundred and fourteenth and the hundred and fifteenth; and they divide the hundred and sixteenth and the hundred and forty-seventh each into two. Various other particulars respecting the titles, the dates, and the occasions of the several Psalms, will be noted as we proceed. "The version of the Psalms in our Bible, which was made by the translators employed by James the First, is posterior to that printed in our prayer-books, which was executed in 1539. This last, as very excellent, and familiarized by custom, was retained in the Liturgy, though, as translated chiefly from the Septuagint, it does not so exactly correspond with the original as does that in our Bibles."—(Grey's Key.) It may be added, that the Prayer-book translation is in no respect comparable to that of the Bible.

PSALM I.

The happiness of the godly, 1; and the unhappiness of the ungodly, 4.

A. M. cir. 3554. B. C. cir. 450.

[a]BLESSED[1] is the man that [b]walketh not in [c]the counsel of the *ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful:

2 But [h]his delight is in the law of the LORD; and in his law doth he [i]meditate day and night.

3 And he shall be like [l]a tree planted by the rivers[2] of water, that [m]bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not [t]wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.

4 The ungodly are not so: but are [p]like the chaff which the wind driveth away.

5 Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor [r]sinners in the congregation of the righteous.

6 For the LORD knoweth the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly shall perish.

PSALM II.

The kingdom of Christ, 1. Kings are exhorted to submit to it, 10.

WHY [a]do the heathen *rage, and [b]the people [t]imagine a vain thing?

2 The kings of the earth[1] set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, [c]against the LORD, and [f]against his Anointed, saying,

3 Let us break their bands asunder, and cast their cords from us.

4 [h]He that sitteth in the heavens [l]shall laugh: the LORD shall have them in derision.

5 Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and [‡]vex them in his [l]sore displeasure.

6 [m]Yet have I set [s]my King upon [‖]my holy hill of Zion.

7 I will declare *the decree: The LORD hath said unto me, [n]Thou art my Son; [o]this day have I begotten thee.

8 Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.

9 Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.

A. M. cir. 2964. B. C. cir. 1040.

10 Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth.

11 Serve the LORD with fear, and [y]rejoice with trembling.

12 Kiss [a]the Son, lest he be angry, and [b]ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

PSALM III.

The security of God's protection.

A Psalm of David, [a]when he fled from Absalom his son.

LORD, [b]how are they increased that trouble me? [c]many are they that rise up against me.

2 Many there be which say of my soul, There is [d]no help for him in God. [e]Selah.[1]

3 But thou, O LORD, art [f]a shield *for me; [g]my glory, and [h]the lifter up of mine head.

4 [i]I cried unto the LORD with my voice, and he heard me out of [k]his holy hill. Selah.

5 [l]I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for [m]the LORD sustained me.

6 [n]I will not be afraid of [o]ten thousands of people, that have [p]set themselves against me round about.

7 Arise, O LORD; save me, O my God: for [r]thou hast smitten all mine enemies upon the cheek bone;[2] thou hast broken the teeth of the ungodly.

8 [s]Salvation belongeth unto the LORD: [t]thy blessing is upon thy people. Selah.

PSALM IV.

David prayeth for audience, 1; he reproveth and exhorteth his enemies, 2. Man's happiness in God's favour, 6.

To the *chief Musician on [a]Neginoth, A Psalm of David.

HEAR me when I call, [b]O God of my righteousness: [c]thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress; [†]have mercy upon me, and hear my prayer.

2 O [d]ye sons of men, [e]how long will ye turn [f]my glory into shame? how long will ye [g]love vanity, and seek after [h]leasing?[1] Selah.

3 But know that [i]the LORD hath set apart him that is godly [k]for himself: [l]the LORD will hear when I call unto him.

PSALM I. 1 The Hebrew, translated "blessed," is a plural word, and it may be read blessednesses, or, "O the blessednesses of the man!"—CLARKE. 2 The orange garden of the Emir of Beyroot is divided into squares, which are bordered with stone, in which are cut out troughs, which, having little outlets at every tree, refresh it in passing by. Hence we may better understand the rivers, "the divisions of water," the water distributed in artificial canals, here mentioned.—LOWTH.

PSALM II. 1 As Herod the Great, Herod Antipas (Mark vi. 14), Pontius Pilate, who represented the Roman emperor as governor of Judea, and all the kings of the earth ever since, who have persecuted Christ in his members.—GILL.

PSALM III. 1 This Hebrew word is found seventy times in the Psalms, and three times in Habakkuk. One conjecture is, that it means "the end," or a "pause," and that the ancient musicians put it occasionally in the margin of their psalters, to shew where a musical pause was to be made, and where the tune ended.—CALMET. 2 The allusion is to a wild beast, who is disabled from tearing and devouring his prey, by having his jaw smitten and his teeth broken.—WELLS.

PSALM IV. 1 An old Saxon word for "lying."—CLARKE.

PSALM I. HOLINESS AND HAPPINESS.—Ver. 1—3. This psalm is generally considered as a preface to the book, and supposed to have been prefixed to it by Ezra. It establishes the important distinction betwixt the righteous and the wicked; and assures us of the felicities of the former, and the misery of the latter.—All men shun misery, and aim to be happy: but few understand that misery springs from sin, and that happiness can be enjoyed only in the favour of God. This the Scriptures declare; and by this light the believer seeks and finds it. In such portions of the word of God, we ought not to look for the way in which sinners are made righteous; or, the origin of that difference which subsists among men, who are all of one nature: for they only inform us of the character of such as are accepted by God, and are in the way to heaven. "The ungodly" are those, however moral or virtuous, who profanely despise spiritual blessings, and live without any due regard to God and religion, as all unconverted men do.—"The counsel of the ungodly" signifies, the maxims and principles of worldly men, who form their plans and calculate advantages or disadvantages, according to their several pursuits, without bringing the favour or displeasure of God, or eternal things, into the account; and "walking in this counsel," signifies an habitual conduct formed on such principles, and regulated according to such rules. "Sinners," in this climax, seems to mean, those who add to their ungodliness, gross immoralities, and such crimes as natural conscience and the opinion of the world protest against. And to "stand in the way of sinners," implies, the habit of vices gradually overcoming the sense of shame and remorse of conscience; till a quiet, rarely interrupted by convictions, is superinduced. Yet these occasional convictions are the source of uneasiness; and this prepares the sinner for "sitting down in the seat of the scornful."—"The scornful," no doubt, are such as encourage themselves and each other in ungodliness and wickedness, by infidel and atheistical tenets; and as have recourse to corrupt principles to bear them out in corrupt practices; and so are given up to a blinded and deluded mind, as a punishment of their conduct in following the impulse of a wicked heart. And to "sit in the seat of the scornful," is to become teachers and apostles of infidelity, and impiously to ridicule, with all the genius, wit, and sense, which they possess, the doctrines, precepts, and worshippers of God.—Scott.

PSALM II. JESUS THE KING.—We have here a very great struggle about the kingdom of Christ, hell and heaven contesting it; the seat of the war is this earth, where Satan has long had an usurped kingdom, and exercised dominion to that degree, that he has been called, "The prince of the power of the very air" we breathe in, and "The god of the world" we live in. He knows very well, that, as the Messiah's kingdom rises and gets ground, his falls and loses ground; and, therefore, though it will be set up certainly, it shall not be set up tamely. Observe here, The mighty conquest gained over all this threatening opposition. If heaven and earth be the combatants, it is easy to foretell which will be the conqueror. They that make this mighty struggle are the people of the earth, and the kings of the earth, who, being of the earth, are earthy; but He whom they contest with, is one that "sits in the heavens," ver. 4. He is in the heaven, a place of such a vast prospect, that he can oversee them all, and all their projects; and such is his power, that he can overcome them all, and all their attempts: he sits there as one easy and at rest, out of the reach of all their impotent menaces and attempts. There he sits as judge in all the affairs of the children of men, perfectly secure of the full accomplishment of all his own purposes and designs, in spite of all opposition, Ps. xxix. 10. The perfect repose of the Eternal Mind may be our comfort under all the disquietments of our mind.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—As this apostate world is in fact the kingdom of Satan, unconverted men of every rank, party, or character, may be excited by him, to concur in opposing the cause of God, and the kingdom of Christ. But the kings and the rulers of the earth have generally been especially instigated, by the slanders and misrepresentations of false teachers, and other interested persons, as well as by their own prejudices and passions, to combine in this opposition. They do not brook submission to a superior; the humbling truths and spiritual precepts of Christ run counter to their ambitious projects and worldly lusts: and they are apt to suppose that this authority is inconsistent with their dignity, or their felicity. Thus they are often excited to employ all their power and policy "against the LORD and against his anointed;" whilst they deceive themselves with the idea that they are only opposing some obstinate sectaries, who refuse submission to their edicts.—Scott.

PSALM III. Title. These titles are found in the Hebrew, though it is said that several of them are awanting in some manuscripts. They seem, however, in general to belong to the psalms to which they are prefixed, and to be of the same authority with them. Ver. 1, 2. David abruptly, but in lively faith, addresses himself to the Lord, as amazed to hear of the numbers who followed the unnatural rebellion of Absalom; and especially that many whom he had favoured and trusted had joined that party. He also was astonished at the insolence and impiety of enemies, and that they should interpret his troubles as evidences that God had rejected him, and either could not or would not help him.—The meaning of the word "Selah," which occurs three times in this psalm, and frequently in others, and also in the prophecy of Habakkuk, is not fully ascertained by expositors. Some entirely omit it: but this may be thought taking an unwarrantable liberty with Scripture; others suppose it to be merely a musical term, and the Septuagint seem to have thus understood it. (Διαψαλμα, a change of song, or melody.) In general, however, it appears to be used as a call on him who read or sang, to pause and reflect; as something peculiarly important or surprising had been mentioned.—Scott.

PSALM IV.—The title of the psalm acquaints us, that David, having penned it by Divine inspiration for the use of the church, delivered it to the chief musician, or master of the song, who, (according to the Divine appointment of psalmody made in his time, which he was chiefly instrumental in the establishment of,) presided in that service. We have a particular account of the constitution, the modelling of the several classes of singers, each with a chief, and the share each bore in the work, 1 Chron. xxv. Some "prophesied according to the order of the king," ver. 2. Others "prophesied with a harp, to give thanks, and to praise the Lord," ver. 3. Of others, it is said, that they were to "lift up the horn," ver. 5. But of them all, that they were "for song in the house of the Lord," ver. 6, and were "instructed in the songs of the Lord," ver. 7. This psalm was committed to one of the chiefs, to be sung on Neginoth—Stringed instruments, (Hab. iii. 19,) which were played on with the hand; with music of that kind the choristers were to sing this psalm: and it should seem that then they only sung, not the people; but the New Testament appoints all Christians to sing, (Eph. v. 19, Col. iii. 16,) from whom it is expected that they do it decently, not artfully; and therefore there is not now so much occasion for musical instruments as there was then; the melody is to be made in the heart.—Henry.

PSALM V. DAVID'S DEVOTIONAL VOWS.—Ver. 2. Four things David here promises, and so must we. 1. That he will pray, that he will make conscience of it, and make a business of it; "unto thee will I pray." "Others live without prayer, but I will pray." Kings on their own thrones (so David was) must be beggar's at God's throne. "Others pray to strange gods, and expect relief from them, but to thee, to thee only, will I pray." The assurances God has given us of his readiness to hear prayer, should confirm our resolution to live and die praying. 2. That he will pray "in the morning;" his praying voice shall be heard then, and then shall his prayer be directed, that shall be the date of his letters to heaven; "Morning, and evening, and at noon, will I pray; nay, seven times a day, will I praise thee;" but certainly, morning prayer is especially our duty; we are the fittest for prayer when we are in the most fresh, and lively, and composed frame, got clear of the slumbers of the night, revived by them, and not yet filled with the business of the day. 3. That he will have his eye single, and his heart intent, in the duty; "I will direct my prayer," as a marksman directs his arrow to the white; with such a fixedness and steadiness of mind should we address ourselves to God. Or, as we direct a letter to a friend at such a place, so must we direct our prayers to God as our Father in heaven; and let us always send them by the Lord Jesus, the great Mediator, and then they will be sure not to miscarry. 4. That he will patiently wait for an answer of peace; "I will look up; will look after my prayers, and 'hear what God the Lord will speak,' (Ps. lxxxv. 8, Hab. ii. 1,) that, if he grant what I asked, I may be thankful, if he deny, I may be patient, if he defer, I may continue to pray and wait, and may not faint." We must look up, or look out, as he that has shot an arrow looks to see how near it has come to the mark. We lose much of the comfort of our prayers, for want of observing the returns of them.—Henry.

PSALM VI. TITLE—SHEMINITH. This word signifies the eighth: and some suppose that the psalm, or tune, was adapted to a harp with eight strings.—This is the first of the penitential psalms: but it is not known on what occasion it was written. Ver. 1, 2. "Though I deserve destruction, yet let thy mercy pity my frailty." Ver. 5. The psalmist pleaded, that if God cut him off in his wrath, it would terminate all his opportunities of serving and glorifying him on earth; and if left finally to perish, he should never remember God with gratitude and praise any more to eternity. The word rendered grave, is often translated hell, and it seems generally to mean the place of separate spirits, happy or unhappy, according to the context; yet it sometimes must be understood of the grave, and that seems the sense in this place. Ver. 6, 7. Bowed down by most distressing sickness, and sufferings of various kinds, and conscious of deep repentance; which, concurring with his corrections, caused him every night to water his couch with copious tears, and made him waste, become dull-sighted, and grow old prematurely: David earnestly pleaded with God to visit him in mercy, without further delay. Ver. 8—10. The psalmist, having deeply humbled himself before God, at length found his peace and hope revive. As he trusted that the Lord would not leave him to perish in another world, with the workers of iniquity, he resolved not to associate with them in this: and he warned them to repent, and cease from their enmity to him; otherwise he was assured that shame and vexation would suddenly and irrevocably seize upon them. Many mournful psalms end thus triumphantly, for the encouragement of other mourners to hope and pray.—Scott.

PSALM VII. OCCASION OF THIS PSALM.—Shiggaion is a song or psalm; the word is 8 [a]The LORD shall judge the people: [b]judge me, O LORD, [c]according to my righteousness, and according [d]to mine integrity that is in me.

9 Oh, [e]let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but [f]establish the just: [g]for the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins.

10 [‡]My defence is of God, [h]which saveth the upright in heart.

11 [§]God judgeth the righteous, and God is angry with the wicked every day.

12 If [i]he turn not, he will whet his sword; he hath bent his bow, and made it ready.

13 He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death; he ordaineth his arrows against the persecutors.[2]

14 Behold, he travaileth with iniquity, and hath conceived mischief, and brought forth falsehood.

15 He [l]made a pit, and digged it, [o]and is fallen into the ditch which he made.

16 [p]His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate.

17 I will praise the LORD [q]according to his righteousness: and will sing praise to the name of the LORD [r]most high.

PSALM VIII.

God's glory is magnified by his works, and by his love to man.

To the chief Musician upon [s]Gittith,[1] A Psalm of David.

O LORD [b]our Lord, [c]how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set [d]thy glory above the heavens.

2 Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou [*]ordained [f]strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest [g]still [h]the enemy and the avenger.

3 When [i]I consider thy heavens,[2] [k]the work of thy fingers, [l]the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained;

4 [m]What is man that thou art mindful of him? and [n]the son of man, that thou [o]visitest him?

5 For [p]thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and [q]hast crowned him with glory and honour.

6 Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; and hast put all things under his feet:

7 [†]All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field;

8 [t]The fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas.

9 O LORD our Lord, [u]how excellent is thy name in all the earth!

David praiseth God for executing of judgment, 1; he inciteth others to praise him, 11; and prayeth that he may have cause to praise him, 13.

To the chief Musician upon Muth-labben,[1] A Psalm of David.

[a]I WILL praise thee, O LORD, with my whole heart; I will shew forth all thy marvellous works.

2 I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, [c]O thou most High.

3 When mine enemies are turned back, they shall fall and perish at thy presence.

4 For [§]thou hast [*]maintained my right and my cause; thou sattest in the throne judging [†]right.

5 Thou hast rebuked the heathen, [l]thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name for ever and ever.

6 [‡]O [l]thou enemy, destructions are come to a perpetual end: and [n]thou hast destroyed cities; their memorial is perished with them.

7 But the LORD shall endure for ever: [q]he hath prepared his throne for judgment.

8 And [r]he shall judge the world in righteousness, he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness.

9 [s]The LORD also will be [§]a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge [t]in times of trouble.

10 And they that [u]know thy name will [x]put their trust in thee: for thou, LORD, [y]hast not forsaken them that seek thee.

11 [z]Sing praises to the LORD, which dwelleth in Zion: [b]declare among the people his doings.

12 When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: [d]he forgetteth not the cry of the [1]humble.

13 [e]Have mercy upon me, O LORD; consider my trouble which I suffer of them that hate me, thou that liftest me up from the gates of death:

14 That [h]I may shew forth all thy praise in the gates of the daughter of Zion:[2] [1]I will rejoice in thy salvation.

15 The heathen are sunk down in the pit that they made: in the net which they hid is their own foot taken.

16 The LORD is known by the judgment which he executeth: the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. [*]Higgaion. Selah.

17 [p]The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that [q]forget God.

18 For the needy shall not alway be forgotten: [s]the expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever.

19 [t]Arise, O LORD; [u]let not man prevail: [x]let the heathen be judged in thy sight.

used so only here and Hab. iii. 1. A wandering song, so some: the matter and composition of the several parts being different, but artificially put together. A charming song, so others; very delightful. David not only penned it, but sang it himself in a devout religious manner unto the Lord, "concerning the words" or affairs "of Cush the Benjamite," that is, of Saul himself, whose barbarous usage of David bespoke him rather a Cushite, or Ethiopian, than a true-born Israelite. Or, more likely, it was some kinsman of Saul, named Cush, who was an inveterate enemy to David, misrepresented him to Saul as a traitor, and (which was unnecessary) exasperated Saul against him; one of those children of men, children of Belial indeed, whom David complains of, (1 Sam. xxvi. 19,) that made mischief between him and Saul. David, thus basely abused, has recourse to the Lord: the injuries men do us should drive us to God, for to him we may commit our cause. Nay, he sings to the Lord, his spirit was not ruffled by it, nor cast down, but so composed and cheerful, that he was still in tune for sacred songs, and it did not occasion one jarring string in his harp. Thus let the injuries we receive from men, instead of provoking our passions, kindle and excite our devotions.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The servants of God must expect the persecution of the tongue as a preparation for further injuries; and to the ingenuous mind it often appears very formidable. But no slanderers or persecuting tyrants can do real harm to those who trust in the Lord their God: when there is none else to deliver, he will take care both of their persons and characters, and will preserve them from Satan, that "accuser of the brethren," and "devouring lion," and "from every evil work, unto his heavenly kingdom."—Let us then wage our warfare with the weapons of faith and prayer; and, instead of injuring our peaceful neighbours, let us persevere in endeavouring to overcome evil with good. This will enable us to rejoice in the testimony of our consciences, when loaded with slander and obloquy, and to appeal to God with confidence. But "wretched they who persecute their benefactors! Happy he who can reflect that he has been a benefactor to his persecutors!" [Horne.] Indeed the Christian would deem himself worthy of all the injury and ignominy which his foes intend him, were he guilty of the crimes of which they accuse him.—Scott.

PSALM VIII.—Ver. 1. The eternal JEHOVAH, the universal Creator and Benefactor, is that Lord and Governor whom all ought entirely to obey and serve; and to him believers render willing obedience, as God their Saviour. He infinitely excels all creatures in every thing which can excite love and adoration. The earth is full of the discoveries of his perfections, and his glory fills the highest heavens, and is exalted far above them. Ver. 2. God hath often magnified his own perfections through the simplicity and weakness of the instruments by which he accomplishes his grand designs. The new-born infant is such a display of his power, skill, and goodness, as unanswerably to confute the cavils of atheism. Even little children have been taught so to love and serve him, that their praises and confessions have baffled and silenced the rage and malice of persecutors. Ver 3. The psalmist appears to have composed this sacred hymn while his attention was fixed, during the silence of the evening, on "the moon walking in brightness," and "stars of light;" but, instead of being tempted to worship the heavenly host, he contemplated the magnificent scene and the immensity of the creation, till he was filled with adoring admiration of the Creator's incomprehensible majesty, which naturally suggested the subsequent reflections. Ver. 4—9. Adam, even when created in the image of God, was infinitely beneath his Maker; and it was an unspeakable favour for him to be placed at the head of this lower world in a state of honour and dominion. After the fall, it was still more wonderful that his children should be permitted to retain any authority over, or derive any benefit from the different orders of creatures. But the apostle teaches us, that the Holy Spirit, who spake by David, especially intended Christ, the eternal Son of God, who by his incarnation became the Son of man.—Scott.

PSALM IX. TITLE—MUTH-LABBEN. This word is translated in various ways by different expositors; but the meaning of it remains doubtful. "Muth" signifies death; and some imagine that "labben" may denote Goliath, either in respect of his eminence, or his coming as a champion between the armies of Israel and that of the Philistines. Goliath is called Ish Habbeneim, (a man who comes between;) translated "a champion," 1 Sam. xvii. 2. If, however, this be the meaning, it is very obscurely expressed: and, as Zion was not the place of Israel's assembling for public worship, till David had for some time been king over all Israel, the psalm must have been composed long after Goliath's death; ver. 11—14. Others therefore suppose "Muth-labben" to mean, the death of his son, and refer the occasion of the psalm to the death of Absalom.—The psalmist might have some reference to the various deliverances of his past life; but he was also led, while praising God for them, to speak, as the type of Christ, concerning his conflicts and victories; and those of his church, and of her triumphs over every heathen and antichristian persecutor, including also the trials and deliverances of every believer.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The eternal God hath already prepared his throne for judgment; he will certainly execute judgment in righteousness and in faithfulness; and then every iniquitous sentence will be reversed, and every oppressor punished.—In the meanwhile, all "who know his name, will trust in him," for temporal protection and eternal salvation; and their experience will daily increase their knowledge and confirm

PSALM X.

David complaineth to God of the outrages of the wicked, 1. He prayeth for remedy, 12. He professeth his confidence, 16.

WHY standeth thou[1] afar off, O LORD? why hidest thou thyself in times of trouble?

2 *The wicked [c]in his pride doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the devices that they have imagined.

3 For the wicked *boasteth of his [†]heart's desire, [f]and [‡]blesseth the covetous, whom the LORD abhorreth.

4 The wicked, through [l]the pride of his countenance, [k]will not seek after God: [$]God is not in all his thoughts.

5 [m]His ways are always grievous; [n]thy judgments are far above out of his sight: as for all his enemies, he puffeth at them.

6 He hath said in his heart, I shall not be moved: for I shall [l]never be in adversity.

7 His mouth is [r]full of cursing [s]and *deceit and fraud: [t]under his tongue is [u]mischief [x]and [†]vanity.

8 He sitteth in the lurking places of the villages: in the secret places doth he murder the innocent: his eyes [‡]are privily set against the poor.

9 [a]He lieth in wait [$]secretly as a lion in his den: he lieth in wait [b]to catch the poor: he doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net.

10 He [‖]croucheth, and [d]humbleth himself, that the poor may fall *by his strong ones.

11 He hath [e]said in his heart, [f]God hath forgotten: he hideth his face; he will never see it.

12 [g]Arise, O LORD; O God, [h]lift up thine hand: [i]forget not the [†]humble.

13 Wherefore doth the wicked [k]contemn God? he hath said in his heart, Thou wilt not require it.[2]

14 Thou hast seen it; for [n]thou beholdest mischief and spite, [o]to requite it with thy hand: the poor [‡]committeth himself unto thee; thou art the helper of the fatherless.

15 Break thou the arm of the wicked and the evil man: [t]seek out his wickedness till thou find none.

16 [u]The LORD is King for ever and ever: [x]the heathen are perished out of his land.

17 LORD, thou hast heard the desire of the humble: [a]thou wilt *prepare their heart, thou wilt cause thine ear to hear:

18 [c]To judge the fatherless and the oppressed, that the man of the earth may no more [†]oppress.

David encourageth himself in God against his enemies, 1. God's providence and justice, 4.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

[a]IN the LORD put I my trust: how say ye to my soul, Flee as a bird to your mountain?

2 For, lo, [d]the wicked bend their bow, they [e]make ready their arrow upon the string, that they may *privily shoot at [g]the upright in heart.

3 If the foundations be destroyed, [f]what can the righteous do?

4 The LORD is in his holy temple, [l]the LORD's throne is in heaven: his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men.

5 The LORD [n]trieth the righteous: but [o]the wicked and him that loveth violence his soul hateth.

6 Upon the wicked he shall rain [†]snares, fire and brimstone, and [‡]an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup.[1]

7 For [s]the righteous LORD loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright.

PSALM XII.

David, destitute of human comfort, craveth help of God, 1. He comforteth himself with God's judgments on the wicked, and confidence in God's tried promises, 3.

To the chief Musician upon * Sheminith, A Psalm of David.

2 [c]They speak vanity every one with his neighbour: with flattering lips and with [‡]a double heart do they speak.

3 The LORD shall *cut off all flattering lips, and [f]the tongue that speaketh [‖]proud things:

4 Who have said, With our tongue will we prevail: our lips are [‖]our own: who is lord over us?

5 [i]For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the LORD; I will set him in safety from him that *puffeth at him.

6 [l]The words of the LORD are pure words: [m]as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times.

7 Thou shalt keep them, O LORD, thou shalt preserve [†]them from this generation for ever.

8 The wicked walk on every side, when the [‡]vilest men are exalted.[1] their faith; for the Lord never did, and never will, forsake or reject any, who seek his favour according to his word. He is "in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself; he may be found on a mercy-seat: let saints then sing praises to him, and call upon sinners to come and trust in him. The blood of many martyrs has been shed, and their persecutors have supposed that no inquisition would be made for it: but from time to time the Lord anticipates that day, when "the earth shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." He is ever mindful of the cry of the humble. His consolations more than counterbalance outward afflictions, and if any are cut off by martyrdom, their souls are forwarded to heaven. There the church is triumphant; here it must be militant. Satan, who hates us, will stir up opposition, and excite our depravity by his suggestions: but the Lord, who hath lifted us up from the gates of death and hell, considers all our conflicts and temptations: he will give us merciful deliverances on earth, that we may praise him with his people: and in a little time will completely rescue our souls; that in his temple above we may rejoice in his salvation and triumph in his praise.—Scott.

PSALM X. DESCRIPTION OF A WICKED MAN.—Ver. 2—11. Several of the psalms seem intentionally to have been written in general terms; that they might serve to direct the devotions of the church in persecution; and those of every believer in his personal troubles and afflictions.—Pride and ambition caused Saul to envy and hate David, as one who had eclipsed his glory, and who was appointed by God himself to the kingdom, as the man after his own heart: and therefore he persecuted him. The Jewish rulers hated Christ and his apostles, because their ignorance and hypocrisy were exposed, and their authority endangered by the light of the gospel: and the same principle has made way for the persecution of the humble and zealous servants of God in all ages. But the psalmist predicted, that his enemies would ruin themselves instead of him; for the original is in the future tense, "They shall be taken," &c.—Saul at length avowed and boasted of his desire of murdering David, which at first he concealed: and he "blessed the covetous," who courted favour by betraying him. But God abhorred such men; as indeed they resembled Judas, who sold his Lord: and indeed they abhorred or despised him. "The covetous he blesseth; he despiseth the LORD."—Saul, with evident haughtiness, refused to submit to the decree of God made known by Samuel, or to seek his favour; and in his subsequent conduct he acted as an infidel or an atheist. He became grievously cruel and oppressive in his government, especially when he murdered the priests. God's judgments were out of his sight; he believed nothing about them; and he scorned all those as enemies who opposed his rage, growing more presumptuous by impunity. His conversation became a mixture of profaneness, perjury, violent imprecations, and deceit; and he was continually avowing his vile and mischievous purposes. Personally and by his agents he watched for David in every place where he was likely to surprise him: being bent on murdering a poor fugitive who had never injured him, as much as a hungry lion is of seizing his prey. Nay, he even seemed to pay court, and humble himself, to David and others, as well as to stoop to the meanest practices, that he might get him within his reach, and murder him by one of his captains. This deliberate plan of virulent opposition to one whom God had expressly marked out as the object of his special favour, could be the result of nothing except contempt of God, and practical atheism. Ver. 12, 13. The honour of God required, that such impious persons, who despised him and defied his wrath, should be openly rebuked; and his oppressed servants, who intrusted their cause with him, as openly delivered.—"What is it but thy long-suffering that makes the wicked thus insolently despise thee? He concludes that thou wilt never punish him, because thou art so patient with him.—Scott.

PSALM XI. GOD'S CHARACTER A SOURCE OF COMFORT.—1. There is a God, a God in heaven; "The Lord is in his holy temple" above; there he is out of our sight, but we are not out of his. Let not the enemies of the saints insult over them, as if they were at a loss, and at their wit's end: no, they have a God, and they know where to find him, and how to direct their prayers unto him, as their Father in heaven. 2. That this God governs the world; the Lord has not only his residence, but his throne, in heaven. Let us by faith see God on his throne, on his throne of glory, infinitely transcending the splendour and majesty of earthly princes; on his throne of government, giving law, giving motion, and giving aim to all the creatures; on his throne of judgment, rendering to every man according to his works; and on his throne of grace, to which his people may come boldly for mercy and grace; we shall then see no reason to be discouraged by the pride and power of oppressors, or any of the afflictions that attend the righteous. 3. That this God perfectly knows every man's true character; "His eyes behold, his eye-lids try, the children of men;" but not only sees them, but he sees through them; not only knows all they say and do, but knows what they think, what they design, and how they really stand affected whatever they pretend. We may know what men seem to be, but he knows what they are, as the refiner knows what the value of the gold is, when he has tried it.—Henry.

To the [a]chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

HOW long wilt thou [b]forget me, O LORD? for ever? [c]how long wilt thou hide thy face from me?

2 How long shall I take counsel in my soul,[1] having [c]sorrow in my heart daily? how long shall mine enemy be exalted over me?

3 [h]Consider and hear me, O LORD my God, [i]lighten mine eyes, [k]lest I sleep the sleep of death;

4 [l]Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved.

5 But I have trusted in thy mercy; [p]my heart shall rejoice in thy salvation.

6 [q]I will sing unto the LORD, because he hath dealt bountifully with me.

PSALM XIV.

David describeth the corruption of a natural man, 1; convinceth the wicked by the light of their conscience, 4; and glorieth in the salvation of God, 7.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE [a]fool hath said in his heart, There is [b]no God. They are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doeth good.

2 The [f]LORD looked down[1] from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were [g]any that did understand, and [h]seek God.

3 They are [i]all gone aside; they are all together become [*]filthy: [k]there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

4 [l]Have all the workers of iniquity no knowledge? who [m]eat up my people as they eat bread, [n]and call not upon the LORD.

5 There [†]were they in great fear: for [o]God is in [p]the generation of the righteous.

6 [q]Ye have shamed the counsel[2] of the poor, because [r]the LORD is his refuge.

7 [‡]Oh that [s]the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! When the LORD [t]bringeth back the captivity of his people, [u]Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

PSALM XV.

David describeth a citizen of Zion.

A Psalm of David.

LORD, [a]who shall [*]abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in [b]thy holy hill?

2 [c]He that walketh uprightly, and [d]worketh righteousness, and [e]speaketh the truth in his heart.

3 He that [f]backbiteth not with his tongue, nor [g]doeth evil to his neighbour, nor [†]taketh up a reproach against his neighbour.

4 In whose eyes [h]a vile person is contemned; [i]but he honoureth them that fear the LORD. He that [k]sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not.

5 He that [l]putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.

PSALM XVI.

David, in distrust of merits, and hatred of idolatry, fleeth to God for preservation, 1; he sheweth the hope of his calling, of the resurrection, and life everlasting, 5.

[*]Michtam of David.

[a]PRESERVE me, O God: [b]for in thee do I put my trust.

2 O my soul, thou hast said unto the LORD, Thou art my Lord: my goodness extendeth not to thee;

3 But to the saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent, in whom is all my delight.

4 [i]Their sorrows shall be multiplied [†]that hasten after another god: [k]their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer, nor take up their names into my lips.

5 The LORD is the portion of [‡]mine inheritance and of my cup: thou maintainest my lot.

6 [p]The lines are fallen[1] unto me [q]in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage.

7 I will bless the LORD, [s]who hath given me counsel: my reins also instruct me in the night seasons.

8 [x]I have set the LORD always before me: because he is at my right hand, [z]I shall not be moved.

9 Therefore [a]my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: [c]my flesh also shall [§]rest in hope.

10 For thou wilt not leave [d]my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer [f]thine Holy One[2] to see corruption.

11 Thou wilt shew me the path of life: [h]in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore.

PSALM XVII.

David, in confidence of his integrity, craveth defence of God against his enemies, 1; he sheweth their pride, craft, and eagerness, 10. He prayeth against them in confidence of his hope, 11.

[*]A Prayer of David.

[b]HEAR [*]the right, O LORD, [c]attend unto my cry, give ear unto my prayer, that goeth [†]not out of feigned lips.

2 [d]Let my sentence come forth from thy presence; let thine eyes behold [e]the things that are equal.

3 [f]Thou hast proved mine heart; [g]thou hast visited me in the night; thou hast tried me, and [h]shalt find nothing; [i]I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress.

4 Concerning [k]the works of men, [l]by the word of thy lips I have kept me from the paths of [m]the destroyer.

5 [n]Hold up my goings in thy paths, [o]that my footsteps [‡]slip not.

the end of Saul's reign; when his impiety and abuse of authority had given such a sanction to vice and ungodliness, that not only piety, but truth and honesty, seemed about to expire; while every kind of wickedness was practised without fear or shame. —Dissimulation, flattery, profane and arrogant boastings, treachery, and calumny, were the general recommendations of the superior people in Israel, to the favour of their king and his courtiers; and the infection spread rapidly among all orders of men. Forgetting to whom they were indebted for the gift of speech, and for what purpose it was given, and of their accountableness to God; they considered their tongues as their own, to be employed as they pleased; they thought to carry all before them, by their wit, eloquence, flatteries, or calumnies. But in fact they were only exposing themselves to the judgments of God against flatterers and proud boasters. For the comfort of the remnant of poor and persecuted believers, David addressed them in his prophetical character. The Lord assured them, that he noticed their oppressions, and regarded their sighs and sorrows: and that he was about to arise to punish their enemies, and set them in safety from the power, and the cruel sarcasms and menaces, to which they were exposed.—Scott.

PSALM XIII. PRAYER IN DISTRESS.—Ver. 1—4. "David was in great distress, when he indited this psalm, either by the persecution of Saul, or of Absalom. Theodore thinks the latter:"—"Because the trouble which Saul gave him was before his great sin, and he was full of confidence: but that of Absalom was after it, which made him cry in this doleful manner." [Bp. Patrick.]—A concurrence of inward and outward trouble made the psalmist fear, lest God should have forgotten to be gracious towards him, having cast him out of his presence to be no more regarded. But could the Lord really intend thus, finally and eternally, to reject him, and to hide his face from him? Would he always leave him, to perplex himself with vain counsels and contrivances, and to be oppressed with melancholy thoughts, without inward comfort, or outward relief? Would he permit his cruel enemy, who was also an enemy to religion, to insult over him? He could not suppose this would be the case; and he begged that God would think of his heavy sorrows, so as to direct him in his perplexity, by giving him heavenly wisdom; to cheer him with divine consolations, and relieve his distresses; lest he should die in darkness and despondency, and thus give occasion for exultation to his impious foes.—Scott.

PSALM XIV. ATHEISM.—Observe, 1. The sinner here described; he is one that "saith in his heart, There is no God;" he is an atheist. There is no Elohim, no Judge or Governor of the world, no Providence presiding over the affairs of men. They cannot doubt of the being of God, but will question his dominion. He says this "in his heart;" it is not his judgment, but his imagination. He cannot satisfy himself that there is none, but he wishes there were none, and pleases himself with the fancy, that it is possible there may be none; he cannot be sure there is one, and therefore he is willing to think there is none. He dares not speak it out, lest he be confuted, and so undeceived, but he whispers it secretly "in his heart," for the silencing of the clamours of his conscience, and the emboldening of himself in his evil ways. 2. The character of this sinner; he is a fool, he is simple and unwise; and this is an evidence of it: he is wicked and profane, and this is the cause of it. Note, Atheistical thoughts are very foolish wicked thoughts, and they are at the bottom of a great deal of the wickedness that is in this world. The word of God is a "discerner of these thoughts," and puts a just brand on him that harbours them.—Henry.

PSALM XV.—THE TRUE WORSHIPPER.—Ver. 1. It is probable, that as soon as the ark was stationed on mount Zion, the psalmist addressed himself to God; desirous of being taught who would be the accepted and persevering worshipper at his tabernacle. This was typical of the true church of God on earth; all the members of which are heirs also of heaven. The inquiry, therefore, is virtually, Who is he, that so worships God in this world, as to have a well-grounded hope of eternal life hereafter? It is not inquired, what are the grounds of a sinner's acceptance with God: on this subject we are fully instructed in other parts of Scripture. But what are the characteristic marks of those who are thus accepted, by which they may be distinguished from all other persons. And the answer evidently is, (in perfect consistency with the New Testament, and especially with St. John's first epistle,) "They may be distinguished by their sanctification."—Scott.

PSALM XVI. TITLE.—This psalm is entitled Michtam, which some translate "a golden" psalm, a very precious one, more to be valued by us than gold, yea, than much fine gold; because it speaks so plainly of Christ and his resurrection, who is the true Treasure hid in the field of the Old Testament.—Henry.

RESURRECTION AND LIFE.—Ver. 8—11. Jesus willingly yielded to death, assured that his human soul should not be left in the place of separate spirits, nor his body in the grave till it began to corrupt; but that he should arise on the third day, and afterwards ascend to heaven as the first-fruits of the resurrection, and the forerunner of his people. Thus was he shown, and showed to his followers "the path of life;" and the way into the presence of God, where is fulness of joy: and he

David praiseth God for his manifold and marvellous blessings.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, [a]the servant of the LORD, who spake unto the LORD the words of this song [b]in the day that the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul: And he said,

5 [p]The [‡]sorrows of hell compassed me about: [q]the snares of death prevented me.

6 [r]In my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God: [s]he heard my voice out of his temple, and [t]my cry came before him, even into his ears.

8 There went up a smoke [§]out of his nostrils, and [‖]fire out of his mouth devoured; coals were kindled by it.

9 [*]He bowed the heavens also, and came down: and [b]darkness was under his feet.

10 And [c]he rode upon a cherub, and did fly: yea, he did fly upon the wings of the wind.

11 He made darkness his secret place; his pavilion round about him were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies.

12 At the brightness that was before him his thick clouds passed, hail stones and coals of fire.[2]

13 The LORD also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice; hail stones and coals of fire.

14 Yea, [l]he sent out his arrows, and scattered them; and [m]he shot out lightnings, and discomfited them.

15 Then the channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered at thy rebuke, O LORD, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.

16 He sent from above, he took me, [r]he drew me out of [l]many waters.

17 He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from [s]them which hated me: for they were too strong for me.

18 They prevented me in the day of my calamity: [y]but the LORD was my stay.

19 He brought me forth also into a large place; he delivered me, because he delighted in me.

20 The LORD [b]rewarded me according to my righteousness; [c]according to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

21 For [d]I have kept the ways of the LORD, [e]and have not wickedly departed from my God.

22 For [f]all his judgments were before me, [g]and I did not put away his statutes from me.

23 I was also [h]upright [*]before him, and [i]I kept myself from mine iniquity.[3]

24 Therefore hath [k]the LORD recompensed me according to my righteousness, according to the cleanness of my hands [†]in his eyesight.

25 [l]With the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful; with an upright man [m]thou wilt shew thyself upright;

26 With the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure; and [n]with the froward thou wilt [‡]shew thyself froward.

27 For thou wilt save the afflicted people; but wilt bring down high looks.

28 For thou wilt light my [§]candle: the LORD my God will enlighten my darkness.

29 For by thee I have [‖]run through a troop; and [t]by my God have I leaped over a wall.

was seated at the right hand of the Father, where are pleasures, for him and for his people, for evermore.—Many learned men interpret the two clauses of the tenth verse to mean exactly the same thing, referring both of them to the body of Christ, laid in the grave, and raised before it saw corruption: but, as the article in the very ancient form called the apostles' creed, (though doubtless of something later date than the apostolical age,) grounds on this expression, and the application of it, the article concerning Christ's "descending into hell," it is evident that the compilers of it supposed something further than being buried to be intended. And the original, (as well as the Greek translation, the Septuagint, quoted verbatim in the Acts of the Apostles,) favours the idea of a distinct meaning in each clause. Both the Hebrew word Sheol and the Greek Hades, by which it is constantly rendered, denote the state of man when no longer seen on earth. "When spoken of the body, they signify the grave; when of the soul, they refer to that state in which the soul is without the body, whether Paradise, or Hell, (properly so called.)" [Grotius, Usher.]—The human nature of Christ consisted of body and soul; his soul was, during the space between his death and his resurrection, as certainly in the place of separate spirits, as his body was in the grave: but when he arose, they were both called forth and reunited.—Scott.

PSALM XVII. ITS OCCASION.—We shall not fully enter into the spirit of this psalm, unless we place ourselves in the circumstances of David. The whole tenour of it shows, that he has given us his earnest meditation and prayer, at the most interesting crisis, when Saul, instigated by groundless suspicions and false accusations, and pursuing him as a traitor, had surrounded him with his troops, and must have seized on him, had not God most wonderfully interposed.—The persecuted and slandered servant of God, in this extremity, appealed to his omnipotent Lord: and, conscious that he had in no respect deserved ill of his cruel enemy, he called upon God to "hear justice," and to accept his prayer, which was not the language of deceit respecting men, or hypocrisy towards God. He besought him to pronounce sentence between him and Saul, according to his intimate acquaintance with the cause; as he knew that equity was on his side.—Scott.

PSALM. XVIII.—OCCASION AND SCOPE OF THE PSALM. The title gives us the occasion of penning this psalm; we had it before, 2 Sam. xxii. 1, only here we are told, that [illegible] was delivered to the chief musician, or precentor, in the temple-songs. [illegible] intimate compositions of good men, designed by them for their own use, may [illegible] that others may not only borrow light from their candle, but [illegible] Examples sometimes teach better than rules. And David is here called "the servant of the Lord," as Moses was, not only as every good man is God's servant, but because, with his sceptre, with his sword, and with his pen, he greatly promoted the interests of God's kingdom in Israel. It was more his honour, that he was a servant of the Lord, than that he was king of a great kingdom; and so he himself accounted it, Ps. cxvi. 16, "O Lord, truly I am thy servant." The psalmist triumphs in God and his relation to him. The first words of the psalm, "I will love thee, O Lord, my strength," are here prefixed as the scope and contents of the whole. Love to God is the first and great commandment of the law, because it is the principle of all our acceptable praise and obedience; and this use we should make of all the mercies God bestows upon us, our hearts should thereby be enlarged in love to him. This he requires, and will accept; and we are very ungrateful if we grudge him so poor a return. An interest in the person loved is the lover's delight; this string, therefore, he touches, and on this he harps with much pleasure, ver. 2. "The Lord Jehovah, is my God;" and then, "He is my Rock, my Fortress, all that I need, and can desire in my present distress." For there is that in God, which is suited to all the exigencies and occasions of his people that trust in him. "He is my Rock, and Strength, and Fortress;" that is, 1. "I have found him so in the greatest dangers and difficulties." 2. "I have chosen him to be so, disclaiming all others, and depending upon him alone to protect me." Those that truly love God, may thus triumph in him as theirs, and may with confidence call upon him, ver. 3.

GOD'S MAJESTY AS DELIVERER.—Ver. 7—16. Little appeared of man, but much of God, in these deliverances. 1. He appeared a God of almighty power; for he made the earth to shake and tremble, and moved even the "foundations of the hills", ver. 7, as of old at mount Sinai. When the men of the earth were struck with fear, then the earth might be said to tremble; when the great men of the earth were put into confusion, then the hills moved. 2. He showed his anger and displeasure against the enemies and persecutors of his people. He was wroth, ver. 7. His wrath smoked, it burned, it was fire, it was devouring fire, ver. 8, and coals were kindled by it. Those that by their own sins make themselves as coals, that is, fuel to this fire, will be consumed by it. He that ordains his arrows against the persecutors, sends them forth when he pleases, and they are sure to hit the mark, and do execution; for those arrows are lightnings, ver. 14. 3. He showed his readiness to plead his people's cause, and work deliverance for them; for he rode upon a cherub, and did fly, for the maintaining of right and the relieving of his distressed servants, ver. 10. No opposition, no obstruction, can be given to him, "who rides upon the wings of the wind, that [illegible] heavens, for the help of his people, and [illegible] his condescension, [illegible] he bowed [illegible] word of the LORD is *tried: [x]he is a buckler to all those that trust in him.

31 For [y]who is God save the LORD? or who is a rock save our God?

32 It is God that [z]girdeth me with strength, [a]and maketh my way perfect.

33 He maketh my feet like hinds' feet,[4] and setteth me upon my high places.

34 [c]He teacheth my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms.

35 Thou hast also given me [e]the shield of thy salvation: and thy right hand hath holden me up, and †thy gentleness hath made me great.

36 Thou hast enlarged my steps under me, that my ‡feet did not slip.

37 I have pursued mine enemies, and overtaken them: neither did I turn again till they were consumed.

38 I have [l]wounded them, that they were not able to rise: they are fallen under my feet.

39 For thou hast [k]girded me with strength unto the battle: [l]thou hast §subdued under me those that rose up against me.

40 Thou hast also given me [m]the necks of mine enemies; [n]that I might destroy them that hate me.

41 They cried, [o]but there was none to save them; even unto the LORD, but he answered them not.

42 Then did I beat them small as the dust before the wind: I did cast them out as the dirt in the streets.

43 Thou hast delivered me from the strivings of the people; and [s]thou hast made me the head of the heathen: a people whom I have not known shall serve me.

44 [t]As soon as they hear of me they shall obey me: the *strangers shall †submit themselves unto me.

45 The strangers shall [u]fade away,[5] and [z]be afraid out of their close places.

46 [y]The LORD liveth; and [z]blessed be my Rock; and let [a]the God of my salvation be exalted.

47 It is God that ‡avengeth me, and §subdueth the people unto me.

48 He delivereth me from mine enemies: yea, thou liftest me up above those that rise up against me: thou hast delivered me from the [l]violent man.

49 Therefore will I *give thanks unto thee, O LORD, among the heathen, [c]and sing praises unto thy name.

50 Great deliverance giveth he to his king; and sheweth mercy [g]to his anointed,[6] to David, and to his seed for evermore.

PSALM XIX.

The creatures shew God's glory, 1; the word his grace, 7. David prayeth for grace, 12.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

2 [c]Day unto day uttereth speech, and [d]night unto night sheweth knowledge.

3 [e]There is *no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard.

4 Their †line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun;

5 Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.

6 His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

7 The ‡law of the LORD is [m]perfect, §converting the soul: [n]the testimony of the LORD is sure, making wise the simple.

8 The [q]statutes of the LORD are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the LORD is pure,[1] enlightening the eyes.

9 [x]The fear of the LORD is clean, enduring for ever: [z]the judgments of the LORD are *true and righteous altogether.

10 More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold: sweeter also than honey and †the honeycomb.

11 Moreover, by them is thy servant warned: and [d]in keeping of them there is great reward.

12 Who can understand his errors? [f]cleanse thou me from secret faults.

13 Keep back thy servant also from [l]presumptuous sins; [k]let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the ‡great transgression.

14 [n]Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O LORD, my §strength, and [o]my redeemer.

PSALM XX.

The church blesseth the king in his exploits, 1; her confidence in God's succour, 7.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE LORD [a]hear thee[1] in the day of trouble: the name of [c]the God of Jacob *defend thee.

2 Send †thee help from the sanctuary, and ‡strengthen thee [c]out of Zion.

3 Remember all thy offerings, and §accept thy burnt sacrifice. Selah.

4 Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel.

5 [h]We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners:[2] the LORD fulfil all thy petitions.

6 Now know I that the LORD saveth his anointed; he will hear him [l]from his holy heaven *with the saving strength of his right hand.

came down;" ver. 9, did not send an angel, but came himself, as one afflicted in the afflictions of his people. 5. He wrapped himself in darkness, and yet commanded light to shine out of darkness for his people, Is. xlv. 15. He is a God that hideth himself; for he "made darkness his pavilion," ver. 11. His glory is invisible, his counsels are unsearchable, and his proceedings unaccountable, and so, as to us, clouds and darkness are round about him; we know not the way that he takes, even when he is coming towards us in ways of mercy; but when his designs are secret, they are kind; for though he hide himself, he is the God of Israel, the Saviour. And, "at his brightness, the thick clouds pass;" ver. 12, comfort returns, the face of affairs is changed, and that which was gloomy and threatening becomes serene and pleasant. The greater the difficulties are that lie in the way of deliverance, the more glorious the deliverance is. For the rescuing of David, the waters were to be divided till the very channels were seen; the earth was to be cloven till the very foundations of it were discovered, ver. 15. There were waters deep and many, waters out of which he was to be drawn, ver. 16, as Moses, who had his name from being drawn out of the water literally, as David was figuratively. His enemies were strong, and they hated him; had he been left to himself, they had been too strong for him, ver. 17.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—In David, the type, we may here behold Jesus our Redeemer, conflicting with enemies, compassed with sorrows, and with "floods of ungodly men," enduring not only the pains of death, but the wrath of God for us: yet calling upon the Father with strong cries and tears; rescued from the grave with a tremendous earthquake, and various convulsions of nature; advanced to the mediatorial throne, and made head of the heathen, as a recompense of his most perfect obedience, even unto death; executing vengeance on the Jewish nation, beating them as small as the dust before the wind, and casting them out as the mire in the streets; and proceeding either to reconcile, or to put under his feet, all other enemies, till death, the last enemy, shall be destroyed. In the full assurance of these truths, and expectation of his appearing and his glory, we should hasten to submit willingly to his authority, and to embrace his salvation: we should trust in his merits, rejoice in his triumphs, and imitate his example. We too most fervently love the Lord, our strength and our salvation; we should call on him in every trouble, and praise him for every deliverance; we should aim to walk with him in all righteousness and true holiness, approving our hearts unto him, and keeping ourselves from our own iniquities. May he arm us for every conflict, and aid us in all; may we make no league with sin, or give quarter to any lust. By his strength may we leap over every interposing wall of difficulty; by his light may we pass through every dark valley; till at length we share the Saviour's resurrection and ascension into heaven: for if we belong unto him, he conquered and reigns for us, and we shall conquer and reign through him: and partake of the mercy of our anointed King, which is entailed on all his seed for evermore.—Scott.

PSALM. XIX. NATURE.—Ver. 3—6. The luminaries of heaven are not capable of articulate discourse, as a man is, (which seems to be intimated by the abruptness of the original, "No speech, no language, their voice is not heard;") yet their instructions may be understood by every nation under heaven: and whilst other teachers are confined to some particular district, they preach to the whole human race. Especially the glorious sun, who hath, as it were, his tabernacle pitched in the centre of the heavens. Thence every morning he issues forth, in all the vigour, alacrity, and beautiful adorning, with which a bridegroom would leave his chamber to go to his nuptials; and rejoices like an active racer, who glories in his strength, and anticipates the victory, when about to start for the prize. Thus he daily diffuses through the whole earth light, warmth, and fertility; and communicates, or preserves, all animal and vegetable life, and even penetrates by his piercing beams into the heart of the earth. The sun in the firmament may be considered as an emblem of "the Sun of righteousness," diffusing divine light and salvation by his gospel to the nations of the earth. He delighteth in communicating blessings to his church, which as a bridegroom he hath espoused to himself: and his course will be unwearied as that of the sun, till the whole earth be filled with his light and salvation.—Scott.

REVELATION.—Ver. 7. The psalmist gives the word of God six several titles. 1. "The law of the Lord is perfect;" it is perfectly free from all corruption, perfectly filled with all good, and perfectly fitted for the end for which it is designed; it will make the man of God perfect, 2 Tim. iii. 17. Nothing is to be added to it, or taken from it. 2. "The testimony of the Lord," (which witnesses for him to us,) "is sure," incontestably and inviolably sure, what we may give credit to, may rely upon, and may be confident it will not deceive us. It is a sure discovery of divine truth, a sure direction in the way of duty. 3. "The statutes of the Lord" (enacted by his authority, and binding on all wherever they come,) "are right," exactly agreeing with the eternal rules and principles of good and evil, that is, with the right reason of man, and the right counsels of God. 4. "The commandment of the Lord is pure;" it is clear, without darkness; it is clean, without dross and defilement. It is itself purified from all alloy, and is purifying to those that receive and embrace it. 5. "The fear of the Lord," (true religion and godliness, prescribed in the word, reigning in the heart, and practised in the life) "is clean," clean itself, and will make us clean, (John xv. 3;) it will cleanse our 3 But [h]thou art holy, O thou [i]that inhabitest the praises of Israel.

4 [k]Our fathers trusted in thee: they trusted, and thou didst deliver them.

5 They [l]cried unto thee, and were delivered: they trusted in thee, and were not confounded.

6 But [m]I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people.

11 [a]Be not far from me; for trouble is near, for there is [†]none to help.

13 They [*]gaped upon me with their mouths, [d]as a ravening and a roaring lion.

15 [h]My strength is dried up like a potsherd; and [i]my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; and thou hast brought me [k]into the dust of death.

16 For dogs have compassed[2] me: the assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: [o]they pierced my hands and my feet.

17 [p]I may tell all my bones: they look and stare upon me.

18 They [r]part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture.

way, Ps. cxix. 9. 6. "The judgments of the Lord" (all his precepts, which are framed in infinite wisdom) "are true;" they are grounded upon the most sacred and unquestionable truths; they are "righteous," all consonant to natural equity; and they are so "altogether," there is no unrighteousness in any of them, but they are all of a piece. —Henry.

PSALM XX. PRAYER BEFORE BATTLE.—Ver. 1, 2. This psalm was doubtless composed, and publicly sung, when David was about to engage in some perilous expedition; it is generally thought in that against the Ammonites and Syrians. The congregation of Israel thus prayed for the protection and success of their anointed king, to "the God of Jacob," to that God who heard the patriarch in his distress, and was still the God of his posterity. Among them he had fixed his sanctuary, and the ark of the covenant, which had lately been removed to mount Zion; and from him, the great object of their worship, as manifesting his glory above the mercy-seat, they sought help and victory. David was a type of Christ, in his conflicts and victories: and the psalm may be applied as a prayer of the ancient church for his coming, and of the Christian church, for the completion of his work, and the establishment of his kingdom, and its enlargement and prosperity.—Scott.

PSALM XXI. MESSIAH THE PRINCE.—Ver. 1. The former psalm was the prayer of Israel for David, and of the church for the Messiah; and this is a song of praise to God, who had answered those prayers. Several circumstances of the psalm may be accommodated to the case of David. Yet the whole seems more immediately intended for Christ and his kingdom.—"Many of the Hebrews themselves apply it to the Messiah. So that it may be called a psalm of triumph after the victories which David got over his enemies, which were a type of Christ's victory over death, and of the triumph that ensued. And truly there are some things in it which are more literally fulfilled in Christ than in David." [Bp. Patrick.]—Ver. 2—5. God had on all occasions answered the prayers of his servant David; had prevented him by anointing him to be king, before he had thought of such an honour; and had made him successful and distinguished beyond his largest hopes. The Lord had not only very often preserved his life, in answer to his prayers, when in the most imminent danger; but had given him the assurance of continuing the kingdom in the family for many generations, and in Christ, as his descendant for ever, and he was encouraged personally to expect everlasting life in heaven. Ver. 6, 7. The marginal rendering, "Thou hast set him to be blessings for evermore," is the most literal, and suggests another important thought on the subject. David was "set to be blessings," not only to his own generation, and to his posterity, and to Israel for many ages; but, by these divine poems, to the whole church, while the world shall endure; and in Christ, his Son, to all eternity: and thus he was placed to be blessed, or praised for evermore, as some render the clause. Ver. 13. Both the prosperity of the church, and the ruin of its enemies, tend to exalt God, or to render his glory conspicuous to his rational creatures. These effects can only be produced by his omnipotence; which his people unitedly pray to see displayed, that they may joyfully celebrate his praises.—This conclusion greatly resembles the first petitions, and closing doxology, of the Lord's prayer. —Scott.

PSALM XXII. TITLE.—"Aijeleth Shahar" signifies "the hind of the morning," and various conjectures have been made concerning the intention of this singular title. Some think it merely a musical term; and others suppose it refers to the time when it was to be sung, rendering it "the first dawn." Others apply it to Christ, as the Light of the world, whose rising was predicted.—But perhaps it points out the Saviour, marked by Satan from his birth for persecution, as the hind or hart is in the morning for chase; and so hunted down by his enemies until he was surrounded by them, (as dogs surround the weary hart,) when he hung upon the cross. Of this the persecutions of David in his earlier years were a type.

MESSIAH'S SUFFERINGS.—Ver. 16—18. The rulers of the Jews were as strong bulls: the multitudes and soldiers were as so many ravenous dogs, who had enclosed this hunted hind, in order to glut themselves with his sufferings and his blood.—In nailing him to the cross, they pierced his hands and his feet; and when, emaciated by his labours and sufferings, he was stretched out almost naked on the cross, he might have numbered all his bones. The insulting multitudes stood around, and gratified their malice and curiosity by staring upon him; and the unfeeling soldiers having shared his other garments, amused themselves with casting lots for his vesture. The manner in which his clothes were disposed of, being very remarkable, and occasioned by the peculiar texture of his coat, was thus circumstantially predicted!—Crucifixion, or nailing men to two transverse pieces of wood, by spikes driven through their hands and feet, seems to have been originally a Grecian or Roman punishment for slaves; at least it was not known in Judeah till many ages after this prophecy was delivered. Nothing at all answering to the literal meaning of these terms befell David, as far as we know; nothing could have been previously more unlikely, than that the promised and glorious Son of David should be treated in this cruel and ignominious manner; yet the fulfilment was so exact, that the verses seem more like a narrative than a prediction. The clause, indeed, rendered, "They 'pierced' my hands and my feet," "stands in the original at present," "As a lion" my hands "and my feet." But this contains no clear sense at all. A very trivial change gives the reading of our version. The Septuagint, which is certainly more ancient than the Christian era, renders it as we do; and there seems scarcely the shadow of a doubt but that this is the genuine reading: though the general exactness of the Jews in preserving their Scriptures precludes the charge of an intentional alteration.—Scott.

HIS PRAYER.—Here is Christ praying, and with that supporting himself under the burthen of his sufferings; Christ in his agony prayed, prayed earnestly, prayed that the cup might pass from him; when the prince of this world with his terrors set upon him, "gaped upon him as a roaring lion," he fell upon the ground and prayed. And of that David's praying here was a type. He calls God his "Strength," ver. 19. When we cannot rejoice in God as our Song, yet let us stay ourselves upon him as our Strength; and take the comfort of spiritual supports, when we cannot come at spiritual delights. He prays, 1. That God would be with him, and not set himself at a distance from him; "Be not thou far from me," ver. 11, and again, ver. 19, "Whoever stands aloof from my sore, Lord do not thou." The nearness of trouble should quicken us to draw near to God, and then we may hope that he will draw near to us. 2. That he would him, and make haste to help him; help him to bear up under his troubles, that he might not fail nor be discouraged, that he might neither shrink from his undertaking, nor sink under it. And the Father "heard him in that he feared," (Heb. v. 7,) and enabled him to go through with his work. 3. That he would deliver him and save him, ver. 20, 21.

HIS DELIVERANCE.—The same that began the psalm complaining, who was no other than Christ in his humiliation, ends it here triumphing, and it can be no other than Christ in his exaltation. And as the first words of the complaint were used by Christ himself upon the cross, so the first words of the triumph are expressly applied to him, (Heb. ii. 12,) and are made his own words; "I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee." The certain prospect which Christ had of the joy set before him, not only gave him a satisfactory answer to his prayers, but turned his complaints into praises; he saw of the travail of his soul, and was well satisfied: witness that triumphant word wherewith he breathed his last: "It is finished."—Henry.

PSALM XXIII. THE GOOD SHEPHERD.—The preceding psalm represented "the good shepherd laying down his life for the sheep," and assuming his pastoral charge: this describes their safety and felicity under his tender care. For as Christ is "the good," "the great," "the 'chief' shepherd," we cannot doubt but he is Jehovah, and is especially intended. A flock of sheep, gentle, harmless, and valuable, feeding in verdant pastures, or reclining, cheerful and satisfied, by gentle rivulets, under the care of a skilful, vigilant, and tender shepherd, forms the emblem of believers, brought back to the Shepherd of their souls, and by him guarded and provided for. He is Jehovah, the omnipresent, omniscient, Almighty God, one with the Father, and every way able and willing to take care of them. His ordinances are their plenteous pastures, the consolations of his Holy Spirit are their refreshing waters. Betwixt that part of the flock which is on earth, and that which is gone to heaven, death lies, like a deep valley, that must be passed in going from the one to the other. But this valley cannot hurt believers, and should not alarm them. It is, indeed, deep and dark, but fruitful.—Scott.

PSALM XXIV. OCCASION OF THE PSALM.—Ver. 1, 2. This psalm is supposed to have been written and sung, with some others, when David removed the ark to Jerusalem; and perhaps it might also be used when the ark was removed into Solomon's temple. But the ascension of Christ into heaven seems to have been sublimely prefigured under those typical events.—The psalmist introduced his subject by declaring the sovereignty of God over the whole world. He had formed both the earth and its inhabitants, and separated the dry land from the waters; by which it arose out of the floods, and seemed to have its foundation upon them. The whole belonged to the great Creator, to be disposed of as he pleased; and he might most justly have cut off all the apostate race; or he might have taken another part of it instead of Israel. This introduction, therefore, seems to have been intended to excite the people's admiring gratitude for the Lord's distinguishing kindness to them.—Scott.

ASCENSION OF MESSIAH.—Ver. 7. When Jesus had finished his work on earth, he ascended "in the clouds of heaven," Dan. vii. 13, 14. The gates of heaven must then be opened to him, those doors that may be truly called "everlasting," which had been shut against us, to keep the way of the tree of life, Gen. iii. 24. Our Redeemer found them shut; but having by his blood made atonement for sin, and gained a title to "enter into the holy place," (Heb. ix. 12,) as one having authority, he demanded entrance, not for himself only, but for us; for, as the Forerunner, he is for us entered, and has "opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers." The keys not only of hell and death, but of heaven and life, must be put into his hand. His approach being very magnificent, the angels are brought in asking, "Who is this King of glory?"—Henry.

PSALM XXV. SINS OF YOUTH.—Ver. 7. "'O remember not the sins of my youth,' Lord, remember thy mercies, ver. 6, which speak for me, and not my sins, which speak

PSALM XXVIII.

David prayeth against his enemies, 1. He blesseth God, 6, and prayeth for the people, 9.

A Psalm of David.

UNTO thee [a]will I cry, [b]O LORD my rock; be not silent *to me: lest, if thou be silent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit.[1] against me." Here is, 1. An implicit confession of sin; he specifies particularly the sins of his youth. Note, Our youthful faults and follies should be matter of our repentance and humiliation long after, because time does not wear out the guilt of sin. Old people should mourn for the sinful mirth, and be in pain for the sinful pleasures, of their youth. He aggravates his sins, calling them his transgressions; and the more holy, just, and good the law is, which sin is the transgression of, the more exceeding sinful it ought to appear to us. 2. An express petition for mercy; (1.) That he might be acquitted from guilt; "'Remember not the sins of my youth;' remember them not against me, lay them not to my charge, enter not into judgment with me for them." When God pardons sin, he is said to "remember it no more," which denotes a plenary remission, he forgives and forgets. (2.) That he might be accepted in God's sight; "Remember thou me; think on me for good, and come in seasonably for my succour." We need desire no more to make us happy, than for God to remember us with favour. His plea is, "according to thy mercy, and for thy goodness' sake." Note, It is God's goodness, and not ours; his mercy, and not our own merit, that must be our plea for the pardon of sin, and all the good we stand in need of. This plea we must always rely upon, as those that are sensible of our poverty and unworthiness, and as those that are satisfied of the riches of God's mercy and grace.

2 Hear the voice of my supplications, when I cry unto thee, [c]when I lift up my hands toward [t]thy holy oracle.

DAVID'S PRAYER FOR PERSONAL BLESSING.—Ver. 18. For himself, see how he begs, 1. For the remission of sin; "Forgive all my sins." Those were his heaviest burthens, and which brought upon him all his other burthens. He had begged, ver. 7, for the pardon of the sins of his youth, and, ver. 11, for the pardon of some one particular iniquity that was remarkably great, which, some think, was his sin in the matter of Uriah. But here he prays, Lord, "forgive all, take away all iniquity." It is observable, that, as to his affliction, he asks for no more than God's regard to it; "'Look upon my affliction, and my pain,' and do with it as thou pleasest." But, as to his sin, he asks for no less than a pardon, "Forgive all my sins." When at any time we are in trouble, we should be more concerned about our sins, to get them pardoned, than about our afflictions, to get them removed. Yet he prays, 2. For the redress of his grievances. His mind was troubled for God's withdrawings from him, and under the sense he had of his displeasure against him for his sin; and therefore he prays, ver. 16, "Turn thee unto me." And if God turn to us, no matter who turns from us. His condition was troubled, and in reference to that he prays, "'O bring thou me out of my distresses.' I see no way of deliverance open; but thou canst either find one, or make one."—Henry.

[illegible]—Ver. 1. It is the general opinion, and indeed it seems very probable, that this psalm was written by David in Philistia. Exposed to envenomed slanders and cruel persecutions, he had been driven from the ordinances of God, into the society of idolaters; but he appealed to Him who searched all hearts, to judge betwixt him and his enemies. He was conscious of having, uniformly and perseveringly, acted uprightly towards Saul, and in all other respects: and he had also trusted in God alone. Ver. 6—8. By repentance and conscientious obedience, as well as by faith, expressed in attending on the typical purifications, the psalmist purposed to prepare for offering those sacrifices which prefigured the atonement of Christ; and especially for presenting his thank-offerings for deliverance, which he anticipated with cheerful hope. He trusted that he should soon be restored to the land of Israel, and to the courts of God, in which he greatly delighted; and while the worshippers compassed the altar, he purposed to celebrate the wonderful works of God in his behalf.—The glory of God was manifested at the sanctuary, from above the mercy-seat; and in those ordinances which typified the Redeemer. Ver. 9—11. "Thou wilt not gather," &c.—As the psalmist had thus by choice separated from the wicked, he trusted that God would distinguish between him and them; especially referring to Saul, Doeg, and others who gave or received bribes, in order to murder him and his pious adherents; and who were a kind of prefigurations of Caiaphas, Judas, and the false witnesses and wicked priests, who combined to murder the Prince of life.—Scott.

PSALM XXVII. OCCASION AND SCOPE.—Ver. 1—3. It is probable that this psalm was composed by David in the extremity of his danger from Saul, in order to silence the fears of his companions, by showing them the strength and reasonableness of his confidence; though some think it relates to his subsequent conflicts and dangers. However that were, JEHOVAH himself was David's LIGHT, his Teacher, Guide, Comforter; "and his SALVATION," both from temporal dangers and eternal misery: he was "the Strength of his life," his powerful Protector and Upholder; and therefore he had no reason to fear any enemies. When, in former instances, his wicked persecutors had come against him in force and rage, as if they meant to devour him, they stumbled and fell; and he was assured they would do so again: and, being confident that God was on his side, was determined that he would not yield to fear, even if a whole army should march in battle-array to wage the most desperate war against him. (Ps. iii. 6. Compare this with the complaint of Saul, 1 Sam. xxviii. 15.)—When the malignant enemies of Christ came to seize him in his deepest humiliation, at one word of his, they went backward and fell to the ground.—Scott.

A Psalm and Song, at [a]the dedication of the House of David.

I WILL extol thee, O LORD; [c]for thou hast lifted me up, and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me.

2 O LORD my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me.

3 O LORD, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave: thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go [$]down to the pit.

4 [h]Sing unto the LORD, O ye saints of his, and give thanks *at the remembrance of [i]his holiness.

5 For [†]his anger endureth but a moment; [l]in his favour is life:[1] [m]weeping may endure for a [‡]night, but [$]joy cometh in the morning.

6 And in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

7 LORD, [q]by thy favour thou hast [l]made my mountain to stand strong: thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled.

8 I cried to thee, O LORD; and unto the LORD I made supplication.

9 What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust praise thee? shall it declare thy truth?

10 [u]Hear, O LORD, and have mercy upon me: LORD, [x]be thou my helper.

11 Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing: thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness;

12 To the end that my glory may sing praise to thee, and not be silent. O LORD my God, I will give thanks unto thee for ever.

PSALM XXXI.

David, shewing his confidence in God, craveth his help, 1. He rejoiceth in his mercy, 7, prayeth in his calamity, 9, and praiseth God for his goodness, 19.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

IN [a]thee, O LORD, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed: deliver me in thy righteousness.

2 [c]Bow down thine ear to me; [d]deliver me speedily: be thou *my strong rock, for an house of defence to save me.

3 For thou art my rock and my fortress; therefore [f]for thy name's sake lead me and guide me.

4 Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me: for thou art [l]my strength.

5 [k]Into thine hand I commit my spirit: [l]thou hast redeemed me, O LORD [m]God of truth.

6 I have hated them that regard lying vanities:[1] but I trust in the LORD.

7 [p]I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy: for [q]thou hast considered my trouble; thou hast [r]known my soul in adversities;

8 And hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou hast set my foot in a large room.[2]

9 Have mercy upon me, O LORD, for I am in trouble: [u]mine eye is consumed with grief, yea, my soul and my belly.

nearest and dearest friends I have in the world, from whom I may expect most relief, and with most reason, when they either die, or are at a distance from me, or are disabled to help me in the time of need, or are unkind to me, or unmindful of me, and will not help me when I am as helpless as ever poor orphan was, that was left fatherless and motherless, then I know 'the Lord will take me up,' as a poor wandering sheep is taken up, and saved from perishing." His time to help those that trust in him, is, when all other helpers fail, when it is most for his honour and their comfort; with him the fatherless find mercy. This promise has often been fulfilled in the letter of it. Forsaken orphans have been taken under the especial care of the Divine Providence, which has raised up relief and friends for them, in a way that one would not have expected. God is a surer and better Friend than our earthly parents are, or can be.

FAITH AND PRAYER.—Ver. 14. God shall strengthen thy heart, shall sustain the spirit, and then the spirit shall sustain the infirmity. In that strength, 1. Keep close to God and to your duty. Wait on the Lord by faith and prayer, and a humble resignation to his will, "wait I say on the Lord;" whatever you do, grow not remiss in your attendance upon God. 2. Keep up your spirits in the midst of the greatest dangers and difficulties. "Be of good courage;" let your hearts be fixed, trusting in God, and your minds stayed upon him, and then let none of these things move you. They that wait upon the Lord have reason to be of good courage.—Henry.

PSALM XXVIII.—Ver. 1. It is not agreed, whether this psalm was written during David's persecutions from Saul, or at a later period of his life.—"Be not silent," &c. Treat not my humble requests with silent neglect.—The words rendered "the pit," generally mean the grave, when used in this manner; yet, when the death of the wicked is thus expressed, it seems also to denote the place of future punishment; for all men go down into the grave, but the wicked into "the pit of destruction," Ps. lv. 23.—If God did not show, by some visible interposition, that he heard and answered David's prayers, he must soon have been cut off and laid in the grave, never more to glorify God on earth; and it would appear as if he died under the Divine wrath, as the wicked do. Had Christ continued in the grave, it might have been concluded that he had been justly put to death; but he was justified and proved to be the Son of God by his resurrection.—Scott.

PSALM XXIX. THUNDERSTORM.—Ver. 3—11. It is probable that this psalm was composed during a violent storm of thunder and lightning, which reminded David, and led [illegible] violent storm, he seems in glorious majesty to ride upon the many waters which form the clouds, and he shakes the ocean as well as the earth. The power of the lightning equals the terror of the thunder; enormous cedars are shivered and scattered by it in a moment; the very mountains shake, and seem to move with agility, like a calf, or a young rhinoceros, by the tempest, or the earthquakes, with which they are sometimes accompanied. The flames of the electrical fire, at the direction of the Almighty, are divided with inconceivable swiftness, and irresistible force; and even the wilderness is thrown into a trepidation. The hinds, affrighted, cast forth their young; and the forests are stripped, and their dark recesses laid open; the trees being shivered, their branches torn off, and the wild beasts affrighted in their dens.—The clause rendered "the hinds to calve," is, by some, read, with a small alteration of the text, "the oaks to tremble." But the people who worshipped God at his sanctuary, heard his voice from his word, which, though replete with encouragement, was more majestic and powerful than the thunder and lightning; and, being secure under his protection, they spake of his glory, as displayed in all these terrific events. For HE, who once directed the rising, continuance, and conclusion of the deluge, in the time of Noah, and who always bounds and directs the boisterous ocean, rules every tempest, and is established "King for ever;" and he will give protection, support, and peace, with every blessing, to all his faithful people.—Scott.

PSALM XXX. OCCASION AND SCOPE.—It was the laudable practice of the pious Jews, and, though not expressly appointed, yet allowed and accepted, when they had built a new house, to "dedicate it to God," Deut. xx. 5. David did so, when his house was built, and he took possession of it, 2 Sam. v. 11; for royal palaces do as much need God's protection, and are as much bound to be at his service, as ordinary houses. Note, The houses we dwell in should, at our first entrance upon them, be dedicated to God, as little sanctuaries. We must solemnly commit ourselves, our families, and all our family affairs, to God's guidance and care; must pray for his presence and blessing, must devote ourselves, and all ours, to his glory, and must resolve both that we will put away iniquity far from our tabernacles, and that we and our houses will serve the Lord, both in the duties of family worship, and in all instances of gospel obedience. Some conjecture that this psalm was sung at the re-dedication of David's house, after he had been driven out of it by Absalom, who had defiled it with his incest, and that it is a thanksgiving for the crushing of that dangerous rebellion.—Henry.

PSALM [illegible]

Digitized by Google

10 For my life is spent with grief, and my years with sighing: my strength faileth because of mine iniquity, and my bones are consumed.

11 I was a reproach among all mine enemies, but especially among my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did see me without fled from me.

12 I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind: I am like [x]a broken vessel.[3]

13 For I have heard the slander of many: [y]fear was on every side: while they took counsel together against me, they devised to take away my life.

14 But I trusted in thee, O LORD: I said, [z]Thou art my God.

15 [a]My times are in thy hand: [b]deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me.

16 [c]Make thy face to shine upon thy servant: [d]save me for thy mercies' sake.

17 Let me not be ashamed, O LORD; for I have called upon thee: let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be [e]silent in the grave.

18 Let the lying lips be put to silence; which speak [f]grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous.

19 Oh how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee; which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men!

20 [g]Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues.[4]

21 Blessed be the LORD: for he hath shewed me his [h]marvellous kindness in a [i]strong city.

22 For I said in my haste, [k]I am cut off from before thine eyes: nevertheless thou heardest the voice of my supplications when I cried unto thee.

23 [l]O love the LORD, all ye [m]his saints: for the LORD preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer.

24 [n]Be of good courage, and [o]he shall strengthen your heart, [p]all ye that hope in the LORD.

PSALM XXXII. [q]

Blessedness consisteth in remission of sins, 1. Confession of sins giveth ease to the conscience, 3. God's promises bring joy, 8.

[*]A Psalm of David, Maschil.[1]

BLESSED is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.

2 Blessed is the man unto whom [r]the LORD imputeth not iniquity, and [s]in whose spirit there is no guile.

3 [t]When I kept silence, my bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long.

4 For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me: my moisture is turned into the drought of summer.

5 [u]I acknowledge my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the LORD; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah.

6 For this shall every one that is godly [x]pray unto thee in [y]a time when thou mayest be found: surely [z]in the floods[2] of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him.

7 Thou art [a]my hiding place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; thou shalt [b]compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah.

8 I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: [c]I will guide thee with mine eye.

9 Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding: whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee.

10 [d]Many sorrows shall be to the wicked: but he that trusteth in the LORD, mercy shall compass him about.

11 Be glad in the LORD, and rejoice, ye righteous: and shout for joy, all ye that are [e]upright in heart.

PSALM XXXIII.

God is to be praised for his goodness, 1, for his power, 6, and for his providence, 12. Confidence is to be placed in God, 20.

2 Praise the LORD with harp: [h] sing unto him with the psaltery and an instrument of ten strings.

3 Sing unto him a new song; play skilfully with a loud noise.

4 For [i]the word of the LORD is right; and [k]all his works are done in truth.

5 He loveth righteousness and judgment: the earth is full of the goodness of the LORD.

6 By the word of the LORD were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.

7 He gathereth the waters of the sea together as an heap: he layeth up the depth in storehouses.

8 [l]Let all the earth fear the LORD: let all the inhabitants of the world [m]stand in awe of him.

9 For [n]he spake, and it was done: he commanded, [o]and it stood fast.

10 [p]The LORD [*]bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought: [x]he maketh the devices of the people of none effect.

11 [y]The counsel of the LORD standeth for ever, [z]the thoughts of his heart to [a]all generations.

1. If David here looks upon himself as a dying man, by these words he resigns his departing soul to God, who gave it, and to whom, at death, the spirit returns. "Men can but kill the body, but I trust in God to 'redeem my soul from the power of the grave,'" Ps. xlix. 15. He is willing to die, if God will have it so; but let my soul "fall into the hands of the Lord, for his mercies are great." With these words, our Lord Jesus yielded up the ghost upon the cross, and made his soul an offering, a free-will offering, for sin, voluntarily laying down his life a ransom. By Stephen's example we are taught, in our dying moments, to eye Christ at God's right hand, and to commit our spirits to him; "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." But, 2. David is here to be looked upon as a man in distress and trouble. And (1.) His great care is about his soul, his spirit, his better part. Note, Our outward afflictions should increase our concern for our souls. Many think that while they are perplexed about their worldly affairs, and Providence multiplies their cares about them, they may be excused if they neglect their souls; whereas the greater hazard our lives and secular interests lie at, the more we are concerned to look to our souls, that, though the outward man perish, the inward man may suffer no damage, 2 Cor. iv. 16, and that we may keep possession of our souls, when we can keep possession of nothing else, Luke xxii. 19. (2.) He thinks the best he can do for his soul is, to commit it into the hand of God, and lodge that great trust with him. He had prayed, ver. 4, to be plucked out of the net of outward trouble, but, as not insisting upon that, God's will be done, he immediately lets fall that petition, and commits the spirit, the inward man, into God's hand; "Lord, however it goes with me, as to my body, let it go well with my soul." Note, It is the wisdom and duty of every one of us, solemnly to commit our spirits into the hands of God, to be sanctified by his grace, devoted to his honour, employed in his service, and fitted for his kingdom. That which encourages us to commit our spirits into the hand of God, is, that he has not only created, but redeemed them; the particular redemptions of the Old-Testament church, and the Old-Testament saints, were typical of our redemption by Jesus Christ, Gen. xlviii. 16. The redemption of the soul is so precious, that it must have ceased for ever, if Christ had not undertaken it; but, by redeeming our souls, he has not only acquired an additional right and title to them, which obliges us to commit them to him as his own, but has showed the extraordinary kindness and concern he has for them, which encourages us to commit them to him, to be preserved to his heavenly kingdom; 2 Tim. i. 12. "'Thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth;' redeemed me according to a promise which thou wilt be true to."—Henry.

PSALM XXXII. FORGIVENESS.—Sin is the only cause of misery; and forgiveness is the [illegible] of a sinner's happiness: as he that had obtained the king's pardon would be allowed to be the happiest, though the poorest in a company of condemned malefactors. The believer's transgressions of the Divine law are all forgiven, being covered with the atonement Christ bare his iniquities; and therefore they are not imputed to the believer, as to any of their penal consequences: nay, "righteousness without works" is imputed, and as a righteous person, the reward is adjudged to him: hence all his present comforts, and hopes of future felicity. But his character, as well as his privilege, is emphatically marked: "in his spirit there is no guile." His professed repentance, faith, and love, are undissembled: he means what he says, when he confesses his sins, and prays to be delivered from them. He is no hypocrite or formalist in his worship; but is indeed the same before God that he appears to be before men; a sinner trusting in his mercy through the atoning blood, and seeking sanctification by the power of the Holy Spirit. He does not profess to repent, with intention to sin again; nor indulge in sin, because God is ready to forgive. Others will, but he cannot thus abuse the doctrine of free grace: he is "an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile." "Happy, thrice happy is that man, to whom God will be pleased, out of his own free grace and mercy, (for no man can merit such a favour by any service he can do him,) to remit not only his common errors, but also his grossest sins."—"Who doth not only seem, by his sorrowful confessions, to hate and abhor them; but is unfeignedly resolved to forsake them." Ver. 3—5. It seems that David, before Nathan came to him, had often been exceedingly tortured in his conscience, on account of the atrocious crimes which he had committed; yet reluctancy to humble himself before God, or to be considered as a criminal by men, led him to "keep silence," or only to give vent to his anguish by solitary bemoanings, ("roaring as a lion which has received a deadly wound;") and endeavouring, no doubt, at the same time, by one sophistical excuse or other, to palliate his guilt to himself, and to be on better terms with his conscience. But this stubborn and rebellious conduct served only to prolong and enhance his misery. His secret remorse and conflict, not only preyed on his spirit, but impaired his health, and rendered him infirm in his bones or limbs, as through old age. Neither business nor pleasure during the day, nor his couch by night, could relieve his inward anguish; which was rendered more exquisite by the pains taken to conceal it.—Scott.

PSALM XXXIII. SPIRITUAL JOY.—Ver. 1. 1. Holy joy is the heart and soul of praise, and that is here pressed upon all good people; "Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous," so the foregoing psalm concluded, and so this begins; for all our religious exercises should both begin and end with a holy complacency and triumph in God as the [illegible] and best of friends. 2. That [illegible] and that [illegible] have neglected [illegible] spoken [illegible]

15 He [g]fashioneth their hearts alike;[2] [h]he considereth all their works.

PSALM XXXIV.

David praiseth God, and exhorteth others thereto by his experience, 1. They are blessed that trust in God, 8. He exhorteth to the fear of God, 11.

A Psalm of David, when he changed his behaviour before *Abimelech; who drove him away, and he departed.

I WILL bless the LORD at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth.

2 My soul shall make her boast in the LORD: the humble shall hear thereof, and be glad.

3 [d]O magnify the LORD with me, and [e]let us exalt his name together.

4 [f]I sought the LORD, and he heard me, and delivered me [g]from all my fears.

5 They looked unto him, and were [†]lightened: and their faces were not ashamed.

6 [i]This poor man cried, and the LORD heard him, and [m]saved him out of all his troubles.

7 [n]The angel of the LORD[1] [o]encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.

8 [p]O taste and see that the LORD is good: blessed is the man that trusteth in him.

9 O fear the LORD, ye his saints; for there is no want to them that fear him.

10 [u]The young lions do lack, and suffer hunger; [x]but they that seek the LORD shall not want any good thing.

11 Come, ye children, hearken unto me; [z]I will teach you the fear of the LORD.

12 What man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good?

13 Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile.

14 [e]Depart from evil, and [f]do good; [g]seek peace, and pursue it.

15 The eyes of the LORD are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry.

16 [k]The face of the LORD is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth.

17 The righteous cry, and the LORD heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles.

18 The LORD is nigh *unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth [†]such as be of a contrite spirit.

19 [o]Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the LORD delivereth him out of them all.

20 He keepeth all his bones:[2] not one of them is broken.

21 Evil shall slay the wicked: and they that hate the righteous shall be [‡]desolate.

22 The LORD redeemeth the soul of his servants: and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate.[3]

PSALM XXXV.

David prayeth for his own safety, and his enemies' confusion, 1. He complaineth of their calumny and ingratitude, 11; thereby he inciteth God against them, 22.

A Psalm of David.

[a]PLEAD my cause, O LORD, with them that strive with me: [b]fight against them that fight against me.

2 [c]Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.

3 Draw out also the spear,[1] and stop the way against them that persecute me: [e]say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

4 Let them be confounded and put to shame [g]that seek after my soul: let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.

5 Let them be as chaff before the wind: [k]and let the angel of the LORD chase them.

6 Let their way be *dark and slippery; and let the angel of the LORD persecute them.

7 For without cause have they [n]hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul.

8 Let destruction[2] come upon him at [†]unawares; and let his net that he hath hid catch himself: into that very destruction let him fall.

9 And [r]my soul shall be joyful in the LORD: it shall rejoice in his salvation.

10 All my bones shall say, LORD, who is like unto thee, [u]which deliverest the poor give him the glory due to his name." 3. Religious songs are the proper expressions of thankful praise; those are here required, ver. 3, "'Sing unto him a new song,' the best you have, not that which, by frequent use, is worn thread-bare; but that which, being new, is most likely to move the affections; a new song for new mercies, and upon every new occasion, for those compassions which are new every morning." Music was then used, by the appointment of David, with the temple songs, that they might be the better sung; and this also is here called for, ver. 2, "Sing unto him with the psaltery." Here is, (1.) A good rule for this duty; "Do it skilfully, and with a loud noise; let it have the best both of head and heart; let it be done intelligently, and with a clear head; affectionately, and with a warm heart." (2.) A good reason for this duty; for "praise is comely for the upright." It is well-pleasing to God: the garments of praise add much to the comeliness which God puts upon his people; and it is an excellent ornament to our profession; "it becomes the upright," whom God has put so much honour upon, to give honour to him. The upright praise God in a comely manner, for they praise him with their hearts, that is praising him with their glory.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The formation of the earth, and the separation of the waters in the ocean, as a vast reservoir for the use of man, proclaim the wisdom, power, and goodness of the Creator, and, as they encourage the believer to expect the largest blessings from his almighty Friend, they call on all the inhabitants of the earth to stand in awe of him, and to fear his tremendous indignation. For, as "he spake, and it was done," when the world was made; his mandate will be equally efficacious, when he shall command the destruction of his enemies; and such are all who will not have the Saviour to reign over them. All human power and policy are ineffectual against his omnipotent will: "his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure;" and his vengeance against the ungodly will be everlasting.—But blessed are his people, who have him for their portion, and are his chosen inheritance; who worship and serve him, live under his protection, and enjoy his favour! We possess the outward means of this blessing: may he visit our souls with salvation, and new-create us unto holiness! For he, who formed man's heart, cannot be imposed upon by any appearances.—Scott.

PSALM XXXIV. TITLE.—Achish was the name of the king of Gath, and "Abimelech," which signifies, my father, the king, seems to have been a general title given to all the kings of Philistia, as Pharaoh, and afterwards Ptolemy, was of the Egyptian kings. —"This psalm is curiously composed, according to the number and order of the letters of the Hebrew alphabet, in the beginning of each verse; which shows that it was contrived when he" (David) "reflected on his escape, in some place of safety."—Scott.

GOD'S GOODNESS.—Ver. 8. The psalmist would have us to join with him in kind and good thoughts of God; "O taste and see, that the Lord is good." The goodness of God includes both the beauty and amiableness of his being, and the bounty and beneficence of his providence and grace; and, accordingly, 1. We must taste that he is a bountiful Benefactor, relish the goodness of God in all his gifts to us, and reckon that the savour and sweetness of them. Let God's goodness be rolled under the tongue as a sweet morsel. 2. We must see that he is a beautiful Being, and delight in the contemplation of his infinite perfections. By taste and sight we both make discoveries, and take complacency; taste, and see, God's goodness; take notice of it, and take the comfort of it, 1 Pet. ii. 3. He is good, for he makes all those truly good that trust in him; let us, therefore, be so convinced of his goodness, as thereby to be encouraged in the worst of times to trust in him.—Henry.

YOUTHFUL PIETY.—Ver. 11—14. The psalmist, having addressed "the saints," or such as were established in the way of holiness, next exhorts young persons, or new converts, as children, sons, or beloved sons. Though he was a person of high rank, renowned for military valour and success, anointed to be a king, and eminent in music, poetry, and every accomplishment; he was desirous of teaching children; for youth is the learning and remembering season; and what first occupies the mind lasts the longest. He did not, however, attempt to teach them music, poetry, arts, or arms; but "the fear of the LORD," its nature, and effects. He had been showing the blessedness of those who feared God, and he wished his young friends to share these blessings. —Many as his engagements, and great as his difficulties and dangers were, he would spare time and find spirits to teach children the fear of the Lord!—The manner in which the apostle quotes this passage, demonstrates that such exhortations perfectly coincide with evangelical principles.—True religion begins in the fear of God, in dread of his anger, and hope and desire of his favour: and it hath the promise both of this world and the next. Whether men would live long and happy on earth, or for ever in heaven, the tongue must be bridled; profane, licentious, slanderous, flattering, proud, and deceitful language must be refrained from; all sin must be repented of and renounced; every duty attended to; peace with God and peace with all men must be pursued: indeed "the grace of God, that bringeth salvation," effectually teaches men to attend to these things: and the contrary conduct will ensure temporal and eternal misery: without them faith is dead; by them it is evidenced to be living and justifying. —Scott.

PSALM XXXVI.

The grievous state of the wicked, 1. The excellency of God's mercy, &c., 5. David prayeth for favour to God's children, 10.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David ª the servant of the LORD.

ᵇTHE transgression of the wicked saith within my heart, that there is °no fear of God before his eyes.

2 For he flattereth himself in his own eyes, *until his iniquity be found to be hateful.

3 The words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit: he hath left off to be wise, and to do good.

4 He deviseth †mischief upon his bed; he setteth himself in a way that is not good; he abhorreth not evil.

5 ᵏThy mercy, O LORD, is in the heavens; and ‖thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds.

6 ᵐThy righteousness is like the ‡great mountains; ⁿthy judgments are a great deep: O LORD, °thou preservest man and beast.

7 ᵖHow §excellent is thy lovingkindness, O God! therefore the children of men ᵠput their trust under the shadow of thy wings.

8 They shall be ʳabundantly ‖satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures.

9 For ˢwith thee is the fountain of life: ᵗin thy light[1] shall we see light.

10 O *continue thy lovingkindness unto them that know thee; ᵛand thy righteousness to the upright in heart.

11 Let not the foot of pride come against me, and let not the hand of the wicked remove me.

12 There are the workers of iniquity fallen: they are cast down, and shall not be able to rise.

PSALM XXXVII.

David persuadeth to patience and confidence in God, by the different states of the godly and the wicked.

A Psalm of David.

ªFRET not thyself because of evildoers, ᵇneither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity.

2 For °they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb.

3 ᵈTrust in the LORD, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and *verily thou shalt be fed.

4 ᵉDelight thyself also in the LORD; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart.

5 †Commit thy way unto the LORD; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass.

6 And he shall bring forth thy righteous-verses, in the original, are in the future, as a prediction; though they stand in most translations and paraphrases, ancient and modern, in the imperative, as an imprecation. No doubt there are many instances, in which such denunciations stand in the form of petitions; and considered as the language of inspired men, respecting the inveterate enemies of God, and Christ, and religion, no reasonable objection can be made against them.—It is not, however, desirable to understand any passages in this strong sense, which far more obviously express one of more general application. The verses under consideration are simply a prediction, that David's enemies would, by their unprovoked, assiduous, and crafty devices to take away his life, bring on themselves the deepest infamy, along with unexpected and inevitable ruin; and that his trials would terminate in thanksgiving and rejoicing.—As light chaff cannot resist the force of the wind; so the psalmist's persecutors would not be able to withstand the power and justice of God; whose angel encamped around the righteous to protect them, and would drive their dismayed and bewildered assailants headlong into the pit of destruction. One in particular, (probably Saul,) would perish in that very destruction, which he had, without any cause, nay, contrary to his deserts, intended for David. He took counsel to take off David in battle against the Philistines, and he died in battle against them; which made way for the psalmist's complete deliverance. In like manner, Ahithophel and Absalom brought ruin on themselves by their counsel against David; and so did Judas, and the Jewish rulers, and the nation, by opposing Christ; of whom David, in this psalm especially, seems to have spoken, as a type or representative. Indeed, the whole Scripture predicts the final ruin of all the impenitent enemies of God and religion, and that of Satan, their great leader: and the intercession of Christ, the prayers of his church, and the ministration of angels: while they tend to complete the salvation and joy of his people, concur in accomplishing the prophecies which foretell the destruction of his enemies.—Scott.

PRAYER UNDER PERSECUTION.—Ver. 17. The psalmist prays that God would act for him, and not stand by as a spectator; "'Lord, how long wilt thou look on?' How long wilt thou connive at the wickedness of the wicked? Rescue my soul from the destructions they are plotting against it; rescue my darling, my only one from the lions. My soul is my only one, and therefore the greater is the shame if I neglect it, and the greater the loss if I lose it; it is my only one, and therefore ought to be my darling, ought to be carefully protected and provided for. It is my soul that is in danger, Lord, rescue it; it does, in a peculiar manner, belong to the Father of spirits, therefore make thine own; it is thine, save it! "Lord, keep not silence," as if thou were privy to what is done against me! "Lord, be not far from me," ver. 22, as if I were a stranger that thou art not concerned for; let not me be beheld afar off, as the proud are.—Henry.

PSALM XXXVI. LIFE AND LIGHT FROM GOD.—Ver. 9. First, In him they have a fountain of life, from which those rivers of pleasure flow, ver. 8. The God of nature is the Fountain of natural life; in him we live, and move, and have our being; the God of grace is the Fountain of spiritual life. All the strength and comfort of a sanctified soul, all its gracious principles, powers, and performances, are from God; he is the Spring and Author of all its sensations of divine things, and all its motions toward them: he quickens whom he will; and whosoever will, may come, and take from him of the waters of life freely. He is the Fountain of eternal life; the happiness of glorified saints consists in the vision and fruition of him, and in the immediate communications of his love, without interruption or fear of cessation. Secondly, In him they have light in perfection, wisdom, knowledge, and joy; all included in this light: "In thy light we shall see light," that is, 1. "In the knowledge of thee in grace, and the vision of thee in glory, we shall have that which will abundantly suit and satisfy our understandings." That divine light which shines in the scripture, and especially in the face of Christ, the Light of the world, has all truth in it. When we come to see God face to face, within the veil, we shall see light in perfection, we shall know enough then, 1 Cor. xiii. 12; 1 John iii. 2. 2. "In communion with thee now; by the communications of thy grace to us, and the return of our devout affections to thee, and in the fruition of thee shortly in heaven, we shall have a complete felicity and satisfaction. In thy favour we have all the good we can desire." This is a dark world, we see little comfort in it; but in the heavenly light there is true light, and no false light, light that is lasting, and never wastes. In this world, we see God, and enjoy him by creatures and means; but in heaven, "God himself shall be with us," Rev. xxi. 3, and we shall see and enjoy him immediately.—Henry.

PSALM XXXVII.—Ver. 1, 2. It is probable, that this psalm was written towards the close of David's life, as the result of his long experience and observation, for the instruction and encouragement of others, who might be called to pass through such trying scenes, as he had been conversant with.—Every other verse, in the original, begins with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet, nearly in regular order: and this arrangement, which, with some variations, is frequently adopted, might be intended as a help to those who desired to commit to memory these sacred poems, for their comfort and benefit in silence and solitude. The Mosaic dispensation engaged peculiar temporal blessings to "the nation" of Israel, whilst they were obedient, frequently promised in ness [l]as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday.

7 [‡]Rest in the LORD, and wait patiently for him: fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass.

8 [p]Cease from anger, and forsake wrath: fret not thyself in any wise to do evil.

9 For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the LORD, they shall [s]inherit the earth.

10 For yet a little while, and the wicked [u]shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be.

11 But [y]the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall [z]delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

12 [a]The wicked [§]plotteth against the just, and [b]gnasheth upon him with his teeth.

13 The LORD [c]shall laugh at him: for he seeth that his day is coming.

14 The wicked [e]have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and [f]to slay [‖]such as be of upright conversation.

15 [g]Their sword shall enter into their own heart, and [h]their bows shall be broken.

16 [i]A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked.

17 For the arms of the wicked shall be broken: but the LORD upholdeth the righteous.

18 The LORD knoweth the days of the upright: and [o]their inheritance shall be for ever.

19 They shall not be ashamed in the evil time: and in the days of famine they shall be satisfied.

20 But [r]the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the LORD shall be as the [*]fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away.

21 The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again:[1] [u]but the righteous sheweth mercy, and giveth.

22 For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off.

23 [a]The steps of a good man are [†]ordered by the LORD; and he delighteth in his way.

24 Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down: [d]for the LORD upholdeth him with his hand.

25 I have been young, and now am old; [f]yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.

26 He is [‡]ever merciful, and lendeth; and his seed is blessed.

27 [k]Depart from evil, and do good; and dwell for evermore.

28 For the LORD loveth judgment, and [n]forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved for ever: [o]but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off.

29 The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever.

30 The mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment.

31 The law of his God is in his heart; [s]none of his [†]steps shall slide.

32 The wicked [t]watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him.

33 The LORD [u]will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged.

34 Wait on the LORD, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: [b]when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.

35 [c]I have seen the wicked in great power,[2] and spreading himself like [‡]a green bay tree.

36 Yet [d]he passed away, and, lo, he was not: yea, I sought him, but he could not be found.

37 [e]Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.

38 But [f]the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off.

39 But [g]the salvation of the righteous is of the LORD: he is their strength in the time of trouble.

40 And [i]the LORD shall help them, and deliver them: he shall deliver them from the wicked, and save them, because they trust in him.

PSALM XXXVIII.

David moveth God to take compassion of his pitiful case.

A Psalm of David, [a]to bring to remembrance.[1]

O LORD, [b]rebuke me not in thy wrath: neither chasten me in thy [c]hot displeasure.

2 For [d]thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore.

3 There is no soundness in my flesh, because of thine anger; neither is there any [*]rest in my bones, [h]because of my sin.

4 For [i]mine iniquities are gone over mine head: [k]as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me.

5 [l]My wounds stink[2] and are corrupt because of my foolishness.

6 I am [†]troubled; [m]I am bowed down greatly; [n]I go mourning all the day long.

7 For [o]my loins are filled with a loathsome disease: and there is no soundness in my flesh.

8 I am feeble and sore broken: [p]I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart.

wickedness, whilst the righteous were afflicted and persecuted. This seemed to imply an inconsistency betwixt the word and the providence of God, and formed a great trial to ancient believers. To this difficulty the psalmist here gives a copious solution, with many excellent cautions and counsels, which, at the same time, are equally suited, by varying a few expressions, to the case of christians in this evil world.—Scott.

DUTY AND HAPPINESS.—Ver. 5. 1. The duty is very easy; and if we do it aright, it will make us easy; "Commit thy way unto the Lord; roll thy way upon the Lord," so the margin reads it, Prov. xvi. 3; Ps. lv. 22. "Cast thy burthen upon the Lord," the burthen of thy care, 1 Pet. v. 7. We must roll it off ourselves, so as not to afflict and perplex ourselves with thoughts about future events, Matt. vi. 25, not to cumber and trouble ourselves either with the contrivance of the means, or with expectation of the end, but refer it to God, leave it to him, by his wise and good providence to order and dispose of all our concerns, as he pleases; "Reveal thy way unto the Lord;" (so the LXX;) that is, "By prayer spread thy case, and all thy cares about it, before the Lord," (as Jephthah "uttered his words before the Lord in Mizpeh," Judg. xi. 11.) "and then trust in him to bring it to a good issue, with a full satisfaction that all is well that God does." We must do our duty, (that must be our care,) and then leave the event with God; "Sit still, and see how the matter will fall," Ruth iii. 18. We must follow Providence, and not force it; subscribe to Infinite Wisdom, and not prescribe. 2. The promise is very sweet; "He shall bring that to pass, whatever it is, which thou hast committed to him, if not to thy contrivance, yet to thy content. He will find means to extricate thee out of thy straits, to prevent thy fears, and bring about thy purposes, to thy satisfaction."—Henry.

DIVINE PROVIDENCE.—Ver. 25, 26. There is not an absolute promise in Scripture that no righteous man shall ever want bread, or his seed become beggars: but the psalmist had never, during a long course of observation, known an instance of the kind. It is, indeed, a very rare case in any age, but was peculiarly so under the Mosaic dispensation. —Yet times of persecution seem excepted from general rules concerning temporal things, having so many particular promises relating to them; and we cannot tell how it may please our wise and righteous God, for our good, to try our faith and patience, or to remove us out of this world, or how he may see good to dispose of our posterity. But, in general, the godly man will best secure himself and his children from want; and that genuine liberality to the poor, in giving or lending, according as circumstances may require, which men think will impoverish their families, is, in fact, the best way of laying up a provision for them.—Scott.

BLESSEDNESS OF THE RIGHTEOUS.—Ver. 37—40. Let us see what will be the end of God's poor despised people. 1. Preferment. There have been times, the iniquity of which has been such, that men's piety has hindered their preferment in this world, and put them quite out of the way of raising estates; but those that keep God's way may be assured that, in due time, he will "exalt them to inherit the land," ver. 34, he will advance them to a place in the heavenly mansions, to dignity and honour, and true wealth, in the New Jerusalem; to inherit that good land, that land of promise, of which Canaan was a type; he will exalt them above all contempt and danger. 2. Peace, ver. 37. Let all people "mark the perfect man, and behold the upright," take notice of him to admire him and imitate him, keep your eye upon him to observe what comes of him, and you will find that "the end of that man is peace." Sometimes the latter end of his days proves more comfortable to him than the beginning was; the storms blow over, and he is comforted again, after the time that he was afflicted; however, if all his days continue dark and cloudy, perhaps his dying day may prove comfortable to him, and his sun may set bright; or, if it should set under a cloud, yet his future state will be peace, everlasting peace. They that walk in their uprightness, while they live, shall enter into peace when they die, Is. lvii. 2. A peaceful death has concluded the troublesome life of many a good man; and all is well that thus ends everlastingly well. Balaam himself wished that his death and his last end might be like that of the righteous, Num. xxiii. 10. 3. Salvation, ver. 39, 40. "The salvation of the righteous," (which may be applied to the great salvation of which "the prophets inquired and searched diligently," 1 Pet. i. 10,) that is, of the Lord; it will be the Lord's doing; the eternal salvation, that salvation of God, which those shall see that "order their conversation aright," Ps. l. 23, that is, of the Lord too. And he that intends Christ and heaven for them, will be a God all-sufficient to them. "He is their Strength in time of trouble," to support them under it, and carry them through it; "He shall help them and deliver them," help them to do their duties, to bear their burthens, and to maintain their spiritual conflicts; help them to bear their troubles well, and get good by them, and, in due time, shall deliver them out of their troubles. He shall deliver them from the wicked that would overwhelm them and swallow them up; shall secure them there, where the wicked cease from troubling. He shall save them; not only keep them safe, but make them happy, because they trust in him; not because they have merited it from him, but because they have committed themselves to him, and reposed a confidence in him, and have thereby honoured him.—Henry.

PSALM XXXVIII. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The prevalency of sin, and the successful force of temptation, form the worst diseases, and most offensive and dangerous wounds: and whilst "there is no soundness in their flesh," and no rest in their bones, they are led to consider their souls, in which "there is no health." For pride, covetous-

9 LORD, all my desire is before thee; and [q]my groaning is not hid from thee.

10 [r]My heart panteth, my strength faileth me: as for [s]the light of mine eyes, it also is [‡]gone from me.

11 [t]My lovers and my friends [u]stand aloof from my [§]sore; and my [‖]kinsmen stand [x]afar off.

12 They also that seek after my life [y]lay snares for me; and they that seek my hurt [z]speak mischievous things, and imagine deceits all the day long.

13 But I, as a deaf man, heard not,[3] and I was as a dumb man that openeth not his mouth.

14 Thus I was as a man that heareth not, and in whose mouth are no reproofs.

15 For [*]in thee, O LORD, [c]do I hope: thou wilt [†]hear, O LORD my God.

16 [d]For I said, Hear me, lest otherwise they should rejoice over me: when [e]my foot slippeth, they magnify themselves against me.

17 For I am ready [‡]to halt, and [f]my sorrow is continually before me.

18 For [g]I will declare mine iniquity; I will be [h]sorry for my sin.

19 But [i]mine enemies are [§]lively, and they are strong: and they that hate me wrongfully are multiplied.

20 They also [l]that render evil for good are mine adversaries; because I follow the thing that good is.

21 Forsake me not, O LORD: O my God, be not far from me.

22 Make haste [‖]to help me, O LORD my salvation.

PSALM XXXIX.

David's care of his thoughts, 2; his consideration of the brevity and vanity of life, 4; he prayeth for pardon and comfort before his death, 8.

To the chief Musician, even to [a]Jeduthun,[1] A Psalm of David.

I SAID, [b]I will take heed to my ways, [c]that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep [*]my mouth with a bridle, [d]while the wicked is before me.

2 [e]I was dumb with silence, I held my peace, [f]even from good; and [g]my sorrow was [†]stirred.

3 [h]My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned: then spake I with my tongue.

4 LORD, [i]make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know [‡]how frail I am.

5 Behold, [k]thou hast made my days as an handbreadth; and mine age is [l]as nothing before thee: [m]verily every man [*]at his best state is altogether vanity. Selah.

6 Surely every man walketh in [†]a vain show: surely they are disquieted in vain: he heapeth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them.

7 And now, LORD, what wait I for? [q]my hope is in thee.

8 [r]Deliver me from all my transgressions: make me not the reproach of the foolish.

9 I was dumb, I opened not my mouth; because thou didst it.

10 [u]Remove thy stroke away from me: I am consumed by the [‡]blow of thine hand.

11 When [y]thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity, thou makest [§]his beauty to consume away like a moth:[2] [z]surely every man is vanity. Selah.

12 Hear my prayer, O LORD, and give ear unto my cry; [b]hold not thy peace at my tears: for I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were.

13 O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more.

PSALM XL.

The benefit of confidence in God, 1. Obedience is the best sacrifice, 6. A sense of David's evils inflameth his prayer, 11.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

[*]I [a]WAITED patiently for the LORD; and [b]he inclined unto me, and heard my cry.

2 [c]He brought me up also out of an [†]horrible pit, out of [d]the miry clay, and [e]set my feet upon a rock, and [f]established my goings.

3 And [g]he hath put a new song in my mouth, even [h]praise unto our God: many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the LORD.

4 Blessed is that man that maketh the LORD his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies.

5 Many, O LORD my God, are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward: [‡]they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee: if I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered.

6 Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; mine ears hast thou [§]opened: burnt-offering and sin-offering hast thou not required.

7 Then said I, [r]Lo, I come: [s]in the volume[1] of the book it is written of me,

8 [t]I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is [‖]within my heart.

9 I have preached righteousness in the great congregation: lo, I have not refrained my lips, O LORD, thou knowest.

10 I have not hid [b]thy righteousness within my heart; I have declared thy faithfulness and [d]thy salvation: I have not concealed thy lovingkindness and thy truth from the great congregation.

ness, envy, malice, and lust, are diseases of the soul, of far greater malignity than fevers, dropsies, palsies, gout, or stone, are of the body; yet numbers feel not their sickness, till it be too late to apply the remedy. But when we perceive our true condition, the good physician is valued, resorted to, and obeyed; though even they who are in this sure way of an effectual cure, often retard it, and experience grievous relapses, through their foolishness; and their wounds rankle and corrupt, because they delay to go to their merciful friend, and to apply the healing balm which he hath prepared. Would we not prolong our own miseries, when we are conscious of having offended, we should immediately approach the mercy-seat with penitent confessions and believing prayers; that without delay our sins may be pardoned, our strength renewed, and our enemy prevented from rejoicing over us. Yet, the feeling and effects of the Divine displeasure must needs trouble him who loves God, and "bow him down greatly, and cause him to go mourning all the day long;" and even enfeeble him, and cause him to "roar for the very disquietness of his heart:" for "a wounded spirit, who can bear?" and this uneasiness will be in proportion to the degree in which he values the favour of God, and delights in communion with him. But while the hypocrite takes encouragement from David's sins to transgress, he is a perfect stranger to David's ingenuous anguish of spirit under the consciousness of his guilt.—In the true believer's case, however, all this trouble will be useful: he will wait for and on his God, and not seek relief from the world, or from himself: he will bring his whole desire before his heavenly Father, and be encouraged, because "his groaning is not hid from him;" even though like one expiring, "his heart panteth, his strength faileth, and the sight of his eyes is gone from him," and he knows not what to say or do. Nay, should all this be attended with the unkindness and inconstancy of lovers, friends, and relatives who stand aloof from his affliction; whilst treacherous and cruel foes are "laying snares for his life, and seeking his hurt, and speaking mischievous things, and imagining deceits all the day long:" that consciousness of guilt which forms his heaviest load, will keep down indignation, silence murmurs and reproaches, and produce meek and quiet submission.—Scott.

PSALM XXXIX. BREVITY OF LIFE.—Ver. 5. 1. Man's life on earth is short, and of no continuance, and that is a reason why we should sit loose to it, and prepare for the end of it; "Behold, thou hast made my days as a hand-breadth;" the breadth of four fingers, a certain dimension, a small one, and the measure whereof we have always about us, always before our eyes; we need no rod, no pole, no measuring line, wherewith to take the dimension of our days, nor any skill in arithmetic wherewith to compute the number of them; no, we have the standard of them at our fingers' end, and there is no multiplication of it, it is but one hand-breadth in all. Our time is short, and God has made it so; for the number of our months is with him; it is short, and he knows it to be so; "It is as nothing before thee." He remembers "how short our time is," Ps. lxxxix. 47. "It is nothing in comparison with thee;" so some. All time is nothing to God's eternity, much less our share of time. 2. Man's life on earth is vain and of no value, and therefore it is folly to be fond of it, and wisdom to make sure of a better life. Observe how emphatically this truth is expressed here. 1. "Every man is vanity," without exception; high and low, rich and poor, all meet in this. (2.) He is so "at his best estate," when he is young, and strong, and healthful, in wealth and honour, and the height of prosperity; when he is most easy, and merry, and secure, and thinks his mountain stands strong. (3.) He is "altogether vanity," as vain as you can imagine. "All man is all vanity," so it may be read; every thing about him is uncertain, nothing is substantial and durable but what relates to the new man. (4.) "Verily" he is so. This is a truth of undoubted certainty, but which we are very unwilling to believe, and need to have solemnly attested to us, as indeed it is by frequent instances.—Henry.

PSALM XL. OCCASION AND MATTER.—Ver. 1--5. In this psalm, David seems to have intended to speak of his own case and experience; but the Holy Spirit led him to use language which, in its full meaning, can be applied to none but the Lord Jesus himself. The whole, indeed, may be accommodated to him, yet some passages are more suited to the case of the type, than to that of the antitype.—These verses may be interpreted of the Redeemer's deep and dreadful sufferings, and the happy effects which followed his deliverance from them. Exposed to the cruelty and malice of men, the horrid assaults of Satan, and the wrath of the Father, when bearing our sins; he was as one sinking in a dark and noisome pit, where dreadful noises are heard; and he was ready to be covered and suffocated with the miry clay: but under all these sufferings, "in waiting he waited for the LORD;" and his earnest prayers were heard; at his resurrection he was brought forth from the grave, and the state of the dead: and in his exaltation he was placed as on an immoveable rock; his goings were established, his remaining work became most delightful, and his full success was ensured. Thus "a new song" was put into his mouth, which he teaches his people; for no such redemption could before be celebrated; and multitudes, by faith beholding his sufferings, and the glory which followed, have learned to fear the justice, and trust in the mercy of God through him. Ver. 6—8. It is uncertain whether David had in these verses any intention of declaring, that cheerful and prompt obedience to the precepts of the moral law, proceeding from faith and love, was more acceptable to God than any legal sacrifices; but it is

PSALM XLI.

God's care of the poor, 1. David complaineth of the treachery of his enemies, 4.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

BLESSED is he that considereth *the poor: [b]the LORD will deliver him in [t]time of trouble.

2 The LORD will preserve him, and keep him alive; and he shall be [d]blessed upon the earth: [e]and [‡]thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.

3 The LORD will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: thou wilt [§]make all his bed in his sickness.

4 I said, [g]LORD, be merciful unto me: heal my soul; for I have sinned against thee.

5 Mine enemies speak evil of me, When shall he die, and his name perish?

6 And if he come to see me, [i]he speaketh vanity: his heart gathereth iniquity to itself; [m]when he goeth abroad, he telleth it.

7 All that hate me [n]whisper together against me: [o]against me do they devise [l]my hurt.

8 *An evil disease, say they, cleaveth fast unto him: and now that he lieth, he shall rise up no more.

9 [r]Yea, [†]mine own familiar friend,[1] in whom I trusted, [s]which did eat of my bread, hath [‡]lifted up his heel against me.

10 But thou, O LORD, [t]be merciful unto me, and raise me up, [u]that I may requite them.

11 By this I know that thou favourest me, [x]because mine enemy doth not triumph over me.

12 And as for me, thou upholdest me in mine integrity, and settest me before thy face for ever.

13 [a]Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, from everlasting, and to everlasting. [b]Amen, and Amen.

PSALM XLII.

David's zeal to serve God in the temple, 1; he encourageth his soul to trust in God, 5.

To the chief Musician. *Maschil, for [a]the sons of Korah.[1]

AS the hart [†]panteth after the water brooks, [b]so panteth my soul after thee, O God.

2 My soul [c]thirsteth for God, for [d]the living God: [e]when shall I come and appear before God?

3 My tears have been my meat day and night, while they continually say unto me, Where is thy God?

4 When I remember these things, [i]I pour out my soul in me: [k]for I had gone with the multitude, I went with them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with the multitude that kept holyday.

5 Why art thou [‡]cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? [n]hope thou in God: for I shall yet [§]praise him [o]for [l]the help of his countenance.

6 O [p]my God, my soul is cast down within me: [q]therefore will I remember thee [r]from the land of Jordan, and of [s]the Hermonites, from *the hill Mizar.

7 [t]Deep calleth unto deep[2] at the noise of thy waterspouts: all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.

8 Yet the LORD will [x]command his lovingkindness in the daytime, and [y]in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto [z]the God of my life.

9 I will say unto [a]God my rock, [b]Why hast thou forgotten me? [c]why go I mourning [d]because of the oppression of the enemy?

10 [e]As with [†]a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me; while they say daily unto me [f]Where is thy God?

11 [g]Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is [h]the health of my countenance,[3] and my God.

PSALM XLIII.

David, praying to be restored to the temple, promiseth to serve God joyfully, 1. He encourageth his soul to trust in God, 5.

[a]JUDGE me, O God, and [b]plead my cause against an *ungodly nation. O deliver me from [†]the deceitful and unjust man.

2 For thou art [c]the God of my strength: [d]why dost thou cast me off? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

evident that the Holy Spirit foretold the obedience of the promised Messiah. Sacrifices, though appointed by God himself, were of no intrinsic value: he neither delighted in them, or required them for their own sake, nor could they take away sin. But the incarnation and obedience of the Son of God, which they shadowed forth, were previously appointed for that purpose. His ears were opened, to receive and obey the command of the Father; or pierced, as those of servants were, who chose to continue perpetually with their masters. When the legal sacrifices were declared inefficient, the Redeemer promptly answered, "Lo, I come," &c. According to the eternal purpose of JEHOVAH, and as it was written in the Scriptures from the beginning, or "the opening of the roll," concerning him, he was prepared to appear in human nature, to magnify the law of God by his perfect and divine obedience, even unto the death of the cross: yea, his cordial love to the holy commandment, and his zeal for the honour of the Divine government and perfections, and his compassion for the souls of men were so powerful, that he delighted in thus performing the will of his heavenly Father. In quoting this passage, the apostle follows the translation of the Septuagint, which gives an interpretation, rather than a translation, of the words rendered, "Mine ears hast thou opened." But as this variation did not at all affect his argument, or alter the meaning of the passage, it was not necessary that he should interrupt his subject by noticing it.—Scott.

PSALM XLI. ITS PURPORT.—Ver. 1—3. God's kindness and truth have often been the support and comfort of the saints, when they have had most experience of men's unkindness and treachery. David here found them so upon a sick bed; he found his enemies very barbarous, but his God very gracious. 1. He here comforts himself in his communion with God under his sickness, by faith receiving and laying hold of God's promises to him, and lifting up his heart in prayer to God, ver. 4. 2. He here represents the malice of his enemies against him, their malicious censures of him, their spiteful reflections upon him, and their insolent conduct toward him, ver. 5—9. 3. He leaves his case with God, not doubting but that he would own and favour him, ver. 10, 11; and so the psalm concludes with a doxology, ver. 13. Is any afflicted with sickness? let him sing the beginning of this psalm. Is any persecuted by enemies? let him sing the latter end of it; and we may any of us, in singing it, meditate upon both the calamities [illegible] of good people in this world.—Henry.

[illegible] the Lord's example of kindness and compassion, [illegible] disposing him to alleviate their sorrows, and supply their wants, according to his opportunity and ability: nor does he exclude any other sufferers from his deep compassion, and such relief as he can afford them. Thus he evidences the reality of his faith, and obtains the assurances of gracious supports from God, when afflictions fall to his share.—Scott.

PSALM XLII. TITLE.—"A psalm to give instruction, committed to the sons of Korah, who were of the number of the Levites, as a treasure to be kept by them."—This psalm begins the second book, according to the division made by the Jews. It has not David's name prefixed to it: yet there is little doubt but that he composed it when driven from Jerusalem and beyond Jordan, by Absalom's rebellion; and when he was thus deprived of the benefit and comfort of public ordinances, under his complicated afflictions.—Scott.

GENERAL TENOUR.—If the book of Psalms be, as some have styled it, a mirror, or looking-glass, of pious and devout affections, this psalm in particular deserves, as much as any one psalm, to be so entitled, and is as proper as any other to kindle and excite such in us: gracious desires are here strong and fervent; gracious hopes and fears, joys and sorrows, are here struggling, but the pleasing passion comes off a conqueror. Or we may take it for a conflict between sense and faith; sense objecting and faith answering. 1. Faith begins with holy desires toward God, and communion with him, ver. 1, 2. 2. Sense complains of the darkness and cloudiness of the present condition, aggravated by the remembrance of the former enjoyments, ver. 3, 4. 3. Faith silences the complaint with the assurance of a good issue at last, ver. 5. 4. Sense renews its complaints of the present dark and melancholy state, ver. 6, 7. 5. Faith holds up the heart, notwithstanding, with hope that the day will dawn, ver. 3. 6. Sense repeats its lamentations, ver. 9, 10, and sighs out the same remonstrance it had before made of its grievances. 7. Faith gets the last word, ver. 11, for the silencing of the complaints of sense, and though it be almost the same with that, ver. 5, yet now it prevails and carries the day. The strain of it is much the same with Ps. lxiii., and therefore we may presume it was penned by the same hand, and upon the same or a like occasion. In singing it, if we be either in outward affliction, or inward distress, we may accommodate to ourselves the melancholy expressions we find here; if not, we must, in singing them, sympathise with those whose case they speak too plainly, and thank God it is not [illegible] but those passages in it, which express and excite holy desires toward [illegible] him, we must [illegible] (which [illegible]

5 [n]Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

PSALM XLIV.

The church, in memory of former favours, 1, complaineth of her present evils, 9. Professing her integrity, 17, she fervently prayeth for succour, 24.

To the chief Musician [a]for the sons of Korah, Maschil.

WE have heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old.

2 How [d]thou didst drive out the heathen with thy hand, and plantedst them; how thou didst afflict the people, and cast them out.

3 For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them: but [g]thy right hand, and thine arm, and [h]the light of thy countenance, because thou hadst a favour unto them.

4 Thou art [k]my King, O God: [l]command deliverances for Jacob.

5 [m]Through thee will we push down our enemies: through thy name will we tread them under that rise up against us.

6 For [p]I will not trust in my bow, neither shall my sword save me.

7 But [q]thou hast saved us from our enemies, and hast [r]put them to shame that hated us.

8 [t]In God we boast all the day long, and [t]praise thy name for ever. Selah.

9 But [u]thou hast cast off, and put us to shame; and goest not forth with our armies.

10 [x]Thou makest us to turn back from the enemy: and they which hate us spoil for themselves.

11 Thou hast [z]given us *like sheep appointed for meat: and hast [a]scattered us among the heathen.[1]

12 Thou [b]sellest thy people [f]for nought, and dost not [c]increase thy wealth by their price.

13 Thou [d]makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us.

14 Thou makest us [f]a byword among the heathen, a shaking of the head among the people.

15 [h]My confusion is continually before me, and the shame of my face hath [l]covered me,

16 For [k]the voice of him that reproacheth and blasphemeth; by reason of [l]the enemy and avenger.

17 [m]All this is come upon us; [n]yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant.

18 Our heart is not turned back, neither [q]have our [z]steps declined from thy way;

19 Though thou hast sore broken us in the place of dragons,[2] and covered us [t]with the shadow of death.

20 If we have forgotten the name of our God, or stretched out our hands to a strange god;

21 Shall not God search this out? for [z]he knoweth the secrets of the heart.

22 Yea, [a]for thy sake are we killed all the day long; we are counted as sheep for the slaughter.

23 [o]Awake, why sleepest thou, O LORD? arise, cast us not off for ever.

24 [o]Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and forgettest our affliction and our oppression?

25 For [s]our soul is bowed down to the dust: our belly cleaveth unto the earth.

26 Arise [s]for our help, and [b]redeem us for thy mercies' sake.

The majesty and grace of Christ's kingdom, 1. The duty of the church, and the benefits thereof, 10.

To the chief Musician upon [a]Shoshannim,[1] for the sons of Korah, [c]Maschil, [b]A song of loves.

MY heart [f]is inditing a good matter: I speak of the things which I have made [d]touching the king: my tongue is the pen of a ready writer.

2 Thou art [f]fairer than the children of men: [g]grace is poured into thy lips: therefore [h]God hath blessed thee for ever.

3 Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty.

4 And in thy majesty [z]ride prosperously because of truth and meekness and righteousness; and [p]thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things.

5 [q]Thine arrows are sharp in the heart of the king's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee.

6 Thy throne, O God,[2] is for ever and ever: [x]the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre.

7 [y]Thou lovest righteousness, and [z]hatest wickedness: therefore [g]God, thy God, hath anointed thee with [c]the oil of gladness above thy fellows.

altar of God." He will get as near as he can unto God, his exceeding joy. Note, 1. Those that come to the tabernacles, should come to the altar; those that come to ordinances, should qualify themselves to come, and then come to special ordinances, to those that are most affecting and most binding. The nearer we come, the closer we cleave to God, the better. 2. Those that come to the altar of God must see to it, that therein they come unto God, and draw near to him with the heart, with a true heart: we come in vain to holy ordinances, if we do not in them come to the holy God. 3. Those that come unto God must come to him as their exceeding joy, not only as their future Bliss, but as their present Joy; and that not a common, but an exceeding Joy, far exceeding all the joys of sense and time. The phrase in the original is very emphatical —"unto God the Gladness of my joy," or of my triumph. Whatever we rejoice or triumph in, God must be the joy of it; all our joy in it must terminate in him, and must pass through the gift to the Giver. 4. When we come to God as our exceeding Joy, our comforts in him must be the matter of our praises to him as God, and our God. "Upon the harp will I praise thee, O God my God." David excelled at the harp, (1 Sam. xvi. 16, 18,) and with that in which he excelled he would praise God; for God is to be praised with the best we have: it is fit he should who is the best.—Henry.

PSALM. XLIV.—We are not told either who was the penman of this psalm, or when and upon what occasion it was penned; upon a melancholy occasion, we are sure, not so much to the penman himself, (then we could have found occasions enough for it in the history of David and his afflictions,) but to the church of God in general; and therefore, if we suppose it penned by David, yet we must attribute it purely to the spirit of prophecy, and must conclude that that spirit (whatever he himself had) had in view the captivity of Babylon, or the sufferings of the Jewish church under Antiochus, or rather the afflicted state of the Christian church in its early days, (to which ver. 22 is applied by the apostle, Rom. viii. 36,) and indeed in all its days on earth, for it is its determined lot that it must enter into the kingdom of heaven through many tribulations. And if we have any gospel-psalms pointing at the privileges and comforts of Christians, why should we not have one pointing at their trials and exercises? It is a psalm calculated for a day of fasting and humiliation, upon occasion of some public calamity, either pressing or threatening. In it the church is taught, 1. To own with thankfulness the glory of God, the great things God had done for their fathers, ver. 1—8. 2. To exhibit a memorial of their present calamitous estate, ver. 9—16. 3. To file a protestation of their integrity and adherence to God notwithstanding, ver. 17—22. 4. To lodge a petition at the throne of grace for succour and relief, ver. 23—26. In singing this psalm, we ought to give God the praise of what he has formerly done for his people, to represent our own grievances, or sympathize with those parts of the church that are in distress, to engage whatever happens, to cleave to God and duty, and then cheerfully to wait the event.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The believer must have seasons of temptations, afflictions, and humiliating discouragements; and the church must have seasons of persecution, when her remaining witnesses prophesy in sackcloth. At such times the people of God will be trampled on, put to shame, plundered, murdered, banished, enslaved, despised, and reproached: and they will be ready to think that he has cast them off, and to fear that his name and truth will be eventually dishonoured; whilst they continually hear the blasphemies and triumphs of his enemies. But in all our afflictions, especially in our sufferings for the sake of scriptural Christianity, we should complain unto the Lord, and "exercise ourselves to have a conscience void of offence:" we should be careful not to seek relief by sinful compliances; and should continually meditate on the power, truth, purity, and knowledge of our heart-searching God. If our heart turn back from him, or our steps decline from his way, he knows it, and will discover it to others. But if we are faithful to our engagements, and are persecuted for righteousness' sake, we are and shall be safe and happy.—Scott.

PSALM XLV. TITLE.—The word "Shoshannim" signifies lilies, and is several times so rendered in Canticles: as used, however, in the titles of a few psalms, it is generally understood to mean an instrument of six strings.—This psalm is entitled, "A song of loves;" and it evidently describes the mutual love, which subsists between Christ and his church. In many respects it resembles the Song of Solomon; and it treats of this spiritual union under the allusion of a marriage. Most expositors maintain that it was written on Solomon's marriage with Pharaoh's daughter; but a great part of it is wholly inapplicable to that transaction: nor is there sufficient ground to support the decided opinion, that this was so much as the occasion of its being written, or that David composed it. The latter is indeed probable; but it is entirely a prophecy of Christ, and is quoted as such by the apostle.—Scott.

LOVELINESS OF THE KING.—Ver. 2. "Thou art fairer than the children of men," than any of them. He proposed, ver. 1, to speak of the king, but immediately directs his speech to him. They that have an admiration and affection for Christ, love to go to him and tell him so. Thus we must profess our faith, that we see his beauty; and our love, that we are pleased with it; "Thou art fair," thou art "fairer than the children of men." Note, Jesus Christ is in himself, and in the eyes of all believers, more amiable and lovely than the children of men. The beauties of the Lord Jesus, as God, as Mediator, far surpass those honourable women: upon thy right hand did stand the queen in gold of Ophir.

10 Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house;

11 So shall the king greatly desire thy beauty: for he is [q]thy Lord; and [r]worship thou him.

12 And [s]the daughter of Tyre[3] shall be there with a gift; even the rich among the people shall entreat thy [t]favour.

13 The king's daughter is [u]all glorious within: [x]her clothing is of wrought gold.

14 She shall be brought unto the king in raiment of needlework; the virgins her companions that follow her shall be brought unto thee.

15 With gladness and rejoicing shall they be brought: they shall enter into the king's palace.

16 [z]Instead of thy fathers shall be [a]thy children, whom thou mayest make [b]princes in all the earth.

17 I will make thy name to be remembered in all generations: therefore shall the people praise thee for ever and ever.

GOD is [d]our refuge and strength, [e]a very present help in trouble.

2 Therefore [f]will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the [†]midst of the sea;

3 Though [1]the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though [k]the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Selah.

4 There is [l]a river,[1] the streams whereof shall make glad [m]the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the most High.

5 God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved: God shall help her, [‡]and that right early.

6 The heathen raged, [s]the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice, [t]the earth melted.

7 The LORD of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is [§]our refuge. Selah.

8 [x]Come, behold the works of the LORD, what desolations he hath made in the earth.

9 [z]He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot[2] in the fire.

10 Be still, and [d]know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.

11 The LORD of hosts is with us; [f]the God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah.

PSALM XLVII.

The nations are exhorted cheerfully to entertain the kingdom of Christ.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm [*]for the sons of Korah.

O CLAP your hands, all ye people; [b]shout unto God with the voice of triumph.

2 For the LORD most high is terrible; he is a great King over all the earth.

3 He shall [c]subdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet.

4 He shall choose our inheritance for us, [h]the excellency of Jacob[1] whom he loved. Selah.

5 [k]God is gone up with a shout, the LORD with [m]the sound of a trumpet.

6 Sing praises to God, sing praises: sing praises unto our King, sing praises.

7 For God is [p]the King of all the earth: sing ye praises [†]with understanding.

8 [r]God reigneth over the heathen: God sitteth upon [s]the throne of his holiness.

9 [‡]The princes of the people are gathered together, even the people of the God of Abraham: for the shields of the earth belong unto God: he is greatly exalted.

PSALM XLVIII.

The ornaments and privileges of the Church.

A [a]Song and Psalm [*]for the sons of Korah.

[b]GREAT is the LORD, and [c]greatly to be praised [d]in the city of our God, in [e]the mountain of his holiness.[1]

2 [f]Beautiful for situation, [g]the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, [h]on the sides of the north, [i]the city of the great King.

3 God is known in her palaces for a refuge.

4 For, lo, the kings were assembled, they passed by together.

5 They saw it, and so they marvelled; [m]they were troubled, and hasted away.

6 Fear took hold upon them there, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

7 Thou [p]breakest the [q]ships of Tarshish[2] [r]with an east wind.

8 As we have heard, so have we seen in [t]the city of the LORD of hosts, in the city of our God: [u]God will establish it for ever. Selah.

9 We have [x]thought of [y]thy lovingkindness, O God, [z]in the midst of thy temple.

10 [a]According to thy name, O God, so is thy praise unto the ends of the earth: [b]thy right hand is full of righteousness.

11 Let mount Zion rejoice, let [c]the daughters of Judah be glad, because of thy judgments.

12 [e]Walk about Zion, and go round about her: [f]tell the towers thereof.

of human nature in general, and those which the most amiable and excellent of the children of men are endowed with; there is more in Christ to engage our love, than there is or can be in any creature. Our beloved is more than another beloved. The beauties of this lower world, and its charms, are in danger of drawing away our hearts from Christ, and therefore we are concerned to understand how much he excels them all, and how much more worthy he is of our love.—Henry.

HIS RETINUE.—Ver. 9—11. The King, now seated in majesty and glory on his throne, is next represented as surrounded with a splendid train. Among other honourable women, the daughters of kings are mentioned, who may be supposed to have submitted to his authority, and put themselves under his protection; and who would deem it an honour for their daughters to wait, in his court, around his queen; while she, arrayed in the costliest robes, stood at his right hand, as a bride adorned for her nuptials. By "the queen," the collective body of believers seems to be intended, who, clothed in the righteousness, enriched by the bounty, and adorned by the graces of the Spirit of Christ, adhered to him in singleness of affection and fidelity, and are admitted to the most endeared union and communion.

HIS NUPTIALS.—Ver. 13—15. The relation in which the believer stands to the Lord, comprises in it every tie and affection; and the church is called spouse, sister, or daughter, indiscriminately: or the title "spouse," or "bride," may refer to the Son of God, that of "daughter" to the Father. Her glory and beauty are inward and spiritual: and her adorning is most precious; as she is arrayed with the righteousness which Christ wrought out in human nature for her justification, and with the beauties of a holy conversation by the operation of the Spirit of God; who works by the labours of ministers, and by all the means, which others diligently use, to promote the sanctification of themselves and of their brethren.—Scott.

PSALM XLVI.—This psalm encourages us to hope and trust in God, and his power and providence, and gracious presence, with his church, in the worst of times, and directs us to give him the glory of what he has done for us, and what he will do: probably, it was penned upon occasion of David's victories over the neighbouring nations, 2 Sam. viii. and the rest which God gave him from all his enemies round about. We are here taught 1. To take comfort in God, when things look very black and threatening, ver. 1—5. 2. To mention, to his praise, the great things he has wrought for his church against its enemies, ver. 6—9. 3. To assure ourselves that God, who has glorified his own name, will glorify it yet again, and to comfort ourselves with that, ver. 10, 11. We may, in singing it, apply it, either to our spiritual enemies, and the encouragement we have to hope, that through Christ, we shall be more than conquerors over them, or to the public enemies of Christ's kingdom in the world, and their threatening insults, endeavouring to preserve a holy security and serenity of mind, when they seem most formidable. It is said of Luther, that, when he heard any discouraging news, he would say, Come, let us sing the xlvith psalm.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—They who have received Jesus Christ as their Lord and Saviour, and live in grateful obedience to him, make the power, wisdom, truth, and love of God, their refuge and strength; and in every urgent danger and trouble, they will find him a ready and a present help. If our faith were as strong as our security is good, we need fear no combination of enemies, no revolutions in kingdoms, and no convulsions in nature; but in the most tremendous dangers, might triumph in the fullest assurance of security and victory. Were we literally to behold the deep-rooted mountains torn from their foundations, and cast into the ocean, whilst its impetuous waves overflowed the banks and deluged the earth; we should not only be safe, but might be happy, if, in communion with God, we drank of the river of divine consolations, which he hath communicated to his holy church on earth, as an earnest of heavenly joys. Let us then pray for increase of faith, and be careful to lay up our treasures in heaven: thus when the earth and all its works shall be burnt up, we shall have nothing to fear, or to lose. Happy are they, in every case, who are enrolled citizens of the holy city of our God, in which he dwells as a father, a defender, and a comforter of his people. While the heathen rage, their faith and patience will indeed be tried, yet He will utter his voice, their enemies will perish, and they shall triumph in praise.—Scott.

PSALM XLVII. DIVINE PROTECTION.—Ver. 1—3. This psalm is generally ascribed to David, though his name is not affixed to it: and it is thought to have been composed when vast multitudes were assembled, to attend on the removal of the ark to the tabernacle on Mount Zion. And as the ark was a type of Christ, the psalm has been applied to the ascension, after his humiliation on earth, to the right hand of God in heaven. Ver. 8, 9. The dominion of that God, who dwelt in the holy place, by the ark, the symbol of his presence, above the mercy-seat, over the nations of the earth, as here mentioned, seems a clear intimation of the calling of the Gentiles into the church, in consequence of Christ's ascension, Rom. xv. 12. All the principal persons from the several tribes of Israel, "the people of the God of Abraham," assembled to remove the ark, leaving the protection of their houses and families unto God, who accordingly was the shield of the land. Thus when princes and rulers join themselves to the Lord Jesus, and use their authority and influence for the benefit of the church; God is

To the chief Musician, A Psalm *for the sons of Korah.

2 Both low and high, rich and poor, together.

6 They that [n]trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches;

7 None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor [p]give to God a ransom for him;

8 (For [q]the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth for ever:)

9 [r]That he should still live for ever, and not *see corruption.

12 Nevertheless, man being in *honour abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish.

13 This their way is [c]their folly; yet their posterity †approve their sayings. Selah.

14 [d]Like sheep[2] [e]they are laid in the grave; [f]death shall feed on them; and [g]the upright shall have dominion over them in [h]the morning; and [i]their *beauty shall consume †in the grave, from their dwelling.

15 But [k]God will redeem my soul from the ‡power of the [§]grave: for he shall receive me. Selah.

16 Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, when the glory of his house is increased;

17 For when he dieth [o]he shall carry nothing away: [p]his glory shall not descend after him.

18 Though [l]while he lived he [q]blessed his soul: and men will praise thee, when thou doest well to thyself.

The majesty of God in the church, 1. His order to gather saints, 5. The pleasure of God is not in ceremonies, 7; but in sincerity of obedience, 14.

A Psalm of *Asaph.

THE mighty God, even the LORD, [c]hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.

2 *Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.

3 [b]Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: [k]a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.

4 He shall call to the heavens[1] from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people.

Some, however, interpret the last clause, to mean the rulers themselves; who, belonging to God, having their authority from him, and using it according to his command, become the shields of their people; and thus by their means God is greatly exalted and honoured among men. —Scott.

PSALM XLVIII. OCCASION.—Ver. 1. Many think that this psalm was composed on account of the deliverance of Jerusalem from the power and rage of Sennacherib: but others are of opinion, that it is more exactly descriptive of the invasion of the land, during the reign of Jehoshaphat, and the extraordinary triumph of him and his subjects over the kings who had confederated against him. It is, however, evident that it was occasioned by some remarkable interposition of God, in rescuing "the mountain of his holiness" from powerful assailants.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The beauty and glory of God's church, which should be, and will evidently prove, "the joy of the whole earth," are derived from his presence and love, and are the reflection of his uncreated excellencies. Wherever there are princes or people who make God their refuge, he will be known among them as such: for he will never disappoint the expectation of any who hope in his word. But, when kings and nations, however numerous and potent, confederate against his church, sudden terror and destruction will be their portion. We have heard and read of the works of God for Israel of old; and in the establishment of the gospel upon the ruins of idolatry: and if we wait for his loving kindness in his holy temple, by persevering faith and prayer, we shall experience, in our measure, the same powerful supports and deliverances: and still more glorious things shall at length be accomplished, in order to establish the church throughout the whole earth. The Lord will always act consistently with those glorious perfections, which, by means of his word, are made known and celebrated to the ends of the earth: the salvation of his people will be accompanied with righteous vengeance on his enemies; but every true believer may rejoice because of his Judgments.—Scott.

PSALM XLIX. ITS NATURE.—This psalm is a sermon, and so is the next. In most of the psalms, we have the penman praying or praising; in these, we have him preaching; and it is our duty, in singing psalms, to teach and admonish ourselves and one another. The scope and design of this discourse is, to convince the men of this world of their sin and folly in setting their hearts upon the things of this world, and so to persuade them to seek the things of a better world; as also to comfort the people of God, in reference to [illegible], and the grief that arises from the prosperity of the wicked.

FOLLY OF THE WORLDLING.—Ver. 6—14. In these verses we have, 1. A description of the spirit and way of worldly people, whose portion is in this life, Ps. xvii. 14; xlix. 6, 11. It is taken for granted that they have wealth, and a multitude of riches, ver. 6, houses and lands of inheritance, which they call their own, ver. 11. God often gives abundance of the good things of this world to bad men, who live in contempt of him, and rebellion against him—by which it appears that they are not the best things in themselves, for then God would give most of them to his best friends; and that they are not the best things for us, for then they would not have so much of them, who, being marked for ruin, are to be ripened for it by their prosperity, Prov. i. 32. A man may have abundance of the wealth of this world, and be made better by it, may thereby have his heart enlarged in love, and thankfulness, and obedience, and may do that good with it which will be fruit abounding to his account; and therefore it is not men's having riches that denominates them worldly, but their setting their hearts upon them as the best things.

DEATH—THE GREAT LEVELLER.—Ver. 17. "When he dies," it is taken for granted that he goes into another world himself, but "he shall carry nothing away with him" of all that which he has been so long heaping up. The greatest and wealthiest cannot therefore be the happiest, because they are never the better for their living in this world; as they came naked into it, they shall go naked out of it. But those have something to show in the other world, for their living in this world, who can say, through grace, that though they came corrupt, and sinful, and spiritually naked, into it, they go renewed, and sanctified, and well-clothed with the righteousness of Christ, out of it. In the other world they will be infinitely the worse for all their abuses of the wealth and prosperity they enjoyed in this world, ver. 19, "The soul shall go to the generation of his fathers," his worldly-wicked fathers, whose sayings he approved, and whose steps he trod in, his fathers who would not hearken to the word of God, Zech. i. 4. He shall go to be there where they are that shall never see light, shall never have the least glimpse of comfort and joy, being condemned to utter darkness. Be not afraid then of the pomp and power of wicked people; for the end of the man that is in honour, if he be not wise and good, will be miserable; if he understand not, he is to be pitied rather than envied. A fool, a wicked man, in honour, is really as despicable an animal as any under the sun; he is "like the beasts that perish."—Henry.

PSALM L.—Title.—"Hezekiah commanded the Levites to sing praises unto the Lord with the words of David, and of Asaph the seer." Hence it appears that Asaph was a prophet, and wrote some psalms, and [illegible] however, are of [illegible]

David prayeth for remission of sins, whereof he maketh a deep confession, 1; he prayeth for sanctification, 6. God delighteth not in sacrifice, but in sincerity, 16. David prayeth for the church, 18.

Levite, who was one of the chief singers in the days of David; that he lived at a later period; and that it is not unlikely he was contemporary with Hezekiah, and referred in this psalm to the hypocrisy of the Jews in general, even during Hezekiah's reformation. But, at whatever time the psalm was composed, the instructions contained in it are of general importance and utility.—It is a most sublime poem, which is generally supposed to predict the coming of Christ, the abolition of the Mosaic dispensation, and the introduction of Christianity; with the condemnation of the Jews, especially of the Scribes and Pharisees, for rejecting it. But the judgment executed upon Jerusalem prefigured the awful proceedings and consequences of the general judgment; and the Scribes and Pharisees are the parents of a numerous progeny of superstitious, formal, and hypocritical professors and teachers of Christianity, who will be condemned at that solemn day. Ver. 4—6. All the inhabitants of heaven, as well as of earth, shall be summoned to witness the proceedings of their omnipotent Sovereign; and they will all concur in declaring, that his decisions are perfectly wise and righteous.—The whole human race, indeed, must appear in judgment; yet the professed worshippers of God, who have his oracles and ordinances among them, are chiefly spoken of in all the descriptions given us in Scripture of that solemn season: because these descriptions were especially given for their instruction, warning, or encouragement.—Scott.

Obedience better than Sacrifice.—Ver. 9—15. God here shows them, 1. That he did not need their sacrifices; what occasion had He for their bullocks and goats, who has the command of all "the beasts of the forest," and the "cattle upon a thousand hills," has an incontestable propriety in them, and dominion over them, has them all always under his eye, and within his reach, and can make what use he pleases of them? they all wait on him, and are all at his disposal, Ps. civ. 27—29. 2. That he could not be benefited by their sacrifices. Their goodness, of this kind, could not possibly extend unto him, nor, if they were in this matter righteous, was he the better, ver. 13, "Will I eat the flesh of bulls?" It is as absurd to think that their sacrifices could, of themselves, and by virtue of any innate excellency in them, add any pleasure or praise to God, as it would be to imagine that an infinite Spirit could be supported by meat and drink, as our bodies are. It is said, indeed, of the demons whom the Gentiles worshipped, that they did "eat the fat of their sacrifices, and drink the wine of their drink-offerings," Deut. xxxii. 38; they regaled themselves in the homage they robbed the true God of; but will the great Jehovah be thus entertained? No, "to obey is better than sacrifice," and to love God and our neighbour, "better than all burnt-offerings," so much better, that God, by his prophets, often told them that their sacrifices were not only not acceptable, but abominable, to him, while they lived in sin; instead of pleasing him, he looked upon them as a mockery, and therefore an affront and provocation to him; see Prov. xv. 8; Isa. i. 11, &c.; lxvi. 3.; Jer. vi. 20; Amos. v. 21. They are therefore here warned not to rest in these performances; but to conduct themselves, in all other instances, toward God as their God.—Henry.

Psalm LI. David's Penitence.—When Nathan had delivered his message, we may suppose that David retired to his chamber full of confusion, remorse, and anguish; and there poured forth his soul before God in unreserved confessions and fervent prayers. And, considering his rank, his age, and a variety of circumstances relating to his family, to persons disaffected to his government, and to his character among the surrounding nations; it might have been thought expedient for him to have been satisfied with these secret acts of contrition and devotion; with humbling himself before God by fasting and prayer; and with "bringing forth fruits meet for repentance;" especially as God had already remitted the sentence of temporal death, to which the law condemned him. But he viewed the subject in another light, when brought to reflect seriously on his conduct, and its probable consequences. The honour of God and of true religion was deeply concerned, and with it the best interests of vast multitudes: nor did there appear any other way, in which the bad effects of his crimes could be so thoroughly prevented, as by his publicly taking the deepest shame to himself, for having acted directly contrary to that holy religion which he professed. Whatever might be the consequences to himself and his reputation, (zeal for the glory of God and love to his people having now revived, and gained the ascendancy in his heart, united with deep self-abhorrence, and a kind of indignation against himself;) he seems to have resolved without delay, to publish to his family, his subjects, the world at large, and all future generations, the judgment which, in the sight of God, he now entertained of his late behaviour, in the substance of his secret confessions and supplications; and the way in which, with deep anguish and distress, he sought forgiveness and salvation. He therefore not only composed this psalm for his private use, or to show his friends, or leave among his writings; but he gave it to the chief musician, that it might form a part of the public psalmody at the tabernacle, and in consequence be circulated through all the land, and among other nations; and continue in the church, with his other sacred poems, for the instruction and warning of mankind in all future ages.—Scott.

Ingratitude, malice, and falsehood are ingredients that must always meet in the composition of a traitor.—HORNE.

9 Destroy, O LORD, and divide their tongues: for I have seen violence and strife in the city.

10 Day and night they go about it upon the walls thereof: mischief also and sorrow are in the midst of it.

11 [s]Wickedness is in the midst thereof: [t]deceit and guile depart not from her streets.

12 For [u]it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it:[2] neither was it he that hated me, that did [x]magnify himself against me; then I would have hid myself from him:

13 But it was thou, [†]a man mine equal, my guide, and mine acquaintance.

15 [c]Let death seize upon them, and [d]let them go down quick into [1]hell: for wickedness is in their dwellings, and among them.

16 As for me, [e]I will call upon God; and the LORD shall save me.

17 Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice.

18 He hath delivered my soul in peace from the battle that was against me: for there were many with me.

19 God shall [k]hear and afflict them, even [l]he that abideth of old. Selah. *Because they have [m]no changes, therefore they fear not God.[3]

21 [p]The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but [q]war was in his heart: his words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords.

22 Cast thy [‡]burden upon the LORD, and he shall sustain thee: he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved.

23 But thou, O God, [r]shalt bring them down into the pit of destruction: [3]bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days; but I will trust in thee.

PSALM LVI.

David, praying to God in confidence of his word, complaineth of his enemies, 1. He professeth his confidence in God's word, and promiseth to praise him, 9.

To the chief Musician upon Jonath-elemrechokim,[1] *Michtam of David, [s]when the Philistines took him in Gath.

are often, not only as a sharp razor, but more devouring than the sword; and numbers in all ages have loved evil more than good: and lies more than truth, equity, and love. But it is wonderful "that any man should value himself for being able to do mischief, when God esteemeth it his glory to do good:" and his goodness will increase the condemnation of all those, who are emboldened by it in committing iniquity: but it forms the security of those who depend on it, and copy it as their example.—The believer foresees that God will cast down, sweep away, eradicate, and extirpate from the earth, and destroy for ever in hell, those who do not make him their strength, but idolize their wealth and prosperity, and who encourage themselves in wickedness: and no criminals will perish with greater exultation to the righteous, than hardened persecutors. Their success is like the luxuriant growth of some poisonous plant, which it is a public service to destroy. But the righteous man is a fruitful olive-tree, planted in a good soil: he trusts in the everlasting mercy of God, and delights in his ordinances; and, however he may be now afflicted, (and thus conformed to the suffering Redeemer,) he will wait on the name of the Lord, and will praise him for ever. In expectation of this felicity, let us begin the work of heaven on earth; praying continually that we may only witness, but never share, the perdition of the ungodly.—Scott.

PSALM LIII. TITLE.—This psalm differs very little from the fourteenth; and it is not known, nor has it been conjectured with much probability, on what account, or for what reason, the same sentiments are repeated in almost the same words. The variations, however, are sufficient to show, that the psalm in one place was intentionally altered from that in the other: and it is probable, from some change in the psalmist's circumstances, or some events which had occurred subsequent to its first publication.—The word Malahath seems to denote a hollow instrument of music, a flute or pipe: and Maschil, or instructing, implies the scope of it, viz.: an instruction or warning against impiety towards God, and rebellion against his anointed king.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—They who go back from a religious profession generally become most filthy, or most malicious persecutors, who of all other sinners are most infatuated: for God hath despised, and will confound and destroy them; as he hath often scattered the bones of powerful armies, who have encamped against his church.—A guilty conscience and a dread of vengeance frequently fill the enemies of God with fears, where nothing formidable can be perceived; but at length their worst terrors will be awfully realized: and as the deliverance and prosperity of the church on earth will be attended with the ruin of all anti-christian oppressors; so the internal joys of the redeemed will be attended with everlasting shame and misery of all their impenitent oppressors.—Scott.

PSALM LIV.—The key of this psalm hangs at the door, for the title tells us upon what occasion it was penned—when the inhabitants of Ziph, men of Judah, (types of Judas the traitor,) betrayed David to Saul, by informing him where he was, and putting him in a way how to seize him. This they did twice, 1 Sam. xxiii. 19; xxvi. 1; and it is upon record, to their everlasting infamy. The psalm is sweet; the former part of it, perhaps, was meditated when he was in his distress, and put into writing when the danger was over, with the addition of the two last verses, which speak his thankfulness for the deliverance, which yet might be written in faith, even then when he was in the midst of his fright. Here, 1. He complains to God of the malice of his enemies, and prays for help against them, ver. 1—3. 2. He comforts himself with an assurance of the divine favour and protection, and that, in due time, his enemies should be confounded, and he delivered, ver. 4—7. What time we are in distress, we may comfortably sing this psalm.—Henry.

PSALM LV. DAVID'S DISQUIETUDES.—Ver. 4, 5. In general, David showed the firmest courage in the most extreme dangers; but the unnatural rebellion of Absalom, which he knew to be the correction of his sin in the matter of Uriah, quite unmanned him, and he was filled with terror and consternation. Nay, he was become so weary of the treachery and ingratitude of men, and of the cares and disappointments of his high station; that he longed to have done with society, and to hide himself in some desert from the fury and fickleness of his people. He wished, in his haste, for the wings of the harmless dove, that he might "fly away and be at rest;" and his varied expressions, and the representation of the popular commotion as a violent tempest, show the vehement agitation of his mind. Yet in his more collected moments he could not approve of such a wish; he was not at liberty to leave his useful station; he could find no rest any where but in God, with whom he might commune in the midst of society; and he must wait for his more perfect rest, till he had fully served his generation.—"These words describe the state of David's mind, when he went over the brook Cedron, and up mount Olivet, 'weeping as he went,' and expecting speedily to be cut off: they describe the agony of the Son of David, when he likewise went over the same brook Cedron, at the time of his passion, when his 'soul was sore amazed, and very heavy,' 'and exceeding sorrowful, even unto death.'"—Scott.

HIS REMEDY.—Ver. 22. "'Cast thy burthen upon the Lord,' whoever thou art, that art burthened, and whatever the burthen is." Care is a burthen, it makes the heart stoop, Prov. xii. 25; we must cast it upon God by faith and prayer, commit [illegible] and works to him; let him do as seemeth him good, and he will be [illegible]

David reproveth wicked judges, 1; describeth the nature of the wicked, 3; and devoteth them to God's judgments, 6, whereat the righteous shall rejoice, 10.

To the chief Musician, *Al-taschith, Michtam of David.

DO ye indeed speak righteousness, O congregation? do ye judge uprightly, [c]O ye sons of men?

2 Yea, [d]in heart ye work wickedness; ye weigh the violence of your hands in the earth.

3 The wicked are estranged from the womb: they go astray [†]as soon as they be born, speaking lies.

4 Their [g]poison is [‡]like the poison of a [h]serpent; they are like [i]the deaf [§]adder that stoppeth her ear;[1]

8 As a snail which melteth, let every one of them pass away: like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not see the sun.

9 Before your pots can feel the thorns, he shall take them away [q]as with a whirlwind, *both living, and in his wrath.

10 [r]The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance; he shall [s]wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.[2]

11 So that a man shall say, [t]Verily there is [†]a reward for the righteous: [u]verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth.

PSALM LIX.

David prayeth to be delivered from his enemies, 1; he complaineth of their cruelty, 6; he trusteth in God, 8; he prayeth against them, and praiseth God, 11.

To the chief Musician, *Al-taschith, Michtam of David; [a]when Saul sent, and they watched the house to kill him.

[b]DELIVER me from mine enemies, O my God; [†]defend me from them that rise up against me.

2 Deliver me from the workers of iniquity, and save me from bloody men.

3 For, lo, they lie in wait for my soul: [c]the mighty are gathered against me; [f]not for my transgression, nor for my sin, O LORD.

4 They run and prepare themselves without my fault: [h]awake to [‡]help me, and behold.

5 Thou therefore, O LORD God of hosts, the God of Israel, awake to visit all the heathen: be not merciful to any wicked transgressors. Selah.

our burthen upon God, is, to stay ourselves on his providence and promise, and to be very easy in the assurance that all shall work for good. If we do so, it is promised, 1. That he will sustain us, both support and supply us; will himself carry us in the arms of his power, as the nurse carries the sucking child, will strengthen our spirits so by his Spirit, as that they shall sustain the infirmity. He has not promised to free us immediately from that trouble which gives rise to our cares and fears; but he will provide that we be not tempted above what we are able, and that we shall be able, according as we are tempted. 2. That he will never suffer the righteous to be moved, to be so shaken by any troubles, as to quit either their duty to God, or their comfort in him. However, he will not suffer them to be moved for ever; (as some read it;) though they fall, they shall not be utterly cast down.—Henry.

PSALM LVI. TITLE—"JONATH-ELEM-RECHOKIM," signifies, the silent dove of distant places, or in a far country. David had been harmless as a dove, in the midst of Saul's persecutions: he was silent and patient under oppression: he was now driven, like a timorous dove, to a distance from his home, and from the ordinances of God: and when exposed to extreme danger from the Philistines, set on perhaps by the relations of Goliath, he bore all patiently, and attempted no revenge. In this he typified the harmless, suffering, and patient Jesus.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Meditation on the power of the Most High, engaged by his faithful promise for the protection of his people, will encourage us to say with boldness, "The Lord is my helper, I will not fear what man can do unto me."—The believer's soul, body, character, and interest, are all safe under the divine protection: and when he prays earnestly, his enemies will be driven back and disappointed. Men may for a time prosper in, and by, iniquity; but God in his anger will soon cast them down: and our only security lies in escaping from iniquity.—The Lord graciously notes and orders the removals of his people; whilst they keep in the path of duty, they cannot be driven from his gracious presence; and their tears of godly sorrow, and those which are extorted by persecution, or sympathy with the sufferings of others, will be reserved to be jewels in the crown of glory. Let us then be careful to discharge our own obligations.—General vows are upon us as Christians, which have been ratified at baptism and the Lord's supper; and we have made promises and engagements in seasons of trouble and distress. Let us be careful to perform them when delivered; and then we may leave all the rest with the Lord: and if his grace have delivered our souls from the death of sin; he will deliver our feet from falling, and bring us to heaven, to walk before him for ever "in the light of the living," in the bright world of perfect knowledge, love, purity and felicity.—Scott.

PSALM LVII. TITLE—ALTASCHITH, or Thou shalt not destroy. Destroy not. This may intimate, that David trusted, that the Lord would not permit him to be destroyed, though closely pursued by Saul. Some think that the word refers to the restriction David laid on his officers, not to destroy Saul.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—If we have fled from the wrath to come, unto Jesus Christ, we are interested in all his merits, grace, and victories; and in all the precious promises and glorious perfections of our God: and he, that hath performed all things requisite to the salvation of his people, will in answer to our prayers perform all things for us, and in us, which are needful to our enjoyment of it. It is true that the sons of men, among whom we live, are often savage as lions, and fierce as the flaming fire: their teeth seem to be spears and arrows, and their slanderous tongues, sharp swords: and Satan, a still more subtile, powerful, and cruel enemy, would swallow us up. But, notwithstanding their snares and pits, their stratagems, and assaults, we are safe, if we belong to the Lord. The Redeemer was far more exposed to their rage and malice, and by their wicked hands was crucified and slain: yet the Lord sent from heaven, and raised him from the dead, and advanced him to his glorious throne: and he will, through him, send forth his mercy and truth, and graciously accomplish his promises; he will rescue our souls from all tempters and persecutors; and angels shall join with men in beholding and celebrating his glory in our salvation. Let us then seek to have our hearts fixed on him, and prepared for his spiritual worship; to celebrate the praises of his boundless mercy and unfailing faithfulness, and to "glorify him with body and spirit, which are his."—Scott.

PSALM LVIII. ITS OCCASION.—It is the probable conjecture of some, (Amyraldus particularly,) that before Saul began to persecute David by force of arms, and raised the militia to seize him, he formed a process against him by course of law, upon which he was condemned unheard, and attainted as a traiter by the great council, or supreme court of judicature, and then proclaimed qui caput gerit lupinum—an outlawed wolf, whom any man might kill, and no man might protect. The elders, in order to curry favour with Saul, having passed this bill of attainder, it is supposed that David penned this psalm on the occasion. 1. He describes their sin, and aggravates that, ver. 1—5. 2. He imprecates and foretells their ruin, and the judgments which the righteous God would bring upon them for their injustice, ver. 6—9. Which would redound, 1. To the comfort of the 6 They return at evening: they make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city.

7 Behold, they belch out with their mouth: swords are in their lips: for who, say they, doth hear?

8 But [r]thou, O LORD, shalt laugh at them; thou shalt have all [s]the heathen in derision.

9 Because of his strength will I wait upon thee: for God is my [t]defence.

10 The God of my mercy shall prevent me:[1] God shall let me see my desire upon mine [1]enemies.

11 [u]Slay them not, lest my people forget: [v]scatter them by thy power; and bring them down, O LORD our shield.

12 [d]For the sin of their mouth and the words of their lips, let them even be taken in their pride: and for cursing and lying which they speak.

13 [g]Consume them in wrath, consume them, that they may not be: and let them know that God ruleth in Jacob unto the ends of the earth. Selah.

14 And [1]at evening let them return: and let them make a noise like a dog,[2] and go round about the city.

15 Let them [k]wander up and down *for meat, and [†]grudge [1]if they be not satisfied.

16 But [m]I will sing of thy power; yea, I will sing aloud of thy mercy in the morning: [p]for thou hast been my defence and refuge in the day of my trouble.

17 Unto thee, O my strength, will I sing: for God is my defence, and the God of my mercy.

PSALM LX.

David complaining to God of former judgments, 1, now, upon better hope, prayeth for deliverance, 4. Comforting himself in God's promises, he craveth that help whereon he trusteth, 6.

O GOD, [d]thou hast cast us off, [e]thou hast [†]scattered us, thou hast been displeased; [f]O turn thyself to us again.

2 Thou hast [g]made the earth to tremble; thou hast broken it: heal the breaches thereof; for it shaketh.

3 Thou hast shewed thy people hard things: thou hast made us [1]to drink the wine of astonishment.[1]

4 Thou hast given [m]a banner to them that feared thee, that it may be displayed [n]because of the truth. Selah.

5 [o]That thy beloved may be delivered; [p]save with thy right hand, [q]and hear me.

saints, ver. 10. 2. To the glory of God, ver. 11. Sin appears here both exceeding sinful and exceeding dangerous, and God a just Avenger of wrong, with which we should be affected in singing this psalm.

REWARD FOR THE RIGHTEOUS.—Ver. 11. "Verily, there is a reward for the righteous." Any man may draw this inference from such providences, and many a man shall, who, before, denied even these plain truths, or doubted of them. Some shall have this confession extorted from them, others shall have their minds so changed, that they shall willingly own it, and thank God, who has given them to see it, and see it with satisfaction, That God is, and, That he is the bountiful Rewarder of his saints and servants; "Verily," (however it be, so it may be read,) "there is a fruit to the righteous;" whatever damage a man may sustain, whatever hazard he may run, and whatever hardship he may undergo for his religion, he shall not only be no loser by it, but an unspeakable gainer in the issue. Even in this world there is a reward for the righteous, they shall be recompensed in the earth.—Henry.

PSALM LIX. ITS NATURE.—This psalm is of the same nature and scope with six or seven foregoing psalms; they are all filled with David's complaints of the malice of his enemies, and of their cursed and cruel designs against him; his prayers and prophecies against them; and his comfort and confidence in God as his God. The first is the language of nature, and may be allowed; the second of a prophetical spirit, looking forward to Christ and the enemies of his kingdom, and therefore not to be drawn into a precedent; the third of grace and a most holy faith, which ought to be imitated by every one of us. In this psalm, 1. He prays to God to defend and deliver him from his enemies, representing them as very bad men, barbarous, malicious, and atheistical, ver. 1—7. 2. He foresees and foretells the destruction of his enemies, which he would give to God the glory of ver. 8—17. As far as it appears that any of the particular enemies of God's people fall under these characters, we may, in singing this psalm, read their doom, and foresee their ruin.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When we suffer for well-doing, we are conformed to our Redeemer, and have an evidence of our acceptance with God. We should indeed greatly fear suffering as "evil-doers, or busy-bodies in other men's matters;" but we ought not to be either afraid or ashamed of the hatred of the workers of iniquity, when "they prepare themselves, and are gathered together against us, without our fault," They may be both mighty and bloody; their words may be as swords, and their actions may correspond with them. In vain did Saul and his mighty men seek the life of David: they could not prevent his advancement to the throne, but they occasioned their own ignominy and ruin. Nor could the rulers of the Jews, by crucifying Jesus, prevent his glorification; but they thus hastened their own destruction; and neither tempters nor persecutors can succeed any better in lying in wait for the soul of the believer. The serpent and his seed bruised the heel of the Redeemer, but he will crush their head. "Because of the LORD's strength," his servants may then confidently wait on him; and if we trust in him as the God of our mercy, and have recourse to him in every temptation and tribulation, he will assuredly be our defence against all those that rise up against us. In proportion as we are conscious that we are not "wicked transgressors" who continue impenitent in known sin, we may be satisfied that our cause is of God.—The predictions which we read concerning the vengeance to be executed on all the implacable enemies of Christ and his kingdom, and upon all the impenitent and unbelieving, and the accomplishment of many of them in this present world, should impress our minds with an awe of the Divine majesty and purity, and a dread of all iniquity.—The destruction of Jerusalem, and the state of the Jewish nation for much above seventeen hundred years, when viewed in connection with that awful imprecation upon themselves and their children, which accompanied their malice and lying testimony against Christ; and their cry, "Crucify him, crucify him," should make us tremble at the thought of lies and imprecations, which are the offspring of pride and hatred, and still more lest we should at last be found despisers or abusers of his gospel.—Scott.

PSALM LX. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Blessed be God's name, "he hath given a banner" in the cross of Christ, to those that fear his name; that resorting thither, and receiving mercy, they may enlist under him who now fills the mediatorial throne, and so wage successful war against the enemies of their souls. O may this banner be everywhere displayed, that all nations may embrace the truth, and experience the faithfulness of God to his promises!—He who exalted the Saviour by his own right hand, to the throne of glory, will hear his intercession for all who pray in his name, and who are beloved for his sake; and save them also by his almighty power. He who is in Christ a new creature may rejoice in all the precious promises, which God hath "spoken in his holiness," and by his Holy One; and may consider the whole ransomed inheritance as his own reversion; and the present privileges to which he is called, and the sanctifying and comforting influences of the Spirit which he experiences are the sure earnests of heavenly glory. If Christ be our's, all things are our's; mercy, grace, peace, wisdom, righteousness, strength, and victory; life and death, angels and men, earth and heaven, are our's; and all things shall, in one way or other, subserve our eternal good. We are not yet, however, made complete conquerors; and no true believer will abuse these truths,

David's thirst for God, 1; his manner of blessing God, 4; his confidence of his enemies' destruction, and his own safety, 9.

A Psalm of David, [a]when he was in the wilderness of Judah.[1]

O GOD, [b]thou art my God; [c]early will I seek thee: [d]my soul thirsteth for thee, [e]my flesh longeth for thee, [f]in a *dry and thirsty land where no water is;

2 To see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary.

3 Because thy lovingkindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee.

4 Thus will I bless thee while I live: [m]I will lift up my hands in thy name.

5 [n]My soul shall be satisfied as with †marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips:

6 When I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches.

7 [q]Because thou hast been my help, therefore [r]in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice.

8 My soul followeth hard after thee: [t]thy right hand upholdeth me.

9 But those that seek my soul, to destroy it, shall [x]go into the lower parts of the earth.[2]

10 They shall ‡fall by the sword: they shall be [y]a portion for foxes.

11 But [z]the king shall rejoice in God; every one that [a]sweareth by him shall glory: but [b]the mouth of them that speak lies shall be stopped.

PSALM LXV.

David praiseth God for his grace, 1. The blessedness of God's chosen, 4; his general providence, 5.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm[1] and Song of David.

[a]PRAISE *waiteth for thee, O God, [b]in Zion: and [c]unto thee shall the vow be performed.

2 O [d]thou that hearest prayer, [e]unto thee shall all flesh come.

3 †Iniquities prevail against me: as for our transgressions, thou shalt purge them away.

4 [h]Blessed is the man whom thou choosest, and causest to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts: we shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple.

5 By [m]terrible things in righteousness wilt thou answer us, [o]O God of our salvation; who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the sea:

6 Which [r]by his strength setteth fast the mountains; being girded with power:

7 Which [t]stilleth the noise of the seas, the noise of their waves, and the tumult of the people.

8 They also that dwell in the uttermost parts[2] are afraid at thy tokens: thou makest the *outgoings of the morning and evening to ‡rejoice.

to the allowed indulgence of sloth or vain confidence. Trusting in God to arm us for the conflict, to lead us forth and support us, and to give us strength in every time of trouble, we may do valiantly, and tread down all our enemies, and we shall ere long obtain the conqueror's crown.—Scott.

PSALM LXI. CONTENTS.—David, in this psalm, as in many others, begins with a sad heart, but concludes with an air of pleasantness; begins with prayers and tears, but ends with songs of praise. Thus the soul, by being lifted up to God, returns to the enjoyment of itself. It should seem, David was driven out and banished when he penned this psalm, whether by Saul or Absalom is uncertain: some think by Absalom, because he calls himself the king, ver. 6, but that refers to the king Messiah. David, in this psalm, resolves to persevere in his duty, encouraged thereto both by his experience, and by his expectations. 1. He will call upon God, because God had protected him, ver. 1—3. 2. He will call upon God, because God had provided well for him, ver. 4, 5. 3. He will praise God, because he had an assurance of the continuance of God's favour to him, ver. 6—8. So that, in singing this psalm, we may find that which is very expressive both of our faith and of our hope, of our prayers and of our praises; and some passages in this psalm are very peculiar.—Henry.

PSALM LXII. TITLE.—Jeduthun was first chosen to be one of the chief musicians, when the ark was removed to mount Zion: and as this psalm is inscribed to him, some have thought that it relates to Absalom's rebellion, and not to the persecution which David endured from Saul. But as several other psalms, which certainly were composed before David came to the throne, are inscribed to the chief musician; we must suppose, that when the psalmody at the sanctuary was appointed, David delivered to the chief musicians the psalms which he had previously written as well as those which he afterwards from time to time composed. Internal evidence does not clearly show to which season of distress the psalmist referred; as his language seems equally suited to either of them.—"There are no petitions at all in this psalm; nor any thanksgivings: but only expressions of faith and confidence in God." [Bp. Patrick.] It may be added, "exhortations and encouragements to others, to trust in God, and pour out prayer before him."

CONFIDENCE IN GOD.—Ver. 8—10. The psalmist, having risen above the disquietude to which he had been tempted, next gives counsel and caution to the people in general, (as he had before warned his persecutors.) He exhorts them to "trust in God at all times," whatever their outward circumstances or inward conflicts might be; and by fervent prayer to pour out their hearts before him, and they would find him a secure refuge in every danger.—But as for men, no confidence could be reasonably placed, either on the fickle multitude, who might be induced to murder one day, the very person whom they idolized the day before; or on the great, who generally made promises which they never performed, and raised expectations which they never intended to answer; so that even vanity itself seemed heavier in the balance than all of them together. Yet to trust in oppression, or injustice and robbery, would be still more foolish and wicked.—Scott.

PSALM LXIII. LONGING FOR GOD.—We must seek God, 1. Early, with the utmost care, as those that are afraid of missing him; we must begin our days with him; begin every day with him; "Early will I seek thee." 2. Earnestly; "My soul thirsteth for thee, and my flesh longeth for thee; my whole man is affected with this pursuit, here in a dry and thirsty land." Observe, (1.) His complaint in the want of God's favourable presence. He was in a dry and thirsty land; so he reckoned it, not so much because it was a wilderness, as because it was at a distance from the ark, from the word and sacraments. This world is a "weary land," so the word is; it is so to the worldly that have their portion in it, it will yield them no true satisfaction; it is so to the godly that have their passage through it, it is a valley of Baca, they can promise themselves little from it. (2.) His importunity for that presence of God; "My soul thirsteth, longeth, for thee." His want quickened his desires, which were very intense; he thirsted as the hunted hart for the water brooks; he would take with nothing short of it. His desires were almost impatient; he longed, he languished, till he should be restored to the liberty of God's ordinances. Note, Gracious souls look down upon the world with a holy disdain, and look up to God with a holy desire.—Henry.

PSALM LXIV. CONTENTS.—This whole psalm has reference to David's enemies, persecutors, and slanderers; many such there were, and a great deal of trouble they gave him, almost all his days, so that we need not guess at any particular occasion of penning this psalm. 1. He prays to God to preserve him from their malicious designs against him, ver. 1, 2. 2. He gives a very bad character of them, as men marked for ruin by their own wickedness, ver. 3—6. 3. By the spirit of prophecy, he foretells their destruction, which would redound to the glory of God, and the encouragement of his people, ver. 7—10. In singing this psalm, we must observe the effect of the old enmity that is in the seed of the woman against the seed of the serpent; and assure ourselves that the serpent's head will be broken, at last to the honour and joy of the holy seed. —Henry.

9 Thou visitest the earth, and [s]waterest it: thou greatly enrichest it with the river of God,[1] which is full of water: [c]thou preparest them corn, when thou hast so provided for it.

10 Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly; thou [t]settlest the furrows thereof: thou [u]makest it soft with showers: [f]thou blessest the springing thereof.

11 Thou crownest the year [†]with thy goodness; and [h]thy paths[2] drop fatness.

12 They drop upon the pastures of the wilderness: and the little hills [‡]rejoice on every side.

13 The pastures are clothed with flocks; the valleys also are covered over with corn; they shout for joy, they also sing.

PSALM LXVI.

David exhorteth to praise God, 1; to observe his great works, 5; to bless him for his gracious benefits, 8. He voweth for himself religious service to God, 12. He declareth God's special goodness to himself, 16.

To the chief Musician, A Song or Psalm,

MAKE a joyful noise unto God, [*]all ye lands: 2 [b]Sing forth the honour of his name: make his praise glorious.

3 Say unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! through the greatness of thy power shall thine enemies [†]submit themselves unto thee.

4 [c]All the earth shall worship thee, and shall sing unto thee; they shall sing to thy name. Selah.

5 Come and see the works of God: he is terrible in his doing toward the children of men.

6 [h]He turned the sea into dry land: they went through the flood on foot: there did we rejoice in him.

7 [k]He ru[l]eth by his power for ever; [l]his eyes behold the nations: [m]let not the rebellious exalt themselves. Selah.

8 [n]O bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise to be heard:

9 [p]Which [‡]holdeth our soul in life, and [q]suffereth not our feet to be moved.

10 For thou, O God, hast proved us: thou hast tried us, as silver is tried.

11 Thou broughtest us into the net: thou laidest affliction [u]upon our loins.

12 Thou hast caused[1] men to ride over our heads; we went [r]through fire and through water: but thou broughtest us out into a [s]wealthy place.

13 [a]I will go into thy house with burnt-offerings: [b]I will pay thee my vows,

14 Which my lips have [t]uttered, and [c]my mouth hath spoken, [d]when I was in trouble.

15 I will offer unto thee burnt-sacrifices of [*]fatlings, [c]with the incense of rams; I will offer bullocks with goats. Selah.

16 Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul.

17 I cried unto him with my mouth, and he was extolled with my tongue.

18 If I regard iniquity in my heart, the LORD will not hear me:

19 But verily God hath heard me: he hath attended to the voice of my prayer.

20 Blessed be God, which hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me.

PSALM LXVII.

A prayer for the enlargement of God's kingdom, 1; to the joy of the people, 3, and the increase of God's blessings, 6.

To the chief Musician on [a]Neginoth, A Psalm or Song.

[b]GOD be merciful unto us, and [c]bless us, and [d]cause his face to shine [*]upon us. Selah.

2 That [f]thy way[1] may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

3 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

4 O let the nations be glad, and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and [†]govern the nations upon earth. Selah.

5 [m]Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

6 Then [n]shall the earth yield her increase, and God, even [o]our own God, shall bless us.

7 God shall bless us; and all the ends[2] of the earth shall fear him.

PSALM LXVIII.

A prayer at the removing of the ark, 1. An exhortation to praise God for his mercies, 4, for his care of the church, 7, and for his great works, 19.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm or Song of David.

[a]LET God arise, let his enemies be scattered: let them also [c]that hate him flee [*]before him.

2 As smoke is driven away, so drive them away; as wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish in the presence of God.

3 But let the righteous be glad; let them rejoice before God: yea, let them [†]exceedingly rejoice.

4 [1]Sing unto God, sing praises to his name: extol him that rideth upon the heavens by [1]his name JAH,[1] and rejoice before him.

5 [m]A father of the fatherless, and [n]a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation.

6 God setteth the solitary in [‡]families: [q]he bringeth out those which are bound with chains: but [r]the rebellious dwell in a dry land.

7 O God, when thou wentest forth before thy people; when thou didst march through the wilderness; Selah.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Transgressors are often inwardly alarmed with the dread of consequences; but they encourage each other, till they flatter themselves with the hopes of impunity, and despise the all-seeing eye of God. Actuated by the most malignant enmity, with deep dissimulation they search out iniquities, that they may pretend zeal for God's glory, whilst they are murdering his people: but all their malice will rebound upon themselves, and God himself will fight against them and destroy them; and all who behold their doom in a future state, will reverence his power and justice in it. But it is our wisdom now to fear because of the judgments of God, and to flee from the wrath to come; to declare and consider his works, and to shun the rock on which others have split. For the righteous alone can rejoice and trust in this holy Lord God; and all, who uprightly rely on his mercy, and seek to know and do his will, shall glory in him as their salvation and eternal portion.—Scott.

PSALM LXV. PRAISE.—Ver. 2. "Praise waits for thee;" and why is it so ready? "Because thou art ready to grant our petitions. O thou that hearest prayer, thou canst answer every prayer, for thou art able to do for us more than we are able to ask or think, Eph. iii. 20, and thou wilt answer every prayer of faith, either in kind or kindness." It is much for the glory of God's goodness, and the encouragement of ours, that he is a God hearing prayer, and has taken it among the titles of his honour to be so; and we are much wanting to ourselves, if we do not take all occasions to give him his title. Because for that reason we are ready to run to him when we are in our straits; "'Therefore,' because thou art a God hearing prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come; justly does every man's praise wait for thee, because every man's prayer waits on thee, when he is in want or distress, whatever he does at other times. Now only the seed of Israel come to thee, and the proselytes to their religion; but when thy 'house shall be called a house of prayer to all people,' then unto thee shall all flesh come and be welcome."—Henry.

BENIGN PROVIDENCE.—Ver. 9. "Thou visitest the land, and desirest it, (or causest it to desire,) and greatly enrichest it."—"The river of God," in this connection, evidently denotes those abundant and constant supplies of water with which the Lord replenishes and fructifies the earth, as a large river waters the country through which it flows; but under that emblem the pouring out of the Spirit after the ascension of Christ, and the blessed effects that followed, seem to have been predicted. Ver. 10. "Do thou water the ridges abundantly, do thou cause the rain to descend into the furrows," &c. This expression seems to be a prayer for the blessing.—Thus the land is made ready for the seed, after man has properly tilled it; and when he has sown the corn, the Lord causes it to grow and ripen. In like manner, while his ministers use appointed means, and sow the seed of divine truth, God both prepares the hearts of the hearers and gives the increase. Ver. 11. "The herbs, fruits, and flowers, produced by the earth, are as a beautifully variegated crown set upon her head by the great Creator." [Horne.] Every year also is thus crowned by his bounty. Wherever the Lord passeth, he scattereth abundance around his paths; and the clouds, which are called his chariots, drop down fatness on the earth. Ver. 12, 13. Nothing can be more beautifully descriptive of a fruitful country, in a favourable season, than these verses: while the poetical representation of the little hills "girding themselves with gladness;" and pastures and valleys, covered with flocks and crops of corn, exulting and shouting for joy, has peculiar animation.—The same metaphors are often used for the happy effects of the gospels, when successfully preached, especially in places before enveloped in darkness. —Scott.

PSALM LXVI. SERVICE OF SONG.—In these verses, the psalmist calls upon all people to praise God, "all lands, all the earth," ver. 1; all the inhabitants of the world that are capable of praising God. 1. This speaks the glory of God, that he is worthy to be praised by all, for he is good to all, and furnishes every nation with matter for praise. 2. The duty of man, that all are obliged to praise God; it is part of the law of creation, and therefore is required of every creature. 3. A "prediction of the conversion of the Gentiles" to the faith of Christ; the time should come when all lands should praise God, and this incense should in every place be offered to him. 4. A hearty good-will which the psalmist had to this good work of praising God: he will abound in it himself, and wishes that God might have his tribute paid him by all the nations of the earth, and not by the land of Israel only. He excites all lands, (1.) To make a joyful noise to God; holy joy is that devout affection which should animate all our praises; and though it is not making a noise in religion that God will accept of, (hypocrites are said to "cause their voice to be heard on high," Isa. lviii. 4,) yet, in praising God, [1.] We must be hearty and zealous, and must do what we do, with all our might, with all that is within us; [2.] We must be open and public, as those that are not ashamed of our Master; and both these are implied in making a noise, a joyful joy. (2.) To sing with pleasure, and to sing forth, for the edification of others, the honour of his name, of all that whereby he has made himself known, ver. 2. That which is the honour of God's name, ought to be the matter of our praise.—Henry.

35 O God, thou art terrible out of thy holy places: the God of Israel is he that giveth strength and power unto his people. Blessed be God.

PSALM LXIX.

David complaineth of his affliction, 1. He prayeth for deliverance, 13. He devoteth his enemies to destruction, 22; and praiseth God with thanksgiving, 30.

To the chief Musician upon [a]Shoshannim, A Psalm of David.

SAVE me, O God; for [b]the waters are come in unto my soul.

2 [c]I sink in [*]deep mire, where there is no standing: I am come into [†]deep waters, where the floods overflow me.

3 I am weary of my crying: my throat is dried: mine eyes fail while [h]I wait for my God.

4 They that [i]hate me without a cause are [k]more than the hairs of mine head: they that would destroy me, [l]being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty: then I restored that which I took not away.[1]

5 O God, thou knowest my foolishness;[2] [m]and my [‡]sins are not [o]hid from thee.

6 [p]Let not them that wait on thee, O LORD God of hosts, be ashamed for my sake: let not those that seek thee be confounded for my sake, [q]O God of Israel.

7 Because [r]for thy sake I have borne reproach; [s]shame hath covered my face.

8 I am become a stranger unto my brethren, [u]and an alien unto my mother's children.

9 For [x]the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up: [y]and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me.

10 When [z]I wept, and chastened my soul with fasting, that was to my reproach.

11 [a]I made sackcloth also my garment; and [b]I became a proverb to them.

same occasion as the foregoing.—It may be considered either as a prayer or as a prophecy; but the whole, being in the future tense, is more naturally interpreted as a prediction than as a supplication. Most versions, indeed, render it as a prayer, and, in this sense, it is exceedingly animated; yet, it may be doubted, whether the method of explaining the language of direct prophecy, as a mere desire of the event, has not darkened the evidence from prophecy for the divine inspiration of Scripture, and damped the expectations, exertions, and prayers, of pious persons for the enlargement of the church. —Scott.

PSALM LXVIII. ITS OCCASION.—This psalm is supposed to have been written and used when the ark was carried up to mount Zion.—The first of these verses evidently refers to the words used by Moses at the removal of the ark; but the sacred name JEHOVAH, used in that passage, is here changed for ELOHIM, or God, and the future tense in the first clause is substituted instead of the imperative, the language of prediction for that of prayer. Indeed, the old version, more literally than the present, renders the whole of these verses as a prophecy, "God will arise, and his enemies shall be scattered," &c.; for all the verbs are future.—The psalmist looked back to the former mercies of God to Israel, and presaged further prosperity to his people, now the symbol of God's presence had taken possession of its appointed residence among them.—The presence of God with Israel had dissipated the force and projects of those who hated him and them, as the cloud of smoke is dispersed by the wind, or as the wax is liquefied by the fire. And while the wicked had perished at his presence, the righteous had expressed their admiring gratitude and joy in every imaginable way. Thus it had been of old; thus it would certainly be in future times; and thus the worshippers prayed that it might be then, and at all times.—Scott.

SINAI.—Ver. 8. Never did any people see the glory of God, nor hear his voice, as Israel did, Deut. iv. 32, 33. Never had any people such an excellent law given them; so expounded, so enforced. Then the "earth shook," and the neighbouring countries, it is likely, felt the shock; terrible thunders there were, accompanied, no doubt, with thunder-showers, in which the heavens seemed to drop; while the divine doctrine "dropt as the rain," Deut. xxxii. 2. "Sinai itself," that vast mountain, that long ridge of mountains, "was moved at the presence of God;" see Judges v. 4, 5; Deut. xxxiii. 2; Hab. iii. 3. This terrible appearance of the Divine Majesty, as it would possess them with a fear and dread of him, so it would encourage their faith in him and dependence upon him. Whatever uneasiness of difficulty [illegible] of their happy settlement, he that ZION.—The glory of mount Zion was the King whom God "set on that holy hill," Ps. ii. 6, who "came to the daughter of Zion," Matt. xxi. 5. Of his ascension the psalmist here speaks, and to it it is expressly applied, Eph. iv. 8. "Thou hast ascended on high," ver. 18, compare Ps. xlvii. 5, 6. Christ's ascending on high is here spoken of as a thing past, so sure was it; and spoken of to his honour, so great was it. It may include his whole exalted state, but points especially at his ascension into heaven to the right hand of the Father, which was as much our advantage as his advancement. For, 1. He then triumphed over the gates of hell; he led "captivity captive;" he led his captives in triumph; as great conquerors used to do, "making a show of them openly," Col. ii. 15. He led those captive who had led us captives, and who, if he had not interposed, would have held us captive for ever. Nay, he "led captivity itself captive," having quite broken the power of sin and Satan. As he was the Death of death, so he was the Captivity of captivity, Hos. xiii. 14. This speaks the complete victory which Jesus Christ obtained over our spiritual enemies: it was such, that through him "we also are more than conquerors," that is, triumphers, Rom. viii. 37. 2. He then opened the gates of heaven to all believers; "Thou hast received gifts for men;" he "gave gifts to men," so the apostle reads it, Eph. iv. 8. For he received that he might give; on his head the anointing of the Spirit was poured, that from him it might descend to the skirts of his garments. And he gave what he had received; having received power to give eternal life, he bestows it upon "as many as were given him," John xvii. 2. "Thou hast received gifts for men," not for angels: fallen angels were not to be made saints, nor standing angels made gospel-ministers, Heb. ii. 5. Not for Jews only, but for all men; whoever will may reap the benefit of these gifts. The apostle tells us what these gifts were, Eph. iv. 11, "prophets, apostles, evangelists, pastors, and teachers."—Henry.

CONVERSION OF THE WORLD.—Ver. 31—33. The victories gained by David and Israel over the surrounding nations would induce even those who were more distant, and most addicted to idolatry, to come to Jerusalem, and join themselves to the worshippers of the true God. The conversion of the nations, in consequence of the judgments of God on the opposers of the gospel in the primitive times, and before the millennium, is evidently foretold: for the kingdoms of the earth are called upon to join in the praises of Israel; and to adore him who rode on the heavens to the help of his people, and who spake with a mighty voice to them from mount Sinai.—When the Messiah ascended on high, to "the glory which he had with his Father before the world was," he sent forth the powerful word of his gospel, calling on all men to submit to him, and honour him, "even as they honoured the Father that sent him."—Ethiopia, &c. ver. 31. The Ethiopians shall hasten with their offerings, and flee to the God of Israel. [illegible]

13 But as for me, [c]my prayer is unto thee, O LORD, in an acceptable time: O God, [d]in the multitude of thy mercy hear me, in the truth of thy salvation.

14 Deliver me out of the mire, and let me not sink: let me be delivered from them that hate me, and [e]out of the deep waters.

15 Let not the waterflood overflow me, neither let the deep swallow me up, and let not the pit shut her mouth upon me.

16 Hear me, O LORD; [f]for thy lovingkindness is good: turn unto me [g]according to the multitude of thy tender mercies.

17 And [h]hide not thy face from thy servant; for I am in trouble: †hear me speedily.

18 Draw nigh unto my soul, and redeem it: deliver me because of mine enemies.

19 Thou hast known [i]my reproach, and my shame, and my dishonour: [k]mine adversaries are all before thee.

20 Reproach hath broken my heart; and I am full of heaviness: and I looked for some to ‡take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none.

21 They gave me also [l]gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me [m]vinegar to drink.[4]

22 Let [n]their table become a snare before them: and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap.

23 Let their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake.

24 [o]Pour out thine indignation upon them, and let thy wrathful anger take hold of them.

25 Let their *habitation be desolate; and †let none dwell in their tents.

26 For they persecute him whom thou hast smitten; and they talk to the grief[5] of those ‡whom thou hast wounded.

27 Add §iniquity unto their iniquity: and let them not come into thy righteousness.

28 Let them be [p]blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous.

29 But I am poor and sorrowful: [q]let thy salvation, O God, set me up on high.

30 [r]I will praise the name of God with a song, and will [s]magnify him with thanksgiving.

31 This also shall please the LORD better than an ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs.

32 The *humble shall see this, and be glad: and your heart shall live that seek God.

33 For [t]the LORD heareth the poor, and despiseth not his prisoners.

34 [u]Let the heaven and earth praise him, the seas, and every thing that †moveth therein.

35 For [v]God will save Zion, and will [x]build the cities of Judah: that they may dwell there, and have it in possession.

36 [a]The seed also of his servants shall inherit it: and [b]they that love his name shall dwell therein.

that Ethiopia in Africa is meant. This may encourage our efforts and prayers for the conversion of the much injured Africans.—Scott.

PSALM LXIX. ITS SUBJECT.—David penned this psalm when he was in affliction; and in it, 1. He complains of the great distress and trouble he was in, and earnestly begs of God to relieve and succour him, ver. 1—21. 2. He imprecates the judgments of God upon his persecutors, ver. 22—29. 3. He concludes with the voice of joy and praise, in an assurance that God would help and succour him, and would do well for the church, ver. 30—36. Now, in this, David was a type of Christ, and divers passages in this psalm are applied to Christ in the New Testament, and are said to have their accomplishment in him, ver. 4, 9, 21; and ver. 22 refers to the enemies of Christ. So that (like the 32d psalm) it begins with the humiliation, and ends with the exaltation, of Christ, one branch of which was the destruction of the Jewish nation for persecuting him, which the imprecations here are predictions of. In singing this psalm, we must have an eye to the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that followed; not forgetting the sufferings of Christians too, and the glory that shall follow them; for it may lead us to think of the ruin reserved for the persecutors, and the rest reserved for the persecuted.—Henry.

THE "CONTRADICTION OF SINNERS" AGAINST JESUS.—Ver. 8, 9. The Lord Jesus "came to his own, but his own received him not;" his countrymen called him "a Samaritan, who had a devil;" "neither did his brethren believe in him;" and the inhabitants of Nazareth, where he had been brought up, attempted to destroy him. Because his zeal for the honour of the law, and the purity of the worship of God, which entirely occupied his soul, and raised him above all inferior considerations; and his plain reproofs of hypocrisy and iniquity, exasperated the mercenary and worthless teachers and rulers of the Jews, and set all orders of men against him. In calumniating him, they ascribed the miracles, which he wrought by the spirit of God, to Beelzebub; and in many ways they reproached God, in reproaching his beloved Son, who was "the express image of his person;" for "they both saw and hated both him and his Father."—As two apostles have quoted this verse with express application to Christ; we are warranted in explaining it as a direct prophecy of him, or even as his words. Yet the usage which David experienced from his son Absalom, his relations, his counsellors, and his subjects, chiefly because of his zeal for the honour of God and true religion, rendered him a striking type of Christ in this respect, and doubtless occasioned this complaint. Ver. 10—12. "The Lord of glory" voluntarily became a "man of sorrows." "In the likeness of sinful flesh," and as a poor man, he appeared in the habit of humiliation, as if he had been a penitent in sackcloth. He wept, and fasted, and prayed; and he was despised and reproached for it. He was called "a Samaritan, who had a devil," "a Nazarene," and "this deceiver;" and he was made a by-word and a proverb to the people.—The chief priests and rulers, who sat as judges in the gate, with deliberate malice conspired his death: and the very drunkards profanely made songs of him, and diverted themselves amidst their intemperate revels, by reviling and ridiculing him.

RETRIBUTION.—Ver. 22—28. Some commentators read this awful passage entirely in the future tense, as a prediction, and not an imprecation: but most of the verbs are in the imperative; and the apostles quote the passage as an imprecation. If we consider the passage as the language of Christ, denouncing the doom of his implacable enemies, and as recorded for a warning to others; no reasonable objection can be made to this interpretation: for in reading them, we only assent to the justice of the sentence. The case of the Jewish nation is here prophetically described. Not only were their temporal advantages made an occasion of mischief to them, but, depending on those sacrifices and institutions which were originally appointed for the good of their souls, and ensnared in their own counsels, they persisted both in enmity to Christ, and in resistance to the Romans. Being shut up in Jerusalem, when they were assembled to eat the passover, "their table became their snare:" infatuated beyond all example, and disunited among themselves, the horrors of intestine massacres weakened and terrified them: at length the Romans, the instruments of the Lord's indignation, got possession of the city with most dreadful slaughter, destroyed the temple, (the palace here mentioned,) and desolated their city and habitations, so that none of them were left to dwell there. The remnant of the nation were cast out of the church, and left in judicial darkness, to add "iniquity to iniquity," without obtaining an interest "in the righteousness of God." Thus they have been blotted out of the register in which the people of God were enrolled, and were no longer "written among the righteous;" and all this was laid on them for rejecting and crucifying the Messiah with the most determined contempt and cruelty. The twenty-fifth verse is applied by St. Peter to the traitor Judas, "who was guide to them that took Jesus;" and thus a proper representative of the apostate but hypocritical nation, which as with one voice demanded, even while celebrating the passover, the crucifixion of their Prince and Saviour.—Scott.

PSALM LXX.—This psalm is adapted to a state of affliction; it is copied almost word for word from the 40th, and, some think, for that reason, is entitled a psalm "to bring to remembrance;" for it may be of use sometimes to pray over the prayers we have formerly made to God, upon like occasions, which may be done with new affections. David here prays that God would send, 1. Help to himself, ver. 1—5. 2. Shame to his enemies, 19 [q]Thy righteousness also, O God, is very high, who hast done great things: O God, [r]who is like unto thee!

20 Thou, which hast shewed me[z] great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth.

22 I will also praise thee with the ‖psaltery, [a]even thy truth, O my God: unto thee will I sing with the harp, [b]O thou Holy One of Israel.

23 [c]My lips shall greatly rejoice when I sing unto thee; and [d]my soul, which thou hast redeemed.

ver. 2, 3. 3. Joy to his friends, ver. 4. These five verses were the five last verses of Ps. xl. He seems to have intended this short prayer to be, both for himself and us, a salve for every sore, and therefore to be always in mind; in singing, we may apply it to our particular troubles, whatever they are.—Henry.

PSALM LXXI. PIETY IN YOUTH.—David's confidence in God is supported and encouraged by his experiences, ver. 5, 6. "'Thou hast been my Trust from my youth;' ever since I was capable of discerning between my right hand and my left, I stayed myself upon thee, and saw a great deal of reason to do so: for 'by thee have I been holden up from the womb.'" Ever since he had the use of his reason, he had been a dependent upon God's goodness, because ever since he had a being he had been a monument of it. Note, The consideration of the gracious care which the Divine Providence took of us in our birth and infancy, should engage us to an early piety, and constant devotedness to his honour. He that was our Help from our birth, ought to be our Hope from our youth. If we received so much mercy from God before we were capable of doing him any service, we should lose no time when we are capable. This comes in here as a support to the psalmist in his present distress; not only that God had given him his life and being, bringing him out of his mother's bowels into the world, and providing that he should not die from the womb, nor give up the ghost when he came out of the belly; but that he had betimes made him one of his family; "Thou art he that took me out of my mother's bowels into the arms of thy grace, under the shadow of thy wings, into the bond of thy covenant; thou tookest me into thy church, as a son of thine handmaid, and born in thine house," Ps. cxvi. 16. And therefore, 1. "I have reason to hope that thou wilt protect me; thou that hast held me up hitherto, wilt not let me fall now."

PIETY IN OLD AGE.—Ver. 18. Those that have got good when they are young, must be doing good when they are grown up, and must continue to communicate what they have received. David says, "Now that I am old and gray-headed," dying to this world, and hastening to another, "O God, forsake me not." This is what he earnestly desires and confidently hopes for. Those that have been taught of God from their youth, and have made it the business of their lives to honour him, may be sure that he will not leave them when they are old and gray headed, will not leave them helpless and comfortless, but will make the evil days of old age their best days, and such as they shall have occasion to say they have pleasure in. What he designed to do for God in his old age; "I will not only show thy strength, by my own experience of it, to this generation, but I will leave my observations upon record for the benefit of posterity, and so show it to every one that is to come." As long as we live, we should be endeavouring to glorify God and edify one another; and those that have had the largest and longest experience of the goodness of God to them, should improve their experiences for the good of their friends. It is a debt which the old disciples of Christ owe to the succeeding generations, to leave behind them a solemn testimony to the power, pleasure, and advantage of religion, and the truth of God's promises.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—It is very honourable to the mercy of God, that his word encourages sinners to plead their confidence in him, as a reason why he should save and help them.—He always inclines his ear to the prayer of faith: and they who trust in him, and seek all their happiness from him, shall never be put to shame. His power, truth, and love, will be their residence and fortress, to which they may always resort; and in which they will be secure and comfortable, even amidst troubles and alarms. He hath "given commandment to save them," not only from "unrighteous and cruel men," but from the wicked and cruel enemies of their souls. Happy therefore are they, who make the Lord their hope: but most happy they who have been taught by him, and so have trusted him from their youth; and who, with advancing years, have acquired increasing experience of his faithfulness and mercy.—As he formed each of us, and took us out of our mother's womb, and as by him we have been holden up ever since; our praise ought to be always of him; but, alas! how few grow up in his fear, and spend their lives to his glory! It is indeed a great mercy to young people to be early instructed in the things of God: parents have an important obligation upon them in this respect; and children who are thus favoured have additional reasons to love, honour, and requite their parents. Yet let none of us expect much quiet in this world; they who from their earliest youth have loved the Lord, and declared his wondrous works, and walked before him in truth and equity, have often been showed sore troubles, and have been exceedingly hated and persecuted: nay, they have been "men wondered at," for their principles, their conduct, and trials.—Scott.

PSALM LXXII. TITLE.—"David had the satisfaction to see all the great men do homage to Solomon, before he died; and thereupon, the spirit of this holy man being transported with an extraordinary joy, he indicted this psalm, in which he recommends Solomon to the Divine benediction, and instructs him how to make his people happy; which he carries on in so high a strain, that the words had not a full accomplishment, till the appearing of that great king, Christ, of whose kingdom his father David here prophesies."—Scott.

TRIUMPHS OF MESSIAH.—Christ's kingdom shall extend very far, and be greatly enlarged; considering, 1. The extent of his territories, ver. 8. "He shall have dominion from sea to sea," from the South sea to the North, or from the Red sea to the Mediterranean; and from the river Euphrates, or Nile, to the ends of the earth. Solomon's dominion was very large, 1 Kings iv. 21, according to the promise, Gen. xv. 18. But no sea, no river, is named, that it might, by these proverbial expressions, bespeak the universal monarchy of the Lord Jesus. His gospel has been, or shall be, preached "to all nations," Matt. xxiv. 14, and the "kingdoms of the world," shall "become his kingdoms," Rev. xi. 15, when the fulness of the Gentiles shall be brought in. His territories shall be extended to those countries, (1.) That were strangers to him; "They that dwell in the wilderness," out of all high roads, that seldom hear news, shall hear the glad tidings of the Redeemer, and redemption by him, "shall bow before him," shall believe in him, accept of him, worship him, and take his yoke upon them. Before the Lord Jesus we must all either bow or break; if we break, we are ruined, if we bow, we are certainly made for ever. (2.) That were enemies to him, and had fought against him; "They shall lick the dust," they shall be brought down, and laid in the dust, shall bite the ground for vexation, and be so hunger-bitten, that they shall be glad of dust, the serpent's meat, Gen. iii. 15, for of his seed they are; and over whom shall not he rule, when his enemies themselves are thus humbled and brought low? 2. The dignity of his tributaries; He shall not only reign over them that dwell in the wilderness, the peasants and cottagers, but over them that dwell in the palaces, ver. 10. "The kings of Tarshish, and of the isles," that lie most remote from Israel, and are "the isles of the Gentiles," Gen. 10. 5, these shall bring presents to him as their Sovereign Lord, by and under whom they hold their crowns, and all their crown lands. They shall court his favour, and make an interest in him, that they may hear his wisdom. This was literally fulfilled in Solomon; for "all the kings of the earth sought the wisdom of Solomon, and brought every man his present," 2 Chron. ix. 23, 24, and in Christ too, when the wise men of the East, who, probably, were men of the first rank in their own country, came to worship him, and "brought him presents," Matt. ii. 11. They shall present themselves to him; that is the best present we can bring to Christ, and without that no other present is acceptable, Rom. xii. 1. They "shall offer gifts," spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise, offer them to Christ as their God, on Christ as their Altar, which sanctifies every gift.—Henry.

PSALM LXXIII. PROSPERITY OF THE WICKED.—Ver. 7. 1. They seem to have the greatest share of the comforts of this life. They live at ease, and bathe themselves in pleasure, so that "their eyes stand out with fatness. See what the excess of pleasure is, the immoderate use of it enlightens the eyes, but they that indulge themselves inordinately in the delights of sense, have their eyes ready to start out of their heads. Epicures are really their own tormentors, by putting a force upon nature, while they pretend to gratify it. And well may they feed themselves to the full, who have more than heart could wish, more than they themselves ever thought of, or expected to be masters of. They have at least more than an humble, quiet, contented heart could wish, yet not so much as they themselves wish for. There are many who have a great deal of this life in their hands, but nothing of the other life in their hearts. They are ungodly, live without the fear and worship of God, and yet they prosper and come on in the world, and not only are rich, but increase in riches, ver. 12. They are looked upon as thriving men; while others have much ado to keep what they have, they are still adding more, more honour, power, pleasure, by increasing in riches; "They are the prosperous of the age," so some read it. 2. Their end seems to be peace; this is mentioned first, on account of its being so strange; for it was ever thought to be the peculiar privilege of the godly, (Ps. xxxvii. 37;) yet, to outward appearance, it is often the lot of the ungodly, ver. 4. "There are no bands in their death."—Henry.

THEIR DANGER AND MISERY.—Ver. 17. The psalmist purposed to acquire a full understanding of this mystery in providence, and in the mean while to keep silence; but the more he reflected and reasoned on the subject, the deeper was his conviction that it was too difficult for him, and the greater perplexity he experienced; until he went at length into the sanctuary of God, to consult the priests, the Lord's ministers, and examine his word, and spread the case before him in prayer; and then he was enabled to understand the end and final doom of prosperous sinners, so that he could no longer envy them, or complain of his own condition. Ver. 18—22. By the light of truth, and the eye of faith, the psalmist clearly saw, that prosperous ungodly men stand on the slippery summit of a tremendous precipice; whence in the appointed time God casts them down by death, with a fall equal to the height to which they were elevated. In a moment they are desolated and ruined, and overwhelmed with terrors. The dread of death and judgment mars their enjoyment; and the death of any one of them terrified the survivors. So that their happiness was but a transient disturbed dream of pleasure; and God poured contempt upon this lifeless image of felicity, when, arising to take vengeance, he by death awaked them to see substantial good for ever lost, and real misery unavoidable and eternal.—These considerations made him sensible of his sin and folly, in envying such wretched men. He was deeply ashamed, on recollecting the ferment of his heart, and the effect produced even upon his animal frame, without any sufficient cause. And he appeared to himself, and knew that he must appear to God, to be ignorant and stupid as a beast, which has not the power of any [illegible] present sensual enjoyment.—Hen

PSALM LXXIV. DESOLATIONS.—Ver. 4. The Chaldeans, rushing into the temple, shouting for victory amidst the affrighted worshippers, and setting up their standards, or erecting trophies of their success, seem to be here described. Antiochus Epiphanes afterwards profaned the temple, and dispersed the worshippers, but he did not burn it. —The prevalence of infidelity, and the triumphs of heathens, infidels, and antichristian persecutors and corrupters of Christianity, are events equally lamentable; and the proper directory for prayer on such occasions is here given. Ver. 5, 6. "It was heretofore thought an employment of much honour and merit in those men who did cut down and square the timber trees for the building of the holy sanctuary. But now every man thinks himself to deserve most thanks that can do most havoc to thy holy place." [Bp. Hall.]—"As a skilful person lifteth up the axe in the thick wood, so now men set themselves to work, to demolish the ornaments and timbers of the sanctuary." [Horne.] —"'He that lifteth up' the axes upon the thick trees, was crowned as one that brought a thing to perfection; but now they break down," &c. [Old Version.]—The word rendered "thick," not denoting the largeness of the trees, but the intricate density of the forest, may be supposed to be a figurative description of the complicated workmanship of the temple, and then the following will be the meaning: "Each of them is accounted famous, or skilful, according as he hath lifted up the axes on the curious workmanship" (of the temple.) "Even now do they beat down the carved work with axes and hammers." The eagerness of the destroyers, and the honour which they acquired by the work of destruction, are evidently intended.

PRAYER FOR RESCUE.—Ver. 19. The word rendered first, "multitude," and then "congregation," signifies living, or a living creature. It is often translated "beast," or collectively "beasts;" but in many places it evidently means a living multitude. Some read this verse in connection with the foregoing, "O deliver not the life of thy turtle into the hand of that multitude of the foolish people who blasphemed God."—The church, as faithful and loving, pure and harmless, destitute and defenceless, and silently mourning under the displeasure and at the absence of her Beloved, is described under this beautiful image. Surely the Lord valued his turtle-dove too much to leave her to be devoured by the hawks and eagles which surrounded her. Ver. 20. Though Israel was unworthy of God's regard, and had broken their national covenant, yet even that covenant gave intimation of returning favour to the nation, when brought to confess their sins, and seek humbly to God, even from the ends of the earth, and of a reinstatement in Canaan, after their dispersions. And the covenant with Abraham and his seed, and that with David and his seed, were in full force. The coming of the promised Messiah from that race was thus unalterably secured: and how should the dark places of the earth, which were filled with the habitations of cruelty, be enlightened and converted, or the worship of God be at all maintained; if Israel were destroyed before the coming of that Redeemer, who was to be a "Light to the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel?" —"All places where thy word shineth not, there reigneth tyranny and ambition."—Scott.

PSALM LXXV. ITS PURPORT.—Though this psalm is attributed to Asaph, in the title, yet it does so exactly agree with David's circumstances, at his coming to the crown after the death of Saul, that most interpreters apply it to that juncture, and suppose that either Asaph penned it, in the person of David, as his poet-laureate, (probably, the substance of the psalm was some speech which David made to a convention of the states, at his accession to the government, and Asaph turned it into verse, and published it in a poem, for the better spreading of it among the people,) or that David penned it, and delivered it to Asaph as precentor of the temple. In this psalm, 1. David returns God thanks for bringing him to the throne, ver. 1, 9. 2. He promises to lay out himself for the public good, in the use of the power God had given him, ver. 2, 3, 10. 3. He checks the insolence of those that opposed his coming to the throne, ver. 4, 5. 4. He fetches a reason for all this from God's sovereign dominion in the affairs of the children of men, ver. 6—8. In singing this psalm we must give to God the glory of all the revolutions of states and kingdoms, believing that they are all according to his counsel, and that he will make them all to work for the good of his church.—Henry.

PSALM LXXVI. ITS OCCASION.—This psalm seems to have been penned upon occasion of some great victory obtained by the church over some threatening enemy or other, and designed to grace the triumph. The LXX. call it, "A song upon the Assyrians;" whence many good interpreters conjecture that it was penned when Sennacherib's army, then besieging Jerusalem, was entirely cut off by a destroying angel, in Hezekiah's time; and several passages in the psalm are very applicable to that work of wonder; but there was a religious triumph upon occasion of another victory, in Jehoshaphat's time, which might as well be the subject of this psalm, 2 Chron. xx. 28, and it might be called a song of Asaph, because always sung by the sons of Asaph. Or it might be penned by Asaph, who lived in David's time, upon occasion of the many triumphs with which God delighted to honour that reign.—Henry.

GOD'S OVERRULING PROVIDENCE.—Ver. 10. The rage and malice of the most mighty persecutors and tyrants, were always rendered subservient to the display of JEHOVAH'S glory, and to the good of his people. And if they designed any thing of contrary ten-

An exhortation both to learn and to preach the law of God, 1. The story of God's wrath against the incredulous and disobedient, 9. Other tribes of Israel being rejected, God chose Judah, Zion, and David, 67.

* Maschil of Asaph.

GIVE ear, O my people, to my law: incline your ears to the words of my mouth.

2 I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark[1] sayings of old:

3 Which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us.

4 We will not hide them from their children, shewing to the generation to come [s]the praises of the LORD, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.

5 For he established [t]a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, that they should make them known to their children:

6 That the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children:

7 That they might set their hope in God, and [u]not forget the works of God, but [v]keep his commandments:

8 And might not be as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation; a generation that [w]set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not stedfast with God.

9 [x]The children of Ephraim,[2] being armed, and [y]carrying bows, turned back in the day of battle.

10 [z]They kept not the covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law;

11 And forgat his works, and his wonders that he had shewed them.

12 Marvellous things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the field of [a]Zoan.[3]

13 [b]He divided the sea, and caused them to pass through; and [c]he made the waters to stand as an heap.

14 In the daytime also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire.

15 He [d]clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of the great depths.

16 He brought streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.

17 And they sinned yet more against him by provoking the most High in the wilderness.

18 And they tempted God [4]in their heart by asking meat for their lust.

19 Yea, [h]they spake against God; they said, [i]Can God [5]furnish a table in the wilderness?

20 Behold, [k]he smote the rock, that the waters gushed out, and the streams overflowed; [l]can he give bread also? can he provide flesh for his people?

21 Therefore [m]the LORD heard this, and was wroth: so [n]a fire was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel;

22 [o]Because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation:

23 Though he had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven,

24 And [r]had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

25 ‖Man did eat angels' food:[5] he sent them meat to the full.

26 He caused an east wind to [6]blow in the heaven: and by his power he brought in the south wind.

27 [u]He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and [7]feathered fowls like as the sand of the sea:

28 And he let it fall in the midst of their camp, round about their habitations.

29 So they did eat, and were well filled: for he gave them their own desire;

30 They were not estranged from their lust. But while their meat was yet in their mouths,

31 The wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and [8]smote down the [9]chosen men of Israel.

32 For all this [x]they sinned still, and [y]believed not for his wondrous works.

33 Therefore [z]their days did he consume in vanity,[6] and [a]their years in trouble.

34 When he slew them, then they sought him: and they returned and enquired early after God.

35 And they remembered that [b]God was their rock, and the high God [c]their Redeemer.

36 Nevertheless they did flatter him with their mouth, and [d]they lied unto him with their tongues.

37 For [e]their heart was not right with him, neither were they [f]stedfast in his covenant.

38 But he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not: yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath.

39 For [g]he remembered that they were but flesh; [h]a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again.

40 [i]How oft did they ‖provoke him in the wilderness, and [k]grieve him in the desert!

dency, he failed not to restrain or destroy them. This he had exemplified in the case of Sennacherib, who, being "ordained for correction," and sent "against a hypocritical nation," was successful in his undertakings, till he had fulfilled the part of the Divine counsel which had been allotted him; but when he attempted to exceed his commission, he was suddenly and effectually restrained from proceeding any further. And this must be considered as a specimen of the Divine conduct in all similar cases.—Scott.

PSALM LXXVII. DESPONDENCY.—Ver. 3. We may notice these melancholy musings. He pored so much upon the trouble, whatever it was, personal or public, that, 1. The methods that should have relieved him did but increase his grief, ver. 3. (1.) One would have thought that the remembrance of God should have comforted him, but it did not: "I remembered God, and was troubled," as poor Job, chap. xxiii. 15, "I am troubled at his presence; when I consider, I am afraid of him." When he remembered God, his thoughts fastened only upon his justice, and wrath, and dreadful majesty; and thus God himself became a Terror to him. (2.) One would have thought that pouring out of his soul before God should have given him ease, but it did not; he complained, and yet his spirit was overwhelmed, and sank under the load. 2. The means of his present relief were denied him, ver. 4. He could not enjoy sleep, which, if it be quiet and refreshing, is a parenthesis to our griefs and cares; "'Thou holdest mine eyes waking' with thy terrors, which make me full of 'tossings to and fro until the dawning of the day.'" He could not speak, by reason of the disorder of his thoughts, the tumult of his spirits, and the confusion his mind was in; "he kept silence even from good," while "his heart was hot within him;" he was "ready to burst like a new bottle," Job xxxii. 19, and yet so troubled, that he could not speak and refresh himself. Grief never preys so much upon the spirits as when it is thus smothered and pent up.—Henry.

ITS REMEDY.—The psalmist was, however, tempted to think that God had cast him off for ever, and would show him no more favour. "But," says he, "can this be? Can he who was known to delight in mercy cease to be merciful? Will he break his own promise? Is he so angry, as no more to pardon the penitent, and pity the miserable? This cannot be. I will reject with abhorrence the dishonourable thought. It is the disease and weakness of my soul, that I ever harboured it. Whatever appearances may be, God continues merciful and faithful, ready to forgive, and plenteous in goodness and compassion. 'The years of the hand of the Most High;' the time when he lifted up his right hand to deliver his people, prove this; I will therefore fix my attention on those marked periods of JEHOVAH, and thus endeavour to encourage my desponding heart, and so calm my tumultuous passions." Most expositors seem to think that the psalmist's alarm and distress were occasioned by public calamities, in great measure, at least. But there is no intimation of this; and personal trials and temptations might be so great and complicated as to excite the sharp conflict which he so affectingly describes. Ver. 13. The psalmist's faith and grace now obtained the ascendancy over his rebellious will, his unbelief, and his temptations; and he is satisfied that the "way of God," (or the exercise of his sovereign authority over the world, the church, and every individual,) is under the direction of infinite wisdom, and ordered in perfect justice, truth, and goodness.—Scott.

PSALM LXXVIII. ITS NATURE.—This psalm is historical; it is a narrative of the great mercies God had bestowed upon Israel, the great sins wherewith they had provoked him, and the many tokens of his displeasure they had been under for their sins. The psalmist began, in the foregoing psalm, to relate God's wonders of old, for his own encouragement in a difficult time; there he brake off abruptly, but here resumes the subject, for the edification of the church, and enlarges much upon it; showing not only how good God had been to them, which was an earnest of further finishing mercy, but how basely they had conducted themselves toward God, which justified him in correcting them as he did at this time, and forbade all complaints. As the general scope of this psalm may be of use to us, in the singing of it, to put us upon recollecting what God has done for us, and for his church formerly, and what we have done against him, so the particulars also may be of use to us, for warning against those sins of unbelief and ingratitude which Israel of old was notoriously guilty of, and the record of which was preserved for our learning.

GOD'S KINDNESS TO ISRAEL.—God did great things for his people Israel, when he first incorporated them, and formed them into a people; "Marvellous things did he in the sight of their fathers," and not only in their sight, but in their cause, and for their benefit; so strange, so kind, that one would think they should never be forgotten. What he did for them in the land of Egypt is barely mentioned here, ver. 12, but afterward resumed, ver. 43. He proceeds here to show, 1. How he made a lane for them through the Red sea, and caused them, gave them courage, to pass through, though the waters stood over their heads as a hesp, ver. 13. See Isa. lxiii. 12, 13, where God is said to "lead them by the hand," as it were, "through the deep, that they should not stumble." 2. How he provided a guide for them through the untrodden paths of the wilderness; ver. 14, he led them [illegible] which also sheltered them from the [illegible] perhaps warmed the air, [illegible]

41 Yea, they turned back, and tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel.
42 They remembered not his hand, nor the day when he delivered them from *the enemy.
43 How he had †wrought his signs in Egypt, and his ᶻwonders in the field of Zoan;
44 And had ᵃturned their rivers into blood; and their floods, that they could not drink.
45 He ᵇsent divers sorts of flies among them, which devoured them; and ᶜfrogs, which destroyed them.
46 He ᵈgave also their increase unto the caterpillar, and their labour unto the locust.
47 He ‡destroyed their vines ᵉwith hail, and their sycamore-trees with §frost.
48 He ‖gave up their cattle also to the hail, and their flocks to *hot thunderbolts.
49 He cast upon them the fierceness of his anger, wrath, and indignation, and trouble, by sending evil angels[7] among them.
50 He †made a way to his anger; he spared not their soul from death, but gave their ‡life over to the pestilence;
51 And ⁱsmote all the first-born in Egypt; ᵏthe chief of their strength in the tabernacles of Ham.[8]
52 But made his own people to go forth like sheep, and guided them in the wilderness like a flock.
53 And he led them on safely, so that they feared not: ᵖbut the sea §overwhelmed their enemies.
54 And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain, which ʳhis right hand had purchased.
55 He ˢcast out the heathen also before them, and ᵗdivided them an inheritance by line, ᵘand made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents.
56 Yet they tempted and provoked the most high God,[9] and kept not his testimonies;
57 But turned back, and dealt unfaithfully like their fathers: they were turned aside like a deceitful bow.
58 For they provoked him to anger with *their high places, and moved him to jealousy ᶜwith their graven images.
59 When ᵈGod heard this, he was wroth, *and greatly abhorred Israel:
60 So that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed among men;
61 And delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand.
62 He gave his people over also unto the sword: and was wroth with his inheritance.
63 The fire consumed their young men; and ᵐtheir maidens were not ‖given to marriage.
64 Their priests fell by the sword; and their widows made no lamentation.
65 Then the LORD awaked as one out of sleep, and like a mighty man that shouteth by reason of wine.
66 And he smote his enemies in the hinder part: he put them to a perpetual reproach.
67 Moreover he refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim:
68 But ⁿchose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion, which he loved.
69 And he built his sanctuary like high palaces,[10] like the earth which he hath ‖established for ever.
70 He ᵇchose David also his servant, and took him from the sheepfolds:
71 ‖From following ᵈthe ewes great with young, he brought him to ᶠfeed Jacob his people, and Israel his inheritance.
72 So he fed them according to the integrity of his heart: and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands.

PSALM LXXIX.

The psalmist complaineth of the desolation of Jerusalem, 1: he prayeth for deliverance, 8, and promiseth thankfulness, 13.

A Psalm *of Asaph.

O GOD, the heathen are come into thine inheritance; ᶜthy holy temple have they defiled; ᵈthey have laid Jerusalem on heaps.
2 The dead bodies of thy servants have they given to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven, the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth.
3 Their blood have they shed like water round about Jerusalem; and there was none to bury them.
4 We are become a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us.
5 ᵏHow long, LORD? ˡwilt thou be angry for ever? shall ᵐthy jealousy burn like fire?
6 ⁿPour out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee, and upon the kingdoms that have not called upon thy name.
7 For ʳthey have devoured Jacob, and ˢlaid waste his dwelling-place.
8 O remember not against us †former iniquities; ᵘlet thy tender mercies speedily prevent us; for we are brought very low.
9 Help us, O God of our salvation, ʸfor the glory of thy name; and deliver us, ᶻand purge away our sins, ᵃfor thy name's sake.
10 Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is their God? let him be known among the heathen in our sight, by the ‡revenging of the blood of thy servants which is shed.
11 Let the sighing of the prisoner come before thee; according to the greatness of §thy power ‖preserve thou those that are appointed to die;
12 And render unto our neighbours sevenfold into their bosom,[1] their reproach, wherewith they have reproached thee, O LORD.

kept off wild beasts, Zech. ii. 5. 3. How he furnished their camp with fresh water, in a dry and thirsty land where no water was; not by opening the bottles of heaven, (that had been a common way,) but by broaching a rock; ver. 15, 16, "He clave the rocks in the wilderness," which yielded water, though they were not capable of receiving it either from the clouds above or the springs beneath. Out of the dry and hard rock he gave them drink, not distilled as out of an alembic, drop by drop, but in streams "running down like rivers," and as out of the great depths. God gives abundantly, and is rich in mercy; he gives seasonably, and sometimes makes us to feel the want of mercies, that we may the better know the worth of them. This water, which God gave Israel out of the rock, was the more valuable, because it was spiritual drink, and that Rock was Christ.—Henry.

ISRAEL'S INGRATITUDE.—Ver. 17—31. Some time after the manna and the water from the rock had been vouchsafed, the people began again to murmur and rebel against God, and some of them were consumed by lightning; "and yet for all this his anger was not turned away," because they murmured still more. The table, which they insolently required, was not the manna, for that had been sent, with a multitude of quails also, before the water from the rock. But they loathed and despised manna as light bread; and wanted such provisions as the inhabitants of cultivated countries live upon, which they thought God could not provide in the desert. Perhaps they endeavoured to persuade themselves, that the manna, and the water from the rock, were supplied from natural resources, and only directed or regulated in a supernatural manner by JEHOVAH'S power: but they supposed it to be impossible even for Omnipotence to furnish bread and flesh to so vast a multitude. This conclusion, after all the works of God which they had witnessed, and his special favours and express promises to them, was exceedingly provoking; he therefore determined to vindicate the honour of his own name, by showing that he was able to feast, as well as feed them, in the wilderness; and then amidst their excessive indulgence, to punish their unbelief and rebellion, by cutting off the most powerful, healthy, and luxurious amongst them.—Scott.

THEIR CONTINUED PROVOCATIONS.—Ver. 40, 41. "How often did they provoke him in the wilderness!" Not once, or twice, but many a time; and the repetition of the provocation was a great aggravation of it, as well as the place, ver. 17. God kept an account how often they provoked him, though they did not, Num. xiv. 22, "They have tempted me these ten times." By provoking him they did not so much anger him as grieve him, for he looked upon them as his children, "Israel is my son, my first-born," and the undutiful, disrespectful behaviour of children does more grieve than anger the tender parents; they lay it to heart, and take it unkindly, Isa. i. 2. They grieved him, because they put him under the necessity of afflicting them; which he did not willingly. After they had humbled themselves before him, they "turned back and tempted God," as before, and "limited the Holy One of Israel," prescribing to him what proofs he should give of his power and presence with them, and what methods he should take in leading them and providing for them. They limited him to their way, and their time, as if he did not observe that they quarrelled with him. It is presumption for us to limit "the Holy One of Israel;" for, being "the Holy One," he will do what is most for his own glory; and, being "the Holy One of Israel," he will do what is most for their good; and we both impeach his wisdom, and betray our own pride and folly, if we go about to prescribe to him. That which occasioned their limiting God for the future, was, their forgetting of his former favours; ver. 42, "They remembered not his hand," how strong it is, and how it had been stretched out for them, nor "the day when he delivered them from the enemy," Pharaoh, that great enemy who sought their ruin.

GOD'S RETURNING LOVE.—We read not of their repentance and return to God, but God was "grieved for the miseries of Israel," Judges x. 16, and concerned for his own honour, "fearing the wrath of the enemy, lest they should behave themselves strangely," Deut. xxxii. 27. And therefore "then the Lord awaked as one out of sleep, and like a mighty man that shouteth by reason of wine," ver. 65; not only like one that is raised out of sleep, and recovers himself from the slumber which, by drinking, he was overcome with, who then regards that which before he seemed wholly to neglect, but like one that is refreshed with sleep, and whose heart is made glad by the sober and moderate use of wine, and is therefore the more lively and vigorous, and fit for business.—Henry.

PSALM LXXIX. ITS LEADING SENTIMENTS.—Ver. 1—5. This psalm unavoidably leads our thoughts to the Babylonish captivity: yet some think that it was written long before; the Holy Spirit directing the psalmist thus to furnish the church with proper meditations, in all such seasons of public calamity.—When Judah was desolated by hostile armies, the heathen possessed the inheritance which God had given his people. When Jerusalem was taken, the temple was profaned and destroyed; part of the inhabitants were buried in the ruins of the city; and others of them, whose blood was shed abundantly on every side, were left to be devoured by birds and beasts of prey: thus the people of JEHOVAH were exposed to reproach and contempt, because they had provoked him to jealousy by their idolatries. The case hath often been similar, when persecutors and corrupters of the faith have profaned the church, and murdered the saints of God. Ver. 8—13. The psalmist does not plead, as in some other places, that his people, though oppressed and persecuted, were free from the guilt of idolatry and other atrocious crimes; but, 16 It is burned with fire, it is cut down: they perish at the rebuke of thy countenance.

PSALM LXXXI.

An exhortation to a solemn praising of God, 1. God challengeth that duty by reason of his benefits, 4. God, exhorting his people to obedience, complaineth of their disobedience, which proveth their own hurt, 8.

To the chief Musician upon [a]Gittith, A Psalm [b]of Asaph.

[b]SING aloud unto God [c]our strength: [d]make a joyful noise unto [e]the God of Jacob.

2 Take [f]a psalm, and bring hither the timbrel, the pleasant harp with the psaltery.

3 Blow up the trumpet[1] in the new moon, in the time appointed, on our solemn feast day.

4 For this was a statute for Israel, and a law of the God of Jacob.

5 This he ordained [k]in Joseph for a testimony, when he went out †through the land of Egypt: where I heard a language that I understood not.

6 I removed his shoulder from the burden: his hands †were delivered from the ‡pots.[2]

7 Thou calledst in trouble, and I delivered thee; I answered thee in the secret place of thunder: I proved thee at the waters of [l]Meribah. Selah.

8 [a]Hear, O my people, and I will testify unto thee: O Israel, [b]if thou wilt hearken unto me;

9 There shall no [x]strange god be in thee; neither shalt thou worship any strange god.

10 [y]I am the LORD thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt: open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it.[3]

11 But my people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me.

12 So I gave them up unto ‡their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels.

13 Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways!

14 I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries.

15 [h]The haters of the LORD should have ‖submitted themselves unto him: but their time should have endured for ever.

16 He should have fed them also with the *finest of the wheat: and with honey out of the rock should I have satisfied thee.

allowing that they and their fathers had been so criminal as to deserve extirpation, (to which they seemed fast approaching,) he draws all his pleas from the compassion and tender mercies of God; from his regard, or rather zeal, for the honour of his name, which the idolaters would insolently blaspheme, if Israel should be destroyed; from the abject condition to which they were reduced, in which, unless prevented by speedy help, they must perish; from the greatness of JEHOVAH's power; and that he might still have a people to praise his name to the end of time.—The word rendered "purge away our sins," means cover them with an atonement.—No sacrifices were offered during the captivity, but this was a prayer for the restoration of the temple, and those expiatory oblations that typified the great atonement of Christ, which purgeth away the guilt of all believers, to the praise of the glory of God.—Scott.

PSALM LXXX. TITLE.—Many are of opinion, that this psalm was written at the time when Jerusalem was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar: but some think that it relates to the desolations made by Sennacherib. Because after the destruction of the city and temple by Nebuchadnezzar, God no longer "dwelt between the cherubim," above the mercy-seat, ver. 1, as the ark and mercy-seat, and the cherubim of gold, were destroyed, and never replaced; nor is the Lord, ever after that event, thus spoken of in Scripture; but Hezekiah, praying against Sennacherib, addressed God by this very title, Isa. xxxvii. 16, 17.—The Septuagint also expressly calls this, "A psalm against the Assyrian." Again, Ephraim and Manasseh, ver. 2, seem to have had but little concern in the affairs of Judah, at the time of the Babylonish captivity: but during the reign of Hezekiah, many of these, and the other tribes constituting the kingdom of Israel, accepted of his invitation, joined the Jews in keeping the passover, and afterwards assisted in breaking down the idolatrous high places and altars, not only in Judah, and in Benjamin as connected with Judah, but likewise in Ephraim and Manasseh.—Yet, soon after, Sennacherib invaded the land, reduced the remnant of the ten tribes to abject slavery, invaded Judah, and threatened to destroy Jerusalem and the temple. It was therefore natural, at this crisis, to implore that God would stir up his strength, and come to save Judah; and thus show his glory, in the presence of Benjamin, in whose lot part of Jerusalem and of the temple was situated; and also before Ephraim and Manasseh, to encourage them, and to show that God approved Hezekiah's zeal for reformation.

SCRIPTURE—AN EMBLEM OF THE CHURCH.—Ver. 8—13. The nation of Israel, brought [illegible] planted in Canaan, (the ancient inhabitants having been extirpated to [illegible] furnished with many great advantages, temporal and spiritual, [illegible] have represented under the emblem of a vine, planted in a well-cultivated vineyard. The people so multiplied and prospered, especially in the days of David and Solomon, that this vine, having taken deep root, overspread the whole country, from the Mediterranean sea to the Euphrates: and its luxuriant branches grew strong like cedars, or covered the cedars to the top, by clinging to them. But nothing is here said of its fruitfulness; for it brought forth wild grapes. This was the reason why the heathen were allowed to desolate the land, as a wild boar would waste a vineyard; why the Romans were afterwards permitted to destroy Jerusalem; and why the Lord took from the Jews their peculiar privileges, and conferred them on the Gentile churches.—The vine is a constant emblem of the church of Christ under every dispensation. It is a feeble tree, which needs support, and is of no value except for its excellent fruit. It produces a vast quantity of luxuriant branches, which not only yield no grapes, but must be pruned away, or they will hinder those upon the fruitful branches from ripening. Thus mere professors of Christianity are branches of the true vine, which must be taken away, and cast into the fire, in order that true believers may become more abundantly fruitful.—Scott.

PSALM LXXXI. ITS NATURE AND CONTENTS.—This psalm was penned, as is supposed, not upon occasion of any particular providence, but for the solemnity of a particular ordinance, either that of the new moon in general, or that of the feast of trumpets, on the new moon of the seventh month, Lev. xxiii. 24, Num. xxix. 1. When David, by the Spirit, introduced the singing of psalms into the temple-service, this psalm was intended for that day to excite and assist the proper devotions of it. All the psalms are profitable; but if one psalm be more suitable than another to the day, and the observance of it, we should choose that. The two great intentions of our religious assemblies, and which we ought to have in our eye in our attendance on them, are answered in this psalm, which are, to give glory to God, and to receive instruction from God; to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple: accordingly, by this psalm we are assisted, on our solemn feast-days, 1. In praising God for what he is to his people, ver. 1—3, and has done for them, ver. 4—7. 2. In teaching and admonishing one another concerning the obligations we lie under to God, ver. 8—10, the danger of revolting from him, ver. 11, 12, and the happiness we should have if we would but keep close to him, ver. 13—16. This, though applicable [illegible] written for our learning, and is therefore to be [illegible]

"If thou adherest to the worship of JEHOVAH alone, according to the terms of the national covenant, I will grant the largest desires of thy heart, and requests of thy lips."—According to the present translation of the ninth verse, the future is evidently put for the imperative; and it means, "Let no strange god," &c. "There will be no need, I will abundantly supply all thy wants; and the larger their desires and expectations were, and the more copious and comprehensive their prayers, the more abundantly would they receive from his all-sufficiency.—Scott.

PSALM LXXXII.—This psalm is calculated for the meridian of princes' courts, and courts of justice, not in Israel only, but in other nations; yet it was probably penned primarily for the use of the magistrates of Israel, the great sanhedrim, and their other elders, who were in places of power, and perhaps by David's direction. This psalm is designed to make kings wise, and to instruct the judges of the earth, as Ps. ii. 10, to tell them their duty, as 2 Sam xxiii. 3, and to tell them of their faults, as Ps. lviii. 1. We have here, 1. The dignity of magistracy, and its dependence upon God, ver. 1. 2. The duty of magistrates, ver. 3, 4. 3. The degeneracy of bad magistrates, and the mischiefs they do, ver. 2, 5. 4. Their doom read, ver. 6, 7. 5. The desire and prayer of all good people, that the kingdom of God may be set up more and more, ver. 8. Though magistrates may most closely apply this psalm to themselves, yet we may any of us sing it with understanding, when we give glory to God in singing it, as presiding in all public affairs, providing for the protection of injured innocency, and ready to punish the most powerful in justice, and when we comfort ourselves with the belief of his present government, and with the hopes of his future judgment.—Henry.

PSALM LXXXIII.—Ver. 1—4. It is generally, and with probability, conjectured, that this psalm was written (perhaps by some of Asaph's descendants,) in the reign of Jehoshaphat, when a most formidable confederacy was formed against him; and when Judah was invaded by a very large army composed of many nations, of whom the Moabites and Ammonites seem to have been the principal, and the others their allies: and it appears, that enmity to God and religion, excited by Jehoshaphat's zeal for reformation, had a considerable effect in exciting them against him. So that it was, in fact, the cause of God which they opposed; uniting crafty policy with powerful exertions, entirely to destroy his people, and to blot out the memorial of them from the earth. The term "hidden ones," seems to denote the Lord's peculiar people, who were hidden under his immediate protection from the devices of their enemies.—Some render the words "hidden things," understanding them of the treasures reposited in the treasuries of the temple. Ver. 6—8. Assur, (or the Assyrians,) was called in by the other confederates, as a powerful ally, to ensure the destruction of the hated nation. Ver. 9—11. Endor lay in the north of Canaan, near the place in which Sisera's army was destroyed.—Scott.

PSALM LXXXIV. THE ALTAR OF GOD.—Ver. 3. The psalmist seems here to envy the birds their privilege of building their nests at, or near to, the altars of God; (meaning the tabernacle or temple, where were the altar of burnt-offering and the altar of incense, while he was driven as an exile to a great distance from them. Yet, as it can scarcely be conceived, that the birds were left unmolested in their nests to hatch and brood their young at the altar of God in the days of David, it has been supposed that he only meant, that the birds found in their nests that tranquillity, repose, and satisfaction, which the ordinances of God had afforded him, but of which he was now deprived.

VALLEY OF BACA.—Ver. 6, 7. Some translate "Baca," weeping, or misery: and probably it was a dreary valley, through which from some parts of the land the people must pass, in going up to Jerusalem: but in one way or other, they, who from regard to the ordinances of God, encountered the difficulty, were carried well through it. The word rendered "the pools," signifies also blessings; and the clause may well be rendered, "The rain of blessings covereth them;" not only refreshing rain, in plenty, to cool the ground and supply them with waters, but also showers of "blessings," or heavenly consolations. Thus they were enabled to proceed with increasing vigour and alacrity, till each of them appeared before God in his courts on mount Zion.

GOD'S BLESSING.—Ver. 11, 12. The sun enlightens, warms, and fructifies the face of the earth: thus the Lord gives light, comfort, and fruitfulness to those on whom he shines with the beams of his saving grace. This sun may indeed be clouded or eclipsed; but it remains unchanged, and will soon burst forth again, as if with increasing splendour.—In this world the LORD gives "grace," which, as a sun, he ripens into "glory" in the world above; while, as a shield, he protects the happy man who trusts in him, against all assailants, however formidable; and withholds nothing truly good from any who walk before him in truth.—Scott.

PSALM LXXXV. UNION OF THE DIVINE ATTRIBUTES.—Ver. 10, 11. "Mercy and truth, righteousness and peace, kiss each other." This may be understood, 1. Of the

PSALM LXXXVI.

David strengtheneth his prayer by his consciousness of religion, 1: by God's power and goodness, 5: he desireth the continuance of his grace, 11: complaining of the proud, he craveth some tokens of God's favour, 14.

A Prayer of David *

[a]BOW down thine ear, O LORD, hear me: for I am poor and needy.

2 [c]Preserve my soul; for I am †holy: O thou my God, save thy servant that trusteth in thee.

3 [f]Be merciful unto me, O LORD: for I cry unto thee ‡daily.

4 Rejoice the soul of thy servant: for unto thee, O LORD, do I lift up my soul.

5 For thou, LORD, art good, and [l]ready to forgive; and [m]plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee.

6 Give ear, O LORD, unto my prayer; and attend to the voice of my supplications.

7 [p]In the day of my trouble I will call upon thee: for thou wilt answer me.

8 Among the gods[1] there is none like unto thee, O LORD; neither are there any works like unto thy works.

9 All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O LORD; and shall glorify thy name.

10 For thou art great, and doest wondrous things: thou art God alone.

11 [y]Teach me thy way, O LORD; I will walk in the truth: unite my heart to fear thy name.

12 I will praise thee, O LORD my God, *with all my heart: and [d]I will glorify thy name for evermore.

13 For great is thy mercy toward me: and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest §hell.[2]

14 O God, the proud are risen against me, and [b]the assemblies of ‖violent men have sought after my soul; and have not set thee before them.

15 But thou, O LORD, art a God full of compassion, and gracious, longsuffering, and plenteous in [l]mercy and truth.

16 O turn unto me, and have mercy upon me; give thy strength unto thy servant, and save [c]the son of thine handmaid.

17 Shew me a token[3] for good; that they which hate me may see it, and be ashamed: because thou, LORD, hast holpen me, and comforted me.

[a] How admirable is this celebrated personification of the Divine attributes! How just, elegant, and splendid does it appear, if applied only according to the literal sense, to the restoration of the Jewish nation from the Babylonish captivity; but if interpreted as relating to that more sacred mystical sense, which is not obscurely shadowed under the ostensible image, it is certainly uncommonly noble and elevated, mysterious and sublime.—BP. ## PSALM LXXXVII.

The seat and glory of the church, 1: the increase and honourable distinction of its members, 4.

A Psalm or Song * for the sons of Korah.

[a]HIS foundation is in [b]the holy mountains.[1]

2 The LORD loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob.

3 Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God. Selah.

4 I will make mention of [c]Rahab[2] and [f]Babylon to them that know me: behold Philistia, and [g]Tyre, with [h]Ethiopia; this man was born there.

5 And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her: and [i]the Highest himself shall establish her.

6 The LORD shall count, when he writeth up the people, that this man was born there. Selah.

7 As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there: all my springs are in thee.

PSALM LXXXVIII.

A prayer containing a grievous complaint.

A Song or Psalm * for the sons of Korah, to the chief Musician upon ‧Mahalath Leannoth, †Maschil of [b]Heman[1] the Ezrahite.

O LORD God of my salvation, [d]I have cried day and night before thee:

2 [e]Let my prayer come before thee: incline thine ear unto my cry;

3 For my soul is full of troubles; and [g]my life draweth nigh unto the grave.

4 I am counted with them that go down into the pit: I am as a man that hath no strength:

5 Free among the dead,[2] like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more: and they are cut off ‡from thy hand.

6 Thou hast laid me [n]in the lowest pit, [o]in darkness, [p]in the deeps.

7 Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Selah.

8 Thou hast put away mine acquaintance far from me; [t]thou hast made me an abomination unto them: [u]I am shut up, and I cannot come forth.

9 [x]Mine eye mourneth by reason of affliction: LORD, [y]I have called daily upon thee, [z]I have stretched out my hands unto thee.

10 Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? [b]shall the dead arise and praise thee? Selah.

11 Shall thy lovingkindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness [c]in destruction?

12 Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?

13 But unto thee have I cried, O LORD; and in the morning shall my prayer prevent thee.

14 LORD, [g]why castest thou off my soul? [h]why hidest thou thy face from me?

reformation of the people and of the government, in the administration of which all those graces should be conspicuous and commanding. The rulers and ruled shall all be merciful and true, righteous and peaceable; when there is no truth nor mercy, all goes to ruin, Hosea iv. 1; Isa. lix. 14, 15. 2. Of the return of God's favour, and the continuance of it thereupon. When a people return to God, and adhere to him in a way of duty, he will return to them, and abide with them, in a way of mercy. 3. Of the harmony of the divine attributes in the Messiah's undertaking. In him, who is both our Salvation and our Glory, "mercy and truth are met together;" God's mercy and truth, and his "righteousness and peace, have kissed each other;" that is, the great affair of our salvation is so well contrived, so well concerted, that God may have mercy upon poor sinners, and be at peace with them, without any wrong to his truth and righteousness. He is true to the threatening, and just in his government, and yet pardons sinners, and takes them into covenant with himself. Christ, as Mediator, brings heaven and earth together again, which sin had set at variance; through him "truth springs out of the earth," that truth which God "desires in the inward part," and then "righteousness looks down from heaven," for God is "just, and the Justifier of them which believe in Jesus," or it may denote, that, in the kingdom of the Messiah, these graces shall flourish and prevail, and have a universal command.—Henry.

PSALM LXXXVI. NONE LIKE UNTO GOD.—Ver. 8. 1. As a being of unparalleled perfection, such a one that there is none like him, nor any to be compared with him. Among the gods, the false gods, whom the heathens worshipped, the angels, the kings of the earth, among them all, "there is none like unto thee, O Lord;" none so wise, so mighty, so good; "neither are there any works like unto thy works;" which is an undeniable proof that there is none like him; his own works praise him, and the best way we have of praising him is by acknowledging that there is none like him. 2. As the Fountain of all being, and the Centre of all praise; ver. 9, "'Thou hast made all nations,' made them all of one blood, they all derive their being from thee, and have a constant dependence on thee, and therefore 'they shall come and worship before thee, and glorify thy name.'" This was in part fulfilled in the multitude of proselytes to the Jewish religion in the days of David and Solomon, but was to have its full accomplishment in the days of the Messiah, when some out of every kingdom and nation should be effectually brought in to praise God, Rev. vii. 9. It was by Christ that God made all nations, for without him was not any thing made that was made, and therefore, through Christ, by the power of his gospel and grace, all nations shall be brought to "worship before thee," Psalm xxii. 27. 3. As a Being infinitely great; ver. 10, "Therefore all nations shall worship before thee, because as 'King of nations' thou art great, thy sovereignty absolute and incontestable, thy majesty terrible and insupportable, thy power universal and irresistible, thy riches vast and inexhaustible, thy dominion boundless and unquestionable; and, for the proof of this, 'thou dost wondrous things,' which all nations admire, and whence they might easily infer that thou art God alone, not only none like thee, but none beside thee." Let us always entertain great thoughts of this great God, and be filled with holy admiration of this God who doeth wonders; and let him alone have our hearts, who is God alone.—Henry.

PSALM LXXXVII.—The foregoing psalm was very plain and easy, but in this are things dark and hard to be understood. It is an encomium of Zion, as a type and figure of the gospel church, to which what is here spoken is very applicable. Zion, for the temple's sake, is here preferred, 1. Before the rest of the land of Canaan, as being crowned with special tokens of God's favour, ver. 1—3. 2. Before any other place or country whatsoever, as being replenished with more eminent men, and with a greater plenty of divine blessings, ver. 4—7. Some think it was penned to express the joy of God's people when Zion was in a flourishing state; others think it was penned to encourage their faith and hope when Zion was in ruins, and was to be rebuilt, after the captivity; though no man cared for her, Jer. xxx. 17. This is Zion whom no man seeketh after; yet God had done great things for her, and spoken glorious things of her, which should all have had their perfection and accomplishment in the gospel church; to that therefore we must have an eye, in singing this psalm.—Henry.

PSALM LXXXVIII. TITLE.—It should seem by the titles of this and the following psalm, that Heman was the penman of the one, and Ethan of the other. There were two of these names, who were sons of Zerah the son of Judah, 1 Chron. ii. 4, 6. There were two others famed for wisdom, (1 Kings iv. 31,) where, to magnify Solomon's wisdom, he is said to be "wiser than Heman and Ethan." Whether the Heman and Ethan, who were Levites and precentors in the songs of Zion, were the same, we are not sure, nor which of these, nor whether any of these, were the penmen of these psalms; there was a Heman that was one of the chief singers, who is called "the king's seer or prophet," in the words of God, 1 Chron. xxv. 5; it is probable that this also was a seer, and yet could see no comfort for himself, an instructor and comforter of others, and yet himself putting comfort away from him.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The [illegible] faithfully reminded us of the [illegible]

15 I am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up: while I suffer thy terrors I am distracted.

run with patience the race that is set before us; looking unto Jesus . . . . who for the joy set before him endured the cross, and despised the shame." When his life drew nigh unto the grave, his soul was full of trouble; and his gloom was as deep, as could possibly consist with the perfect exercise of faith, hope, and love. The enmity and insult of those who "counted him with them that go down into the pit" of destruction, and despised him as one deprived of strength and help; his confinement, bonds, and stripes, and dying pains; the treachery, cowardice, and neglect of his disciples, professed friends and acquaintance; who either stood aloof from his sufferings, or turned away from him as an abomination, while his enemies compassed him about like floods of water, and all the hosts of hell assaulted his soul; formed a vast aggregate of sufferings beyond what human language can express. But the wrath of God infused the greatest bitterness into his cup; this lay hard upon him, and weighed him down into "the lowest pit, into darkness, and the deeps."—Scott.

PSALM LXXXIX. TITLE.—Many learned men are of opinion that this psalm was written during the Babylonish captivity, when, the family of David being entirely dethroned, the promises of God seemed to be made void: but if it were composed at so late a period, no account can be given why it was ascribed to Ethan the Ezrahite. Indeed, it seems to contain internal evidence that it belongs to earlier times: for none of the deliverances vouchsafed to the kings or people of Judah, after the days of David, are mentioned in it; and the psalmist, in complaining of the degraded and deplorable condition of David's family, is silent as to any desolations of Jerusalem and the temple, and the captivity and dispersion of the people; which the psalms evidently relating to Nebuchadnezzar's devastations particularly insist upon. It seems therefore to have been written on occasion of some events in which the honour and power of the kings of David's race were fallen, and apparently ruined; but, without either the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, or the captivity of the people; and what period so exactly suits this view of the subject, as the reign of Rehoboam? Ten of the tribes of Israel had revolted from him; Jeroboam, the king placed over them, was his powerful adversary; and Shishak, king of Egypt, so entirely reduced and impoverished him, that he only seems to have retained the kingdom by the clemency, and perhaps contempt, of his haughty conqueror.—It is probable that "Ethan the Ezrahite," lived in the reign of Solomon; and if he survived him, and witnessed these events, after having seen the glory and power of Solomon's kingdom, it would be very natural for him to lament the change, in the language made use of towards the close of the psalm.—As the preceding psalm, ascribed to Heman, seems to have been occasioned by his private trials and distresses, and yet was an evident prophecy of the sufferings of Christ; perhaps this psalm, occasioned by the calamities which had befallen David's race, may likewise be considered as a prophecy of the afflictions and persecutions to which the christian church has been exposed; especially the triumphs of the Roman antichrist.—Scott.

THE COVENANT.—Ver. 3. "'I have made a covenant,' and therefore will make it good." The covenant is made with David, the covenant of royalty is made with him, as the father of his family, and with his seed through him, and for his sake; representing the covenant of grace made with Christ as Head of the church, and with all believers as his spiritual seed. David is here called "God's chosen," and "his servant;" and, as God is not changeable to recede from his own choice, so he is not unrighteous to cast off one that served him. Two things encourage the psalmist to build his faith on this covenant; 1. The ratification of it; it was confirmed with an oath; "The Lord has sworn, and he will not repent." 2. The perpetuity of it; the blessings of the covenant were not only secured to David himself, but were entailed on his family; it was promised that his family should continue; "Thy seed will I establish for ever," so that "David shall not want a son to reign," Jer. xxxiii. 20, 21; and that it should continue a royal family; "I will build up thy throne to all generations," to all generations of time. This has its accomplishment only in Christ, of the seed of David, who lives for ever, to whom God has given the throne of his father David, and of the increase of whose government and peace there shall be no end.

THE JOYFUL SOUND.—Ver. 15. God's people "know the joyful sound." This may allude, 1. To the shout of a victorious army, the shout of a king, Num. xxiii. 21. Israel have the tokens of God's presence with them in their wars; the sound of the "going in the top of the mulberry trees," was indeed a "joyful sound," 2 Sam. v. 24, and they often returned making the earth ring with their songs of triumph; these were joyful sounds. It may allude, 2. To the sound that was made over the sacrifices, and on the solemn feast-day, Ps. lxxxi. 1—3. This was the happiness of Israel, that they had among them the free and open profession of God's holy religion, and abundance of joy in their sacrifices. It may allude, 3. To the sound of the jubilee trumpet; a joyful sound it was to servants and debtors, to whom it proclaimed release. The gospel is indeed a joyful sound; a sound of victory, of liberty, of communion with God, and the "sound of abundance of rain;" blessed are the people that hear it, and know it, and bid it welcome.

JESUS THE ANOINTED.—Ver. 20. David was mighty, a man of courage, and fit for business; he was chosen out of the people; not out of the princes, but the shepherds. God found him out, exalted him, and laid help upon him, and ordered Samuel to anoint

* A Prayer of Moses [a]the man of God.

LORD, thou hast been our dwelling-place[1] in †all generations.

2 [c]Before the mountains were brought forth, [d]or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even [e]from everlasting to everlasting, [f]thou art God.

3 Thou turnest man[2] to destruction; and sayest, Return, ye children of men.

4 For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it ‡is past, and as a watch in the night.

5 Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as a sleep: in the morning they are like grass which §groweth up.

6 In the morning it flourisheth, and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down, and withereth.

7 For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled.

8 Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, [h]our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.

9 For all our days are ‖passed away in thy wrath: we spend our years as *a tale that is told.

10 †The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.

11 Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.

12 So teach us to number our days, that we may *apply our hearts unto wisdom.

13 Return, O LORD, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.

14 O satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days.

15 [g]Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16 [1]Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

17 And let the beauty[3] of the LORD our God be upon us: and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.

PSALM XCI.

The state of the godly, 1: their safety, 3: their habitation, 9: their servants, 11: their friends; with the effects of them all, 14.

HE that dwelleth in the secret place[1] of the most High shall *abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

2 I will say of the LORD, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; *in him will I trust.

3 Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence.

4 He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust: [1]his truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

5 Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day;

6 Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday.

7 [p]A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee.

8 Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked.

9 Because thou hast made the LORD which is my refuge, even [t]the most High, thy habitation;

10 There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling.

11 For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.

12 They shall bear thee up in their hands, [b]lest thou dash thy foot against a stone.[2]

13 Thou shalt [c]tread upon the lion [d]and *adder: the young lion and [e]the dragon shalt thou trample under feet.

14 Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him: I will set him on high, because he hath known my name.

him. But this is especially to be applied to Christ. 1. He is one that is mighty, every way qualified for the great work he was to undertake, "able to save to the uttermost;" mighty in strength, for he is the Son of God; mighty in love, for he is able experimentally to compassionate those that are tempted. He is the "mighty God," Isa. ix. 6. 2. He is "chosen out of the people," one of us, bone of our bone, that takes part with us, of flesh and blood; being ordained for men, he is taken from among men, that his terror might not make us afraid. 3. God has found him. He is a Saviour of God's own providing, for the salvation, from first to last, is purely the Lord's doing; "he has found the ransom," Job xxxiii. 24. We could never have found a person fit to undertake this great work, Rev. v. 3, 4. 4. God has "laid help upon him;" not only helped him, but treasured up help in him for us; laid it as a charge upon him to help fallen man up again, to help the chosen remnant to heaven; "in me is thy help," Hos. xiii. 9. 5. He has exalted him, by constituting him the Prophet, Priest, and King of his church; clothing him with power, raising him from the dead, and setting him at his own right hand. Whom God chooses and uses he will exalt. 6. He has anointed him, has qualified him for his office, and so confirmed him in it, by giving him the Spirit, not by measure, but without measure, infinitely above his fellows. He is called Messiah, or Christ, the Anointed. 7. In all this he designed him to be his own servant, for the accomplishing of his eternal purpose, and the advancement of the interest of his kingdom among men.—Henry.

PSALM XC. TITLE.—"Moses the man of God," (the prophet Moses, and not one of the same name in after ages, as some have imagined,) may very reasonably be supposed to have composed this most instructive and affecting psalm, when the generation of Israel, which God had by him brought out of Egypt, was sentenced to fall in the wilderness, or when he had witnessed in a great degree the execution of that sentence. It is not indeed improbable that it was used at the tabernacle, as well as published among the people, during that solemn season, when death marched his rounds among them in so remarkable a manner. It seems to have been preserved along with the books of Moses, and afterwards to have been inserted in the book of psalms.—Scott.

OUR SHORT LIFE.—Ver. 10. Every year passed "as a tale that is told;" but what was the number of them? As they were vain, so they were few, 70 or 80 at most, which may be understood, either, 1. Of the lives of the Israelites in the wilderness; all those that were numbered when they came out of Egypt, above 20 years old, were to die within 38 years; they numbered those only that "were able to go forth to war," most of whom, we may suppose, were between 20 and 40, who therefore must have all died before 80 years old, and many before 60, and, perhaps, much sooner, which was far short of the years of the lives of their fathers. And those that lived to 70 or 80, yet, being under a sentence of consumption, and a melancholy despair of ever seeing through this wilderness state, their strength, their life, was nothing but "labour and sorrow," which otherwise would have been made a new life, by the joys of Canaan. See what work sin made. Or, 2. To the lives of men in general, ever since the days of Moses. Before Moses, it was usual for men to live about 100 years, or near 150; but since, 70 or 80 is the common stint, which few exceed, and multitudes never come near. If, by reason of a strong constitution, some reach to 80 years, yet their strength then is what they have little joy of, it does but serve to prolong their misery, and make their death the more tedious; for even "their strength then is labour and sorrow," much more their weakness; for the years are come which they have no pleasure in. Or, it may be taken thus: "Our years are 70, and the years of some, by reason of strength, are 80; but the breadth of our years, (for so the latter words signify, rather than strength,) the whole extent of them, from infancy to old age, is but labour and sorrow." In the sweat of our face we must eat bread, our whole life is toilsome and troublesome; and, perhaps, in the midst of the years we count upon, "it is soon cut off, and we fly away," and do not live out half our days.—Henry.

PSALM XCI. THE PESTILENCE—NO TERROR.—Ver. 5, 6. God will not only keep his people from evil, but from the fear of evil. Here is, 1. Great danger supposed, the mention of it is enough to frighten us; night and day we lie exposed, and those that are apt to be timorous, will, in neither period, think themselves safe. When we are retired into our chambers, our beds, and have made all as safe as we can about us, yet there is terror by night from thieves and robbers, winds and storms, beside those things that are the creatures of fancy and imagination, which are often most frightful of all; we read of "fear in the night," Cant. iii. 8. There is also a "pestilence that walketh in darkness," as that was which slew the first-born of the Egyptians, and the army of the Assyrians. No locks or bars can shut out diseases, while we carry about with us in our bodies the seeds of them. But surely in the day time, when we can look about us, we are not so much in danger; yes, there is an "arrow that flieth by day" too, and yet flies unseen; there is a destruction that wasteth at high noon, when we are awake, and have all our friends about us; even then we cannot secure ourselves, nor can they secure us. It was in the day-time that that pestilence wasted which was sent to chastise David for numbering the people, upon occasion of which some think this psalm was penned. But, 2. Here is great security promised to believers in the midst of this danger: "Thou shalt not be afraid,' God by his grace will keep thee from disquieting distrustful fear, (that fear which hath torment,) in the midst of the greatest dangers. Wisdom shall keep thee from being causelessly afraid, and faith shall keep thee from being inordinately afraid. Thou shalt not be afraid of the arrow, as knowing that, though it may hit thee, it cannot hurt thee; if it take away the natural life, yet it shall be so far from doing any prejudice to the spiritual life, that it shall be its perfection." A believer needs not fear, and therefore should not fear, any arrow, because the point is off, the poison is out; "O death, where is thy sting?" It is also under divine direction, and will hit where God appoints, and not otherwise. Every bullet has its commission. Whatever is done, our heavenly Father's will is done; and we have no reason to be afraid of that. —Henry.

PSALM XCII. A SABBATH PSALM.—This psalm was appointed to be sung, at least, it usually was sung, in the house of the sanctuary on the Sabbath-day, that day of rest, which was an instituted memorial of the work of creation, of God's rest from that work, and the continuance of it in his providence; for "the Father worketh hitherto." Note, 1. The Sabbath-day must be a day not only of holy rest, but of holy work, and the rest is in order to the work. 2. The proper work of the Sabbath is praising God; every Sabbath-day must be a thanksgiving day; and the other services of the day must be in order to this, and therefore must by no means thrust this into a corner.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—To praise the Lord Most High, and give thanks unto his name, is not only our bounden duty and reasonable service; but it is a most profitable, delightful, and honourable employment, by which we emulate the work of angels and anticipate the joys of heaven. Let us then seek to be planted by faith, and rooted, by love, "in the courts of the Lord;" that we may flourish, not merely in the leaves and blossoms of knowledge, profession, and discourse, but in the substantial fruits of a holy, useful, life; and this more and more, as we advance towards the close of our pilgrimage. Let us learn to detest the sentiment of many, who profess much zeal for the peculiar doctrines of the gospel, yet would persuade us, that believers generally grow less zealous as they grow older. It is true, that rash, indiscreet, and ostentatious earnestness will gradually be laid aside, to make way for more simple, humble, prudent zeal and diligence; but a real, evident, and permanent decrease in the substantial fruits of piety and charity, is enough to bring any man's former integrity into question, whatever his profession may have been.—Scott.

PSALM XCIII. CONTENTS.—This short psalm sets forth the honour of the kingdom of God among men, to his glory, the terror of his enemies, and the comfort of all his loving subjects. It relates both to the kingdom of his providence, by which he upholds and governs the world, and especially to the kingdom of his grace, by which he secures the church, sanctifies and preserves it. The administration of both these kingdoms is put into the hands of the Messiah, and to him, doubtless, the prophet here bears witness, and to his kingdom, speaking of it as present, because sure; and because, as the Eternal Word, even before his incarnation, he was Lord of all. Concerning God's kingdom, glorious things are here spoken. 1. Have other kings their royal robes? So has he, ver. 1. 2. Have they their throne? So has he, ver. 2. 3. Have they their enemies, whom they subdue and triumph over? So has he, ver. 3, 4. 4. Is it their honour to be faithful and holy? So is it his, ver. 5. In singing this psalm, we forget ourselves, if we forget Christ, to whom the Father has given all power both in heaven and in earth.—Henry.

PSALM XCIV. THEME.—Ver. 1—7. The writer of this psalm is not known; and though some parts of it answer very well to the conduct of Saul and his courtiers, especially in the slaughter, not only of the priests, but of their widows and fatherless children, and also that of the unoffending Gibeonites; yet it might equally suit many other corrupt times of the Jewish church, and of the Christian also.—Whatever persecutions, cruelties, and iniquities, the psalmist and his pious friends experienced or witnessed, they did not consider themselves as allowed to execute vengeance: but they called on "the God of revenges," (to whom it belonged to punish criminals and defend his people,) to appear in glory and majesty, and to recompense the blasphemies and proud boastings of their haughty persecutors. They were grieved and distressed, and thought it long, while they were compelled to hear and witness such triumphs and revilings of ungodly men, and to understand how they encouraged themselves in their detestable cruelties by atheistical principles. The last verses are future in the original, and in several versions, and may be thus explained: "Unless thou appear to execute vengeance, they will entirely crush thy people, and reduce thy heritage, the nation of Israel, to the deepest misery; for they are direct atheists, or at least they do not believe that God at all beholds, or regards, the actions of men, or will call them to account for any part of their conduct." "They say, JAH shall not see." Seeing the church was so sorely oppressed, it ought not to appear strange to us, if we see it so now: and therefore we must call on God to take our cause in hand. Ver. 8, 9. "Shall he not hear your blasphemies, who gave you the faculty of hearing? Shall he not see all you do, who gave you the power of seeing? Is it possible he should give to others what he wants himself?" "The psalmist uses the word planted to describe the situation of the ear: and the word formed, to denote the structure of the eye.—The mechanism of the ear is like a root planted in the earth, and concealed from view: whereas the ball of the eye is prominent on the face, and presented to general observation." [Harvey.]—Scott.

RIGHTEOUS RETRIBUTION.—God is, and will be, as a righteous Judge, the Patron and Protector of right, and the Punisher and Avenger of wrong; this the psalmist had both the assurance of and the experience of. 1. He will "right the injured," ver. 22. "When none else will, or can, or dare, shelter me, 'The Lord is my Defence,' to preserve me from the evil of my troubles, from sinking under them, and being ruined by them; and he is 'the Rock of my refuge,' in the clefts of which I may take shelter, and on the top of which I may set my feet, to be out of the reach of danger." 2. He will "reckon with the injurious," ver. 23; "He shall render to them their own iniquity;" he shall deal with them according to their deserts; and that very mischief which they did and designed against God's people, shall be brought upon themselves: it follows, "He shall cut them off in their wickedness.—Henry.

PSALM XCV. ITS AUTHOR.—This psalm has no title in the Hebrew: but the Septuagint calls it, "A psalm of David;" and the apostle sanctions this testimony by his manner of quoting it, "Wherefore as the Holy Ghost saith," &c. "Again he limiteth a certain day, saying in David," or "by David." This passage also manifestly shows, that the apostles considered the Jewish Scriptures as the language of the Holy Spirit, whoever committed that language to writing. The Holy Ghost spake by David.—The psalm appears to have been composed for the use of the Israelites as they ascended in companies to the sanctuary, or as soon as they entered into the courts of the Lord.—Scott.

PENALTY OF UNBELIEF.—Ver 11. "'Unto whom I sware in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest,' then say I am changeable and untrue:" see the sentence at large, Num. xiv. 21, &c. Observe, 1. Whence this sentence came; from the wrath of God; he "swore solemnly in his wrath," his just and holy wrath; but let not men therefore swear profanely in their wrath, their sinful, brutish wrath. God is not subject to such passions as we are; but he is said to be angry, very angry, at sin and sinners, to show the malignity of sin, and the justice of God's government. That is certainly an evil thing which deserves such a recompense of revenge as may be expected from a provoked Deity. 2. What it was; "That they should not enter into his rest," the rest which he had prepared and designed for them, a settlement for them [illegible] that none of them who were enrolled when they came out of Egypt, should be [illegible] in the roll of the living at their entering into Canaan, but Caleb and Joshua. 3. How it was ratified, "I swore it." It was not only a purpose, but a decree; the oath showed the "immutability of his counsel; the Lord swore, and will not repent:" it cut off the thought of any reserve of mercy. God's threatenings are as sure as his promises.—Henry.

PSALM XCVI. TITLE.—The Septuagint prefixes the following title to this psalm, "When the house was built after the captivity, an Ode of David." Hence it has been conjectured, that after the captivity, when the temple was finished, it was selected, (perhaps by Haggai or Zechariah,) from the rear of the song of praise, used by David at the removal of the ark; and that, some alterations having been made, it was appointed, as a proper expression of the people's thankful joy on that occasion. It is, however, generally allowed to contain a prediction of the Messiah's coming and kingdom, "A new Song:" "a song calculated to celebrate new mercies, prefigured by old ones wrought for Israel in former times: as a song fit for the voices of renewed and regenerate men to sing in the new Jerusalem, in 'those new heavens and that new earth,' which constitute the new creation, or kingdom of Jesus Christ." [Bp. Horne.]—Scott.

UNIVERSAL GLADNESS.—The whole creation will have reason to rejoice in the setting up of Christ's kingdom, even "the sea," and "the field;" for as by the sin of the first Adam the whole creation was made "subject to vanity," so by the grace of the second Adam it shall, some way or other, first or last, be "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God," Rom. viii. 20, 21. There will, in the first place, be "joy in heaven, joy in the presence of the angels of God;" for when the First-begotten was brought into the world, they sang their anthems to his praise, Luke ii. 14. God will graciously accept the holy joys and praises of all the hearty well-wishers to the kingdom of Christ, be their capacity ever so mean. "The sea" can but "roar," and how "the trees of the wood" can show that they "rejoice," I know not; but "he that searches the heart knows what is the mind of the Spirit," and understands the language, the broken language, of the weakest.—Henry.

PSALM XCVII. ITS NATURE.—The Septuagint entitles this "A psalm of David, after his land was restored to him," meaning that he composed it, when he was re-established in his government after Absalom's rebellion.—But whatever gave occasion to it, no doubt, "the Spirit of God speaking by" the psalmist, foretold the kingdom of Christ and his victories.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Under every dispensation, the counsels and dealings of the infinite God are [illegible]

Exhortation to praise God.

A Psalm.

O SING unto the LORD a new song, for he hath done marvellous things: his right hand, and his holy arm, hath gotten him the victory.

2 The LORD hath made known his salvation: his righteousness[1] hath he *openly shewed in the sight of the heathen.

3 He hath [f]remembered his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel: [g]all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God.

4 Make a joyful noise unto the LORD, all the earth; make a loud noise, and rejoice, and sing praise.

5 Sing unto the LORD [i]with the harp; with the harp, and the voice of a psalm.

6 With trumpets and sound of cornet make a joyful noise before the LORD, the King.

7 [m]Let the sea roar,[2] and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

8 Let [o]the floods clap their hands: [p]let the hills be joyful together

9 Before the LORD; for he cometh to judge the earth: with righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity.

PSALM XCIX.

The prophet, setting forth the kingdom of God in Zion, 1, exhorteth all, by the example of their forefathers, to worship God at his holy hill, 5.

THE LORD reigneth; let the people tremble: [c]he sitteth between the cherubims; [d]let the earth *be moved.

2 The LORD is [e]great in Zion; and he is high above all people.

3 Let them praise thy great and terrible name; [h]for it is holy.

4 The king's [i]strength also loveth judgment; [k]thou dost establish equity, thou [l]executest judgment and righteousness in Jacob.

5 Exalt ye the LORD our God, and worship at [n]his footstool; for †he is holy.

6 [o]Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among them that call upon his name; [p]they called upon the LORD, and he answered them.

7 He spake unto them [q]in the cloudy pillar:[1] [r]they kept his testimonies, and the ordinance that he gave them.

8 Thou answeredst them, O LORD our God: [s]thou wast a God that forgavest them, [t]though thou tookest vengeance of [u]their inventions.

9 Exalt the LORD our God, and worship at his holy hill; for the LORD our God is holy.

PSALM C.

An exhortation to praise God cheerfully, 1, for his greatness, 3, and for his power, 4.

David's vow and profession of godliness.

A Psalm of *Praise.

MAKE a joyful noise unto the LORD, all †ye lands.

2 [d]Serve the LORD with gladness: [e]come before his presence with singing.

3 Know ye that the LORD he is God: [g]it is he that hath made us, and [i]not we ourselves; we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.

4 [l]Enter into his gates[1] with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him, and bless his name.

5 For the LORD is good; his mercy is everlasting; [n]and his truth endureth to [s]all generations.

PSALM CI.

David maketh a vow and profession of godliness, 1: his manner with the wicked, &c., 5.

A Psalm of David.

I WILL sing of mercy and judgment: unto thee, O LORD, will I sing.

2 [c]I will behave myself wisely in a perfect way. [d]O when wilt thou come unto me? [e]I will walk within my house with a perfect heart.

3 I will set no *wicked thing before mine eyes: I hate the work of [i]them that turn aside; [k]it shall not cleave to me.

4 [l]A froward heart shall depart from me: I will not [m]know a wicked person.

5 Whoso [n]privily slandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off: him that hath [o]an high look and a proud heart will not I suffer.

6 Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh *in a perfect way, he shall serve me.

7 He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house: he that telleth lies shall not †tarry in my sight.

8 I will early destroy[1] all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the LORD.

PSALM CII.

The prophet in his prayer maketh a grievous complaint, 1: he taketh comfort in the eternity and mercy of God, 12. The mercies of God are to be recorded, 18. The prophet sustaineth his weakness by the unchangeableness of God, 23.

A prayer *of the afflicted, when he is [o]overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint before the LORD.

HEAR my prayer, O LORD, and let my cry come unto thee.

2 [e]Hide not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble; [f]incline thine ear unto me: in the day when I call, answer me speedily.

3 For my days are consumed †like smoke, and my bones are burned as an hearth.[1]

4 My heart is smitten, and [l]withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread.

see, and now we should believe, that when "clouds and darkness are round about him, righteousness and judgment are the basis of his throne."—It is, however, evident from history, that from time to time his wrath, like a consuming fire, hath gone "before him to burn up his enemies round about." When he comes in his power to set up his kingdom, all opposition must melt away like wax before the fire; and dismay and ruin must be the effects of obstinate rebellion against him; whilst the inhabitants of heaven will "adore his righteousness, and all the people shall see his glory."—Scott.

PSALM XCVIII. UNIVERSAL JOY IN GOD'S EQUITY AND COMING.—Ver. 7—9. Let the inferior creatures rejoice in it. This is to the same purport with what we had before, Ps. xcvi. 11—13. "Let the sea roar," and let that be called, not as it used to be, a "dreadful noise," but a "joyful noise;" for the coming of Christ, and the salvation wrought out by him, have quite altered the property of the troubles and terrors of this world, so that when the floods "lift up their voice, lift up their waves," we must not construe that to be the sea "roaring against us," but rather "rejoicing with us." Let "the floods" express their joy, as men do when they "clap their hands;" and let the hills that trembled for fear before God, when he came down to give the law at mount Sinai, dance for joy before him when his gospel is preached, and that word of the Lord goes forth from Zion in a still small voice; "Let the hills be joyful together before the Lord." This intimates that the kingdom of Christ would be a blessing to the whole creation; but that, as the inferior creatures declare the glory of the Creator, Ps. xix. 1, so they declare the glory of the Redeemer, for by him all things not only subsist in their being, but consist in their order. It intimates likewise, that the children of men would be wanting in paying their due respects to the Redeemer, and therefore that he must look for his honour from "the sea" and "the floods," which would shame the stupidity and ingratitude of mankind.—Henry.

PSALM XCIX. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—JEHOVAH reigning on a mercy-seat may be viewed with joy by all his faithful subjects; but his great salvation will aggravate the guilt of obstinate rebels: and as hitherto the greatest number, even of those who have heard the gospel, have continued impenitent and unbelieving, the inhabitants of the earth have abundant cause to tremble at the report of the Redeemer's absolute authority and almighty power. But he still "waiteth to be gracious:" let then all who hear take warning and seek his mercy.—Our God is "great in Zion, and high above all people;" and the chief of sinners may yet rejoice, and praise his great and terrible name: though "he is holy," yea, because he is holy. His power is exercised in perfect wisdom and justice; and, while he executes just punishment on his enemies, he most delighteth in showing mercy to the humbled transgressor. As he loveth judgment and righteousness in his own administration, so he establisheth equity amongst his subjects, and requireth them to be holy because he is holy. His worshippers must bow before him in humility and reverence, and seek conformity to him; whilst they exalt him by their adorations, and give him the glory of their salvation.—There have always, however, been many professed worshippers of God, who have neither believed his truths nor obeyed his will; and there is so much faulty in all of us, that our persons and services might justly be rejected by him.—Scott.

PSALM C.—It is with good reason that many sing this psalm very frequently in their religious assemblies, for it is very proper both to express and to excite pious and devout affections towards God in our approach to him in holy ordinances: and if our hearts go along with the words, we shall make melody in it to the Lord. The Jews say it was penned to be sung with their thank-offerings; perhaps it was; but we say that as there is nothing in it peculiar to their economy, so its beginning with a call to all lands to praise God, plainly extends it to the gospel-church. Here, 1. We are called upon to praise God and rejoice in him, ver. 1, 2, 4. 2. We are furnished with matter for praise; we must praise him, considering his being and relation to us, ver. 3, and his mercy and truth, ver. 5. These are plain and common things, and therefore the more fit to be the matter of devotion.—Henry.

PSALM CI. DAVID'S HOLY RESOLUTION.—Ver. 2. We have here, 1. A good purpose concerning his conversation—concerning his conversation in general, how he would behave himself in every thing; he would live by rule, and not at large, not walk at all adventures: he would, though a king, by a solemn covenant, bind himself to his good behaviour—and concerning his conversation in his family particularly, not only how he would walk when he appeared in public, when he sat in the throne, but how he would "walk within his house," where he was more out of the eye of the world, but where he still saw himself under the eye of God. When David had his hands full of public affairs, yet he returned to bless his house, 2 Sam. vi. 20. He resolves, 1. To act conscientiously, and with integrity, to "walk in a perfect way," in the way of God's commandments, that is, "a perfect way," for "the law of the Lord is perfect." This he will walk in, "with a perfect heart," with all sincerity, not dissembling either with God or men. When we make the word of God our rule, and are ruled by it, the glory of God our end, and aim at it, then we walk "in a perfect way, with a perfect

PSALM CIII.

An exhortation to bless God for his mercy.

A Psalm of David.

BLESS [a]the LORD, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name.

2 Bless the LORD, O my soul, and [d]forget not all his benefits:

3 Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases;

4 Who [e]redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with lovingkindness and tender mercies;

5 Who [f]satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.[1]

6 The LORD executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed.

7 He made known his ways unto Moses, [g]his acts unto the children of Israel.

8 The LORD is merciful and gracious, [h]slow to anger, and *plenteous in mercy.

9 He will not always chide;[2] neither will he keep his anger for ever.

10 He hath not [r]dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities.

11 [s]For †as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him.

12 As far [t]as the east is from the west,[3] [x]so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.

13 Like as a father pitieth his children, so the LORD pitieth them that fear him.

14 For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that [b]we are dust.

15 As for man, his days are as grass: as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth.

16 For the wind passeth over it, and ‡it is gone; [c]and the place thereof shall know it no more.

17 But the mercy of the LORD is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness [i]unto children's children;

18 To such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.

19 The LORD hath [m]prepared his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all.

20 Bless the LORD, ye his angels, §that excel in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word.

21 Bless ye the LORD, [q]all ye his hosts; ye [r]ministers of his, that do his pleasure.

22 Bless the LORD, all his works in all places of his dominion: bless the LORD, O my soul.

heart." 2. To act considerately, and with discretion; "I will behave myself wisely; I will understand," or "instruct myself" in a perfect way; so some. I will walk circumspectly. Note, We must all resolve to walk by the rules of Christian prudence in the ways of Christian piety.—Henry.

PSALM CII. REBUILDING OF ZION.—Ver. 13—22. God had, by his prophet Jeremiah fixed a time for liberating the captive Jews, and for rebuilding the city and the temple: that time was come; and this excited the prayers of believers, who favoured the very dust and stones of Zion for the sake of the temple which had stood upon it. In their destitute and forlorn condition, they not only "groaned, being burdened" with the oppression and persecution of those who detained them prisoners; but they were instant in prayers, which doubtless they accompanied with humiliation for their sins. These prayers the Lord would not despise; but in answer to them, as one who "looked down from his holy heaven," he would surely appear for their release: and when he had conducted them to Jerusalem, they would there declare his name and his praise. Under his protection, and by his assistance, the temple would be rebuilt upon mount Zion: when he would appear so glorious in his power, truth, and love, that the heathen would fear his wrath, and all kings around him would stand in awe of his glory; many people would gather together out of the adjacent kingdoms to serve the Lord; and these events would be recorded for the edification of future ages, and of other nations, which should at length be brought into the church by the new-creating power of God. But this prophecy will have a more full accomplishment, when the Jews shall be converted to Christianity, and gathered from their dispersions; when the tedious captivity of the church, under the New Testament Babylon, shall finally be terminated; and when the fulness of the Gentiles, with all their kings and kingdoms, shall be brought into the church.—The old version of the fifteenth and two following verses is quite literal, and very expressive. "Then the heathen shall fear the LORD, and all the kings of the earth thy glory: when the LORD shall build up Zion, and shall appear in his glory; and shall turn unto the prayer of the desolate, and not despise their prayer."—"Shall praise the LORD," ver. 18, "JAH-Jehallelu-JAH."—Scott.

GOD UNCHANGEABLE.—God and the world, Christ and the creature, are rivals for the innermost and uppermost place in the soul of man, the immortal soul; now what is here said, one would think, were enough to decide the controversy immediately, and to determine it for God and Christ. For, 1. A portion in the creature is fading and dying; "[illegible]," they will not last so long as we shall last; the day is coming when "the [illegible] and the works that are therein shall be burnt up;" and then what will become of those that have laid up their treasure in it? Heaven and earth shall "wax old as a garment;" not by a gradual decay, but when the set time comes, they shall be set aside like an old garment that we have no more occasion for; "As a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed;" not annihilated, but altered, it may be, so that they shall not be at all the same, but "new heavens and a new earth." See God's sovereign dominion over heaven and earth; he can change them as he pleases, and when he pleases, and the constant changes they are subject to, in the revolutions of day and night, summer and winter, are earnests of their last and final change, when "the heavens" and "time shall be no more." 2. A portion in God is perpetual and everlasting; "Thou art the same," subject to no change; and "thy years have no end," ver. 27. Christ will be the same in the performance that he was in the promise; the same to his church in captivity that he was to his church at liberty.—Henry.

PSALM CIII. CATALOGUE OF DIVINE MERCIES.—Ver. 3. "Come, my soul, consider what God has done for thee." 1. "He has pardoned thy sins, he has forgiven, 'and does forgive, all thine iniquities.'" This is mentioned first, because, by the pardon of sin, that is taken away which kept good things from us, and we are restored to the favour of God, which bestows good things on us. Think what the provocation was, it was iniquity, and yet pardoned: how many the provocations were, and yet all pardoned; "He has forgiven all our trespasses." It is a continued act; he is still forgiving, as we are still sinning and repenting. 2. "He has cured thy sickness." The corruption of nature is the sickness of the soul, it is its disorder, and threatens its death; this is cured in sanctification; when sin is mortified, the disease is healed; though complicated, it is all healed. Our crimes were capital, but God saves our lives by pardoning them; our diseases were mortal, but God saves our lives by healing them. 3. "He has rescued thee from danger." A man may be in peril of life, not only by his crimes, or his diseases, but by the power of his enemies; and therefore here also we experience the divine goodness; "Who redeemeth thy life from destruction," ver. 4, from the destroyer: "from hell," so the Chaldee; from the second death. The redemption of the soul is precious, we cannot compass it, and therefore are the more indebted to divine grace that has wrought it out, to him who has obtained "eternal redemption for us." See Job xxxiii. 24, 28. 4. "He has not only saved thee from death and ruin, but has made thee truly and completely happy, with honour, pleasure, and long life." (1.) "He has given thee true honour and great honour, no less than a crown; 'He crowns thee with' [illegible] and what greater dignity is a [illegible] and favour of God? "This [illegible]

BLESS the LORD, O my soul. O LORD my God, [c]thou art very great; [d]thou art clothed with honour and majesty.

2 Who coverest thyself with light as with a garment: who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain:[1]

3 Who [h]layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters: who maketh the clouds his chariot: [k]who walketh upon the wings of the wind:

4 Who [l]maketh his angels spirits; [m]his ministers a flaming fire:

5 * Who laid the foundations of the earth, that it should not be removed for ever.

6 Thou [p]coveredst it with the deep as with a garment: the waters stood above the mountains.

7 [q]At thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away.

8 †They go up by the mountains;[2] they go down by the valleys unto the place which thou hast founded for them.

9 Thou hast set a bound that they may not pass over; that they turn not again to cover the earth.

10 ‡He sendeth the springs into the valleys, which §run among the hills.

11 They [x]give drink to every beast of the field: the wild asses ‖quench their thirst.

12 By them shall the fowls of the heaven have their habitation, which *sing among the branches.

13 He [a]watereth the hills from his chambers: the earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy works.

14 He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man: that he may bring forth food out of the earth;

15 And wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and †oil to [h]make his face to shine, and bread which strengtheneth man's heart.

16 The trees of the LORD are full of sap; the cedars of Lebanon, which he hath planted;

17 Where the birds make their nests: as for the stork,[3] the fir trees are her house.

18 The high hills are a refuge for the wild goats; and the rocks for °the conies.

19 He appointed the moon for seasons; the sun knoweth his going down.

20 Thou [q]makest darkness, and it is night; wherein all the beasts ‡of the forest do creep forth.

21 [r]The young lions roar after their prey, and [s]seek[4] their meat from God.

22 The sun ariseth, they gather themselves together, and lay them down in their dens.

23 [u]Man goeth forth unto his work and to his labour until the evening.

24 O LORD, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches:

25 So is [a]this great and wide sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts.

26 [c]There go the ships; there is that [d]leviathan,[5] whom thou hast §made [e]to play therein.

27 These wait all upon thee; that thou mayest give them their meat in due season.

28 That thou givest them they gather: thou openest thine hand, they are filled with good.

29 Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled: [h]thou takest away their breath, they die, and [i]return to their dust.

30 Thou sendest forth thy spirit,[6] they are created: and thou [l]renewest the face of the earth.

31 The glory of the LORD shall ‖endure for ever: the LORD shall rejoice in his works.

32 He °looketh on the earth, and it trembleth: [p]he toucheth the hills, and they smoke.

33 I will sing unto the LORD as long as I live: I will sing praise to my God, while I have my being.

34 My [r]meditation of him shall be sweet: [s]I will be glad in the LORD.

35 Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more. Bless thou the LORD, O my soul. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CV.

An exhortation to praise God, to seek him, and remember his works, 1. God's providence over Abraham, 8, over Joseph, 16, over Israel in Egypt, 23, over Moses delivering the Israelites, 26, and over his people brought out of Egypt, fed in the wilderness, and planted in Canaan, 37.

O GIVE thanks unto the LORD; call upon his name: make known his deeds among the people.

2 Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him: [e]talk ye of all his wondrous works.

3 [f]Glory ye in his holy name: [g]let the heart of them rejoice that seek the LORD.

4 [h]Seek the LORD, and his strength: seek his face evermore.[1]

5 [l]Remember his marvellous works that he hath done; his wonders, and [m]the judgments of his mouth;[2]

6 O ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob °his chosen.

7 He is the LORD our God: his judgments are in all the earth.

8 [r]He hath remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to [s]a thousand generations.

9 Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac;

10 And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant;

but God's favour? (2.) "He has given thee true pleasure; 'He satisfies thy mouth with good things,'" ver. 5. It is only the favour and grace of God that can give satisfaction to a soul, can suit its capacities, supply its needs, and answer to its desires, nothing but divine wisdom can undertake to "fill its treasures," Prov. viii. 28; other things will surfeit but not satiate, Eccl. vi. 7, Isa. lv. 2. (3.) "He has given thee a prospect and pledge of long life; 'Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.'" The eagle is long lived, and, as naturalists say, when she is near 100 years old, casts all her feathers, (as, indeed, she changes them in a great measure every year, at moulting time,) and fresh ones come, so that she becomes young again. When God, by the graces and comforts of his Spirit, recovers his people from their decays, and fills them with new life and joy, which is to them an earnest of eternal life and joy, then they may be said "to return to the days of their youth," Job xxxiii. 25.—Henry.

PSALM CIV. GOD'S GLORY.—Ver. 1—4. In these verses, 1. The psalmist looks up to the divine glory shining in the upper world, of which, though it is one of the things not seen, faith is the evidence. With what reverence and holy awe does he begin his meditation with that acknowledgment, "O Lord, my God, thou art very great!" It is the joy of the saints, that he who is their God is a great God; the grandeur of the prince is the pride and pleasure of all his good subjects. The majesty of God is here set forth by divers instances, alluding to the figure which great princes in their public appearances covet to make; their equipage, compared with his, (even of the eastern kings, who most affected pomp,) is but as the light of a glow-worm compared with that of the sun when he goes forth in his strength. Princes appear great, 1. In their robes: and what are God's robes? "Thou art clothed with honour and majesty," ver. 1. God is seen in his works, and these bespeak him infinitely wise and good, and all that is great. Thou "coverest thyself with light, as with a garment," ver. 2. God "is light," (1 John i. 5,) the "Father of lights;" (Jam. i. 17,) he "dwells in light," (1 Tim. vi. 16,) he clothes himself with it. The residence of his glory is in the highest heaven, that light which was created the first day, Gen. i. 3. Of all visible beings, light comes nearest to the nature of a spirit, and therefore with that God is pleased to cover himself, that is, to reveal himself under that similitude, as men are seen in the clothes with which they cover themselves; and so only, for his face cannot be seen. 2. In their palaces, or pavilions, when they take the field: and what is God's palace, and his pavilion? He "stretches out the heavens like a curtain," ver. 2; so he did at first, when he made the firmament, which in the Hebrew has its name from its being expanded or "stretched out," Gen. i. 7. He made it to divide the waters as a curtain divides between two apartments: so he does still; he now "stretches out the heavens like a curtain," keeps them upon the stretch, and they "continue to this day according to his ordinance." 3. In their coaches of state, and their stately horses, which add much to the magnificence of their entries; but God "makes the clouds his chariots," in which he rides strongly, swiftly, and far above, out of the reach of opposition, when at any time he will act by uncommon providences in the government of this world. 4. In their retinue or train of attendants: and here also God is very great; for, ver. 4, he "maketh his angels spirits."

LIFE AND BEAUTY OF CREATION.—Ver. 30. "Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created;" the same spirit, the same divine will and power, by which they were all created at first, still preserves the several sorts of creatures in their being, and place, and usefulness; so that, though one generation of them passes away, another comes, and from time to time they are created; new ones rise up instead of the old ones, and this is a continual creation. Thus the "face of the earth is renewed" from day to day by the light of the sun, which beautifies it anew every morning; from year to year by the products of it, which enrich it anew every spring, and put quite another face upon it from what it had all winter. The world is as full of creatures as if none died, for the place of those that die is filled up. This (the Jews say) is to be applied to the resurrection, which every spring is an emblem of, when a new world rises out of the ashes of the old one. In the midst of this discourse the psalmist breaks out into wonder at the works of God, ver. 24, "O Lord, how manifold are thy works!" They are numerous, they are various, of many kinds, and many of every kind; and yet "in wisdom hast thou made them all." When men undertake many works, and of different kinds, commonly some of them are neglected, and not done with due care; but God's works, though many, and of very different kinds, are all made in wisdom, and with the greatest exactness, there is not the least flaw or defect in them. The works of art, the more closely they are looked upon with the help of microscopes, the more rough they appear; the works of nature through these glasses appear more fine and exact. They are all made in wisdom, for they are all made to answer the end they were designed to serve, the good of the universe, in order to the glory of the universal Monarch.—Henry.

PSALM CV. SEEKING GOD AND ITS RESULTS.—Ver. 4. "Seek him;" place your happiness in him and then pursue that happiness in all the ways that he has appointed. "Seek the Lord and his strength," that is, the "ark of his strength;" seek him in the sanctuary, in the way wherein he has appointed us to seek him. "Seek his strength," that is, his grace, the strength of his Spirit, to work in you that which is good, which we cannot do but by strength derived from him, for which he will be inquired of. "Seek the Lord,

PSALM CVI.

The psalmist exhorteth to praise God, 1: he prayeth to share in his people's joy, as God dealt with the fathers, 4. The history of the people's rebellion, and God's mercy, 6: he concludeth with prayer and a blessing, 47.

*PRAISE ye the LORD: O give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

2 Who can utter the mighty acts of the LORD? who can shew forth [d]all his praise?

3 Blessed are they that [f]keep judgment, and he that doeth righteousness at all times.

4 Remember me, O LORD, with the favour that thou bearest unto thy people: O [k]visit me with thy salvation;

5 That I may see the good of thy chosen, that I may rejoice in the gladness of thy nation, that [n]I may glory with thine inheritance.

6 We have [o]sinned with our fathers,[1] we have committed iniquity, we have done wickedly.

7 Our fathers understood not thy wonders in Egypt; they remembered not [r]the multitude of thy mercies; but [s]provoked him at the sea, even at the Red sea.

8 Nevertheless [t]he saved them for his name's sake, that he might make his mighty power to be known.

9 He rebuked the Red sea also, and it was dried up: so he led them through the depths as through the wilderness.

10 And he saved them from the hand of him that hated them, and redeemed them from the hand of the enemy.

11 And the waters covered their enemies: there was not one of them left.

12 Then believed they his words; they sang his praise.

13 [d]They [†]soon forgat his works; [e]they waited not for his counsel:[2]

14 [f]But [‡]lusted exceedingly in the wilderness, [g]and tempted God in the desert.

15 And he gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul.

16 They envied Moses also in the camp, and Aaron [k]the saint of the LORD.

17 The earth opened and swallowed up Dathan, and covered the company of Abiram.[3] and be strengthened:" so divers ancient versions read it. They that would be "strengthened in the inward man," must fetch in strength from God by faith and prayer. Seek "his strength," and then "seek his face;" for by his strength we hope to prevail with him for his favour, as Jacob did, Hos. xii. 3. "'Seek his face evermore;' seek to have his favour to eternity, and therefore continue seeking it to the end of the time of your probation. Seek it while you live in this world, and you shall have it while you live in the other world, and even there shall be for ever seeking it, in an infinite progression, and yet be for ever satisfied in it." 7. "Let the hearts of those rejoice that do seek him," ver. 3, for they have chosen well, are well fixed, and well employed, and they may be sure that their labour will not be in vain; for he will not only be found, but he will be found the "Rewarder of those that diligently seek him." If those have reason to rejoice that "seek the Lord," much more those that have "found him."

GOD'S KINDNESS TO THE PATRIARCHS.—Ver. 9—15. To the three renowned patriarchs, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, God's promises were very rich; again and again he told them he would be their God; but his performances in this world were so little proportionable, that if he had not "prepared for them a city" in the other world, he would have been "ashamed to have been called their God," (see Heb. xi. 16,) because he was always generous; and yet, even in this world, he was not wanting to them, but, that he might appear to do uncommon things for them, he exercised them with uncommon trials. 1. They were few, very few: Abraham was called alone, Isa. li. 2; he had but two sons, and one of them he cast out; Isaac had but two, and one of them was forced for many years to run his country; Jacob had more, but some of them, instead of being a defence to him, exposed him, when (as he himself pleads, Gen. xxxiv. 30,) he was but few in number, and therefore might easily be destroyed by the natives, he and his house. God's chosen are but a little flock, few, very few; and yet upheld, 2. They were strangers, and therefore were the more likely to be abused and to meet with strange usage, and the less able to help themselves. Their religion made them to be looked upon as strangers, 1 Pet. iv. 4, and to be hooted at as "speckled birds," Jer. xii. 9. Though the whole land was theirs by promise, yet they were so far from producing and pleading their grant, that they "confessed themselves strangers in it," Heb. xi. 13. 3. They were unsettled, ver. 13, "They went from one nation to another," from one part of that land to another, (for it was then in the holding and occupation of divers nations, Gen. xii. 8; xiii. 3, 18,) nay, "from one kingdom to another people," from Canaan to Egypt, from Egypt to the land of the Philistines, which could not but weaken and straighten; yet they were forced to it by famine. Note, Though frequent removals are neither desirable nor commendable, yet sometimes there is a just and necessary occasion for them, and they may be the lot of some of the best men.

REASONS OF GOD'S KINDNESS.—Ver. 45. Because he would have them to perform the precepts of the word, to bind them to which was the greatest kindness he could put upon them. He put them in possession of Canaan, not that they might live in plenty and pleasure, in ease and honour, and might make a figure among the nations, but "that they might observe his statutes and keep his laws;" that, being formed into a people, they might be under God's immediate government, and revealed religion might be the basis of their national constitution; that, having a good land given them, they might out of the profits of it bring sacrifices to God's altar: and that, God having thus done them good, they might the more cheerfully receive his law, concluding that also designed for their good, and might be sensible of their obligations in gratitude to live in obedience to him. We are therefore made, maintained, and redeemed, that we may live in obedience to the will of God; and the hallelujah with which the psalm concludes, may be taken both as a thankful acknowledgment of God's favours, and as a cheerful concurrence with this great intention of them. Has God done so much for us, and yet does he expect so little from us? "Praise ye the Lord."—Henry.

PSALM CVI. DUTY OF SERVING GOD.—We are here taught to bless God, ver. 1, 2. "Praise ye the Lord," that is, 1. Give him thanks for his goodness, the manifestation of it to us, and the many instances of it. "He is good," and "his mercy endures for ever;" let us therefore own our obligations to him, and make him a return of our best affections and services. 2. Give him the glory of his greatness: his "mighty acts," proofs of his almighty power, wherein he has done great things, and such as would be opposed. "Who can utter these?" Who is worthy to do it? Who is able to do it? They are so many that they cannot be numbered, so mysterious, that they cannot be described; when we have said the most we can of the mighty acts of the Lord, the one half is not told, still there is more to be said; it is a subject that cannot be exhausted. We must "show forth his praise;" we may show forth some of it, but "who can show forth all?" Not the angels themselves. This will not excuse us in not doing what we can, but should quicken us to do all we can.

ANCIENT MIRACLE.—Ver. 8—11. 1. God forced a passage for them through the sea; "He rebuked the Red sea" for standing in their way and retarding their march, "and it was dried up" immediately; as in the creation, "at God's rebuke the waters fled," Ps. civ. 7. Nay, he not only prepared them a way, but, by the pillar of cloud and fire, "led them" into the sea, and, by that conduct, [illegible]

18 And a fire was kindled in their company; the flame burned up the wicked.

19 They [n]made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten image.

20 Thus they changed their glory [p]into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass.

21 They forgat [r]God their saviour, which had done great things in Egypt;

22 [t]Wondrous works in the land of Ham, and [u]terrible things by the Red sea.

23 Therefore he said that he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen[4] [x]stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them.

24 Yea, they despised *the [b]pleasant land, [c]they believed not his word:

25 But [d]murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the LORD.

26 Therefore he [g]lifted up his hand against them, to overthrow them in the wilderness:

27 To †overthrow their seed also among the nations, and [h]to scatter them in the lands.

28 They joined themselves also unto [k]Baal-peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead.[5]

29 Thus they provoked him to anger with their inventions: and [m]the plague brake in upon them.

30 Then [n]stood up Phinehas, and executed judgment: and so the plague was stayed.

31 And that was counted unto him for righteousness unto all generations for evermore.

32 They [p]angered him also at the waters of strife, so that it went ill with Moses for their sakes:

33 Because they provoked his spirit, so that [s]he spake unadvisedly with his lips.

34 They did not destroy the nations, concerning whom the LORD commanded them:

35 But were mingled among the heathen, and learned their works.

36 And [z]they served their idols: which were a snare unto them.

37 Yea, [b]they sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto [c]devils,

38 And [d]shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan: and [e]the land was polluted with blood.

39 Thus were they defiled[6] with their own works, and [g]went a whoring with their own inventions.

40 Therefore was the wrath of the LORD kindled against his people, insomuch that he abhorred [i]his own inheritance.

41 And he gave them into the hand of the heathen; and they that hated them ruled over them.

42 Their enemies also oppressed them, and they were brought into subjection under their hand.

43 Many times did he deliver them; but they provoked him with their counsel; and were *brought low for their iniquity.

44 Nevertheless [q]he regarded their affliction, when he heard their cry:

45 And he remembered for them his covenant, and repented according to [t]the multitude of his mercies.

46 [u]He made them also to be pitied of all those that carried them captives.

47 [x]Save us, O LORD our God, and [y]gather us from among the heathen,[7] [z]to give thanks unto thy holy name, and to triumph in thy praise.

48 Blessed be the LORD God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting: and let all the people say, Amen. †Praise ye the LORD.

O GIVE thanks unto the LORD, for he is [b]good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

2 Let [d]the redeemed of the LORD say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy;

3 And gathered them out of the lands, from the east, and from the west, from the north, and *from the south.

4 They [g]wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way; they found no city to dwell in.

5 [h]Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them.

6 Then [i]they cried unto the LORD in their trouble, and [k]he delivered them out of their distresses.

7 And he led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation.[1]

8 Oh that men would [o]praise the LORD for his goodness, and for [p]his wonderful works to the children of men!

9 For he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness.

10 Such as sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, being [s]bound in affliction and iron;[2]

11 Because they rebelled against the words of God, and [u]contemned the counsel of the most High:

12 Therefore he brought down their heart with labour; they fell down, [y]and there was none to help.

13 Then they cried unto the LORD in their trouble, and he saved them out of their distresses.

14 He [a]brought them out of darkness and the shadow of death, and [b]brake their bands in sunder.

15 Oh [c]that men would praise the LORD

as "through the wilderness:" he encouraged him to take those steps, and subdued their fears, when those were their most dangerous and threatening enemies. See Isa. lxiii. 12—14. 2. He interposed between them and their pursuers, and prevented them from cutting them off, as they designed. The Israelites were all on foot, and the Egyptians had all of them chariots and horses, with which they were likely to overtake them quickly, but God "saved them from the hand of him that hated them," Pharaoh, who never loved them, but now hated them the more for the plagues he had suffered on their account: "from the hand of" his "enemy," which was just ready to seize them, "God redeemed them," ver. 10, interposing himself, as it were, in the pillar of fire, between the persecuted and the persecutors. 4. To complete the mercy, and turn the deliverance into a victory, the Red Sea, which was a lane to them, was a grave to the Egyptians. ver. 11, "The waters covered their enemies," so as to slay them, but not so as to conceal their shame; for, the next tide, they were thrown up dead upon the shore, Exod. xiv. 30. "There was not one of them left" alive, to bring tidings of what was become of the rest. And why did God do this for them? Nay, why did he not cover them as he did their enemies, for their unbelief and murmuring? He tells us, ver. 8, it was "for his name's sake:" though they did not deserve this favour, he designed it; and their undeservings should not alter his designs, nor break his measures, or make him withdraw his promise, or fail in the performance of it. He did this for his own glory, "that he might make his mighty power to be known," not only in dividing the sea, but in doing it notwithstanding their provocations. Moses prays, Num. xiv. 17, 19, "Let the power of my Lord be great, and pardon the iniquity of this people." The power of the God of grace, in pardoning sin and sparing sinners, is as much to be admired as the power of the God of nature in dividing the waters.

IDOLATRY OF THE PEOPLE.—Ver. 19. They made, and worshipped, the golden calf, and this in Horeb, there where the law was given, and God had expressly said, "Thou shalt" neither "make any graven image, nor bow down" to it; they did both; "They made a calf, and worshipped" it. Herein they bid defiance to, and put an affront upon, the two great lights which God has made to rule the little world; 1. That of human reason; for "they changed their glory," their God, at least, the manifestation of him, which always had been in a cloud, (either a dark cloud, or a bright one,) without any manner of visible similitude, "into the similitude of" Apis, one of the Egyptian idols, "an ox that eateth grass," than which nothing could be more grossly and scandalously absurd, ver. 20. Idolaters are perfectly besotted, and put the greatest disparagement possible, both upon God, in representing him by the image of a beast, and upon themselves, in worshipping it when they have done so. That which is here said to be the changing of their glory, is explained by St. Paul, Rom. i. 23, to be the "changing of the glory of the incorruptible God." 2. That of divine revelation, which was afforded to them, not only in the words God spake to them, but in the works he wrought for them, "wondrous works," which spake aloud that the Lord Jehovah is the only true and living God, and is alone to be worshipped, ver. 21, 22. For this, God showed his displeasure, by declaring the decree, that he would cut them off from being a people, as they had, as far as lay in their power, in effect cut him off from being a God: he "spake of destroying them," ver. 23, and certainly he had done it, if "Moses his chosen had not stood before him in the breach," ver. 23, if he had not seasonably interposed to deal with God as an advocate, about the breach or ruin God was about to devote them to, and wonderfully prevailed to turn away his wrath.—Henry.

PSALM CVII. FIRST REASON FOR PRAISE.—Ver. 1—7. It is probable that this psalm was composed by David, if he indeed were the author of the two preceding psalms; as those relate to the Lord's dealings with Israel; and this calls our attention to his providential care of mankind in general. But whilst we primarily notice the literal sense, we shall also perceive, that the instances which are selected are pictures, or similitudes, of the blessings pertaining to salvation.—There seems in these verses some reference to the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, their wanderings in the desert, and their settlement in Canaan; yet they do not exactly, or exclusively, apply to these events. The Israelites were not gathered out of the lands, from the east, west, north, and south: but they were redeemed from the power of Pharaoh; and wandered in the wilderness, and hungered and thirsted, and were led far round, yet in a right way. For a long time, they "found no city to dwell in," at length they were settled in a land where cities were ready prepared for them, and where they were abundantly satisfied with every earthly blessing.—The case of travellers in those countries seems also referred to. A number of people, collected from all quarters, march together through the sandy deserts; where they are liable to be assaulted by freebooters, and are in danger of losing their way, or of perishing by hunger and thirst. But when they are in trouble, and call upon the Lord, he delivers them from their enemies and dangers, and guides them in his providence to the cities which they mean to inhabit.—The words likewise exactly describe the case of those, whom the Lord hath redeemed from the bondage of Satan, and collected from all parts of the earth; who pass through the world as a perilous and dreary wilderness: who are often ready to faint through troubles, fears, and temptations; who learn to call upon the Lord in every danger and difficulty, and are guarded, fed, and refreshed, till they at length arrive at that city, which the Lord hath prepared for their habitation; where their longing souls will be for ever satisfied with his goodness.

SECOND REASON FOR PRAISE.—Ver. 10—16. The psalmist next selected the case of "prisoners delivered from their confinement." We are led to conceive of persons shut up in a dark and unwholesome dungeon, barricaded on every side by gates of brass and bars of iron, and loaded with galling fetters; condemned to die, and hourly expecting to be led to execution. This they are supposed to have merited by their crimes; having both violated the laws of man, and rebelled against the word of God. In this deplorable condition, bowed down with pain and anguish of spirit, they are represented as praying to the Lord: and, by his power over the hearts and affairs of men, as marvellously set at liberty. Multitudes, through successive generations, have doubtless experienced such an unmerited and unexpected escape: and the deliverance of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon, must occur to the mind of the attentive reader, with many particular instances recorded in Scripture.—But it is also a shadow of the sinner's deliverance from a far worse confinement. By rebellion against God, men are brought under the condemnation of his holy law; and Satan, by means of their lusts, hath obtained dominion over them, and holds them fast in the most miserable bondage. This the awakened sinner discovers, and becomes sensible of his guilt, misery, and danger: and, having struggled hard, but in vain, for deliverance, he finds there is no help for him but in the mercy and grace of God. For this he seeks by earnest prayer: and thus he receives liberty and peace.—Scott.

THIRD REASON FOR PRAISE.—Ver. 23—30. How dangerous and dreadful a tempest at sea is. Then wonders begin to appear in the deep, when God "commands and raises the" strong wind, which "fulfils his word," Ps. cxlviii. 8. He raises the winds, as a prince by his commission raises forces. Satan pretends to be the "prince of the power of the air;" but he is a pretender; the powers of the air are at God's command, not at his. When the wind becomes stormy, it "lifts up the waves" of the sea, ver. 25. Then the ships are kicked like tennis balls on the tops of the waves; they seem to "mount up to the heavens," and then couch again, as if they would "go down to the depths," ver. 26. A stranger, who had never seen it, would not think it possible for a ship to live at sea, as it will in a storm, and ride it out, but would expect that the next wave would bury it, and it would never come up again: and yet God, who taught man discretion to make ships that should so strangely keep above water, does by his special providence preserve them, that they answer the end to admiration. When the ships are thus tossed, the "soul" of the seaman "melts because of trouble;" and when the storm is very high, even those that are used to the sea, can neither shake off nor dissemble their fears, but "they reel to and fro," the tossing makes them giddy, "and" they "stagger" and are sick, it may be, "like a drunken man;" the whole ship's crew are in confusion, "and" quite "at their wit's end," ver. 27, not knowing what to do more for their own preservation; all their wisdom is swallowed up, and they are ready to give up themselves for gone, Jonah i. 5, &c. How seasonable it is at such a time to pray. They that go to sea must expect such perils as are here described, and the best preparation they can make for them, is, to make sure a liberty of access to God by prayer, for "then they" will "cry unto the Lord," ver. 28. How justly it is expected that all those who have had a safe passage over the sea, and especially who have been delivered from remarkable perils at sea, should acknowledge it with thankfulness to the glory of God. Let them do it privately, in their closets and families.

SANCTIFIED DISCERNMENT.—Ver. 43. "Whoso is wise, and will observe these things," these various dispensations of divine providence, "even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord." Here is, 1. A desirable end proposed; and that is, rightly to "understand the loving kindness of the Lord." 2. A proper means prescribed for attaining this end; and that is, a due observing of God's providence. We must lay up these things, mind them, and keep them in mind, Luke ii. 19. 3. A commendation of the use of this means, as an instance of true wisdom; "Whoso is wise," let him by this both prove his wisdom, and improve it. A prudent observation of the providences of God will contribute very much to the accomplishing of a good Christian.—Henry.

PSALM CVIII. ITS COMPOSITION.—This psalm consists of the latter part of the fifty-seventh psalm, and the latter part of the sixtieth, with no material alteration. The fifty-seventh was composed when David fled from Saul in the cave; and begins with grievous complaints, which are here omitted. The sixtieth was written after David had for some time reigned over all Israel, and when he was engaged in war with the Syrians and others. It also begins with complaints of the calamities to which Israel had been exposed; and these, too, are left out. So that this, as a psalm, is more in the strain of confidence, gratitude, and joyful hope, than either of those from which it is taken; and thus, more suited to a season of thanksgiving for past mercies, and prayer for further deliverance; and it is probable it was compiled for that purpose.—Scott.

PSALM CIX. PROPHETIC ANATHEMA.—Ver. 1. Most expositors suppose that David composed this psalm, when persecuted by Saul, who was rendered more implacable, by the base and malicious calumnies of Doeg and others: but some expressions favour the opinion, that it was written when David fled from Absalom, and that Ahithophel, rather

PSALM CX.

The kingdom, 1, the priesthood, 4, the conquest, 5, and the passion of Christ, 7.

A Psalm of David.

THE [a]LORD said unto my Lord, [b]Sit thou at my right hand, [c]until I make thine enemies thy footstool.[1]
2 The LORD shall send [d]the rod of thy strength [e]out of Zion: [f]rule thou in the midst of thine enemies.
3 Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, [†]in the beauties of holiness *from the womb of the morning: [k]thou hast the dew of thy youth.
4 The LORD hath sworn, and will not repent, [n]Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek.
5 The LORD at thy right hand shall [p]strike through[2] kings in the day of his wrath.
6 He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; [q]he shall wound the heads over *many countries.
7 He shall drink of the brook in the way: therefore shall he lift up the head.

PSALM CXI.

The psalmist by his example inciteth others to praise God for his glorious and gracious works, 1. The fear of God is the source of true wisdom, 10.

*PRAISE ye the LORD. I will praise the LORD with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation.
2 The works of the LORD are great, [d]sought out[1] of all them that have pleasure therein.
3 His work is honourable and glorious: and his righteousness endureth for ever.
4 He [h]hath made his wonderful works to be remembered: the LORD is gracious and [k]full of compassion.
5 He [l]hath given [†]meat unto them that fear him: he will ever be mindful of his covenant.
6 He hath shewed his people the power of his works, [o]that he may give them the heritage of the heathen.
7 The [p]works of his hands are verity and judgment; [q]all his commandments are sure.

than Doeg, is the typical person principally referred to. Ver. 6—20. Whether David, when he wrote these verses, thought of Doeg; or Ahithophel, who being a traitor, more resembled Judas, as he also did in murdering himself; they are most certainly a denunciation of the doom which awaited the enemies of Christ, and Judas in particular: for the apostle has quoted one clause from the passage, with this remarkable introduction; "This Scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost, by the mouth of David, spake concerning Judas," &c.—The historian gives the exact words from the Septuagint, which translates the whole as an imprecation. Indeed the first verb is the only one, which necessarily requires this construction, being literally rendered, "Set thou," &c., whereas all the other verbs are in the future, and may properly be rendered as prophecies. Yet the first verb, being imperative, with the quotation in the Acts from the Septuagint, seems to imply that sentence was prophetically denounced against the criminal, or criminals, and not merely the event foretold. If David intended not only to predict, but to imprecate, the vengeance of God on apostate Ahithophel and his impenitent foes, as the first word seems to imply; it should be remembered, that "the Spirit of God spake by him;" taking occasion from his circumstances to predict, in this alarming manner, the miseries which would come on the enemies of the Messiah. But, unless we were under the same influence, the example is not suited for our imitation; and we ought by no means to adopt the words with reference to our own enemies: yet there can be no impropriety in reading or singing the psalm, as the sentence of our Judge on his implacable opposers and blasphemers, for a solemn warning to all who hear it: any more than in reading the latter part of the twenty-fifth chapter of St. Matthew, or the curses contained in the twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, and twenty-ninth chapters of Deuteronomy.—We may apply the whole passage to Judas, who ungratefully and basely sold Jesus to his enemies. He was left to become the servant to a most wicked and cruel master, when he hired himself to Caiaphas as the head of the sanhedrim, who treated his remorse of conscience with such contempt, as helped to hurry him into desperation: his tempter "Satan stood at his right hand" as his accuser, and urged him to suicide: he hath ever since been considered as a guilty wretch by almost every body: he was expressly condemned by the Lord Jesus himself: his prayers were mere form and hypocrisy, and not the language of true repentance and faith, so that they aggravated his guilt: his days were few, and another was chosen to succeed to his apostleship. Probably, he left a widow and fatherless children, on whom infamy and distress were entailed, in the righteous providence of God, till the family was extinct; and thus the sins of his progenitors were visited upon him and his descendants, in a remarkable manner. By betraying Christ, he refused his blessing, and avowed that he would not follow him in doing good; and preferred a curse and mischief; and he as it were, clothed himself with malevolence and treachery: the blessing of God would therefore be removed far from him; and his curse would cover and cleave to him as a garment, confine him as a girdle, enter into his bowels as water, and insinuate into his bones as oil; that is, it would be his only and his everlasting portion. The verses may also be applied to the Jewish nation; who, having rejected and crucified Christ, were given up to be tyrannized over by one usurper after another, and to be infatuated by Satan in an unheard-of manner. Under the divine condemnation for their obstinate unbelief, their hypocritical religion only added to their guilt, by rendering them more proud, bigoted, and furious in persecuting the Christians. Their civil and ecclesiastical state expired within forty years from the death of Christ, and their peculiar privileges were transferred to the Gentile converts. At the destruction of Jerusalem immense multitudes were slain; their widows and orphans were left to penury and misery; and their posterity have ever since been dispersed as vagabonds, and preyed upon by extortion and oppression, in almost every land: their name hath been, as it were, expunged from the records of the church; all the iniquities of the nation, from its origin, were visited on that and the succeeding generations; and the horrible imprecation which the enraged persecutors of Christ uttered against themselves and their children has been as awfully fulfilled.—Scott.

PSALM CX. ITS CONTENTS.—This psalm is pure gospel; it is only, and wholly, concerning Christ, the Messiah, promised to the fathers, and expected by them. It is plain that the Jews of old, even the worst of them, so understood it, however the modern Jews have endeavoured to pervert it, and to rob us of it; for when the Lord Jesus proposed a question to the Pharisees upon the first words of this psalm, where he takes it for granted that David, in spirit, calls Christ his Lord, though he was his Son, they chose rather to say nothing, and to own themselves gravelled, than to make it a question whether David does indeed speak of the Messiah or no; for they freely yield so plain a truth, though they foresee it will turn to their own disgrace, Matt. xxii. 41, &c. Of him, therefore, no doubt, the prophet here speaks, of him, and of no other man. Christ, as our Redeemer, executes the office of a prophet, of a priest, and of a king, with reference both to his humiliation and exaltation; and of each of these we have here an account. 1. His prophetical office, ver. 2. 2. His priestly office, ver. 4. 3. His kingly office, ver. 1, 3, 5, 6. 4. His estates of humiliation and exaltation, ver. 7. In singing this psalm, we must act faith upon Christ, submit ourselves entirely to him, to his grace and government, and triumph in him as our Prophet, Priest, and King, by whom we hope to be ruled, and taught, and saved, for ever; and as the Prophet, Priest, and King of the whole church, who shall reign till he has put down all opposing rule, principality, and power, and delivered up the kingdom to God the Father.—Henry.

PSALM CXI.—Ver. 1. This psalm consists of as many short metres as there are letters in the Hebrew alphabet, and in their regular order; so that "Hallelujah" could not be a part of the first verse, as that word begins with the fifth letter of the alphabet. It should, therefore, in general be considered as a title to the psalms which begin with it; pointing out the scope to the reader, and calling on him to prepare his heart for praising God.—Scott.

WISDOM.—Ver. 10. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." It is not only reasonable that we should fear God, because his name is reverend, and his nature holy, but it is advantageous to us. It is wisdom; it will direct us to speak and act as becomes us, in a consistency with ourselves, and for our own benefit. It is the head of wisdom, that is, as we read it, it "is the beginning of wisdom;" men never begin to be wise till they begin to fear God; all true wisdom takes its rise from true religion, and has its foundation in it: or, as some understand it, it is the chief wisdom, and the most excellent: the first in dignity. It is the principal wisdom, and the principle of wisdom, to worship God, and give honour to him, as our Father and Master.—Henry.

PSALM CXII. ITS STYLE AND CONTENTS.—This psalm is composed alphabetically, as the former is, and is (like the former) entitled, "Hallelujah," though it treats of the happiness of the saints, because it redounds to the glory of God, and whatever we have the pleasure of, he must have the praise of. It is a comment upon the last verse of the foregoing psalm, and fully shows how much it is our wisdom to "fear God, and do his commandments." We have here, 1. The character of the righteous, ver. 1. 2. The blessedness of the righteous. (1.) There is a blessedness entailed upon their posterity, ver. 2. (2.) There is a blessing conferred upon themselves. [1.] Prosperity outward and inward, ver. 3. [2.] Comfort, ver. 4. [3.] Wisdom, ver. 5. [4.] Stability, ver. 6—8. [5.] Honour, ver. 6, 9. 3. The misery of the wicked, ver. 10. So that good and evil are set before us, the blessing and the curse. In singing this psalm, we must not only teach and admonish ourselves and one another to answer to the characters here given of the happy, but comfort and encourage ourselves and one another with the privileges and comforts here secured to the holy.—Henry.

PSALM CXIII. GROUNDS OF PRAISE.—Ver. 1. We are informed by the Jewish writers, that this psalm and the five following, were sung at their feasts, especially after the celebration of the passover. "By this often repetition, he stirreth up our cold dulness to praise God." Ver. 2, 3. "If God's glory shine through all the world, and therefore all ought to be praised; what great condemnation were it to his people, among whom it chiefly shineth, if they should not earnestly extol his name."—It may be considered as a prophecy of the final prevalence of true religion; when all nations shall unite in the high praises of JEHOVAH, as God our Saviour. Ver. 7, 8. The advancement of Joseph, David, and others, from a low condition to the highest authority, seems alluded to; as illustrating the providential dispensations of God, and the methods of his grace. Ver. 9. This verse may be thus rendered, perhaps more literally, "He maketh her who was barren in the family, to sit as a joyful mother of sons." The instances of Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, the mother of Samson, Hannah, the woman of Shunem, and Elizabeth, who were long barren, but were at length made joyful mothers, by the special blessing of God, are supposed to have been emblems of the calling of the Gentiles: when that vast proportion of the earth, which had so long been barren, produced multitudes of true converts, the sons and daughters of the church, and of the Lord Almighty who hath espoused her unto himself.—The psalm begins and ends with "Hallelujah."—Scott.

PSALM CXIV. SONG OF ISRAEL'S REDEMPTION.—The deliverance of Israel out of Egypt gave birth to their church and nation, which were then founded, then formed; that work of wonder ought therefore to be had in everlasting remembrance. God glorified in it, in the preface to the ten commandments, and Hos. xi. 1, Out of Egypt have I called my Son. In this psalm, it is celebrated in lively strains of praise; it was fitly therefore made a part of the great Hallelujah, or song of praise, which the Jews were wont to sing at the close of the passover-supper. It must never be forgotten, 1. That they were brought out of slavery, ver. 1. 2. That God set up his tabernacle among them, ver. 2. 3. That the sea and Jordan were divided before them, ver. 3, 5. 4. That the earth shook at the giving of the law, when God came down on mount Sinai, ver. 4, 6, 7. 5. That God gave them water out of the rock, ver. 8. In singing this psalm, we must acknowledge God's power and goodness in what he did for Israel, applying it to the much greater work of wonder, our redemption by Christ, and encouraging ourselves and others to trust in God in the greatest straits.—Henry.

PSALM CXV. FOLLY OF IDOLATRY.—If man is the work of God's hands, (as certainly he is, and it was his honour that he was made "in the image of God,") it is absurd to think that that can be God which is the work of men's hands; or that it can be any 4 Then called I upon the name of the LORD; O LORD, I beseech thee, deliver my soul.

5 Gracious is the LORD, and righteous; yea, our God is merciful.

6 The LORD [k]preserveth the simple:[1] [l]I was brought low, and he helped me.

7 Return unto thy rest, O my soul; for the LORD hath [n]dealt bountifully with thee.

8 For thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling.

9 I will [r]walk before the LORD [s]in the land of the living.

10 I believed, therefore have I spoken: [x]I was greatly afflicted:

11 I said [y]in my haste, [z]All men are liars.

12 What shall I render unto the LORD for all his benefits toward me?

13 I will [b]take the cup of salvation,[2] and call upon the name of the LORD.

14 I will pay my vows unto the LORD now in the presence of all his people.

15 [e]Precious in the sight of the LORD is the death of his saints.

16 O LORD, truly I am thy servant; I am thy servant, and [g]the son of thine handmaid:[3] [h]thou hast loosed my bonds.

17 I will offer to thee [i]the sacrifice of thanksgiving, and will call upon the name of the LORD.

18 I will pay my vows unto the LORD now in the presence of all his people,

19 In the courts of the LORD's house, in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXVIII.

An exhortation to praise God for his mercy, 1. The psalmist sheweth how good it is to trust in God, 5. By the psalmist in type, the coming of Christ's kingdom is expressed.

O GIVE thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: because his mercy endureth for ever.

2 Let Israel now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

3 Let the house of Aaron now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

4 Let them now that fear the LORD say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

5 I called upon the LORD *in distress: the LORD answered me, and [f]set me in a large place.[1]

6 [g]The LORD is †on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me?

7 The LORD [h]taketh my part with them that help me: [i]therefore shall I see my desire upon them that hate me.

8 It is [k]better to trust in the LORD than to put confidence in man.

9 It is better to trust in the LORD [l]than to put confidence in princes.

10 All nations compassed me about: but in the name of the LORD will I ‡destroy them.

11 They [n]compassed me about; yea, they compassed me about: but in the name of the LORD I will destroy them.

12 They compassed me about [o]like bees; they are [p]quenched[2] as the fire of thorns: for in the name of the LORD I will §destroy them.

13 [r]Thou hast thrust sore at me, that I might fall: but the LORD helped me.

14 The LORD [s]is my strength and song, and is become my salvation.

15 The [t]voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous; the right hand of the LORD doeth valiantly.

16 The right hand of the LORD is exalted: the right hand of the LORD doeth valiantly.

17 I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the LORD.

18 The LORD hath [a]chastened me sore: but he hath not given me over unto death.

19 [b]Open to me the gates of righteousness:[3] [c]I will go in to them, and I will praise the LORD:

20 This [d]gate of the LORD, into which the righteous shall enter.

21 I will praise thee: for thou hast heard me, and art become my salvation.

22 [g]The stone which the builders refused, is become [h]the head stone of the corner.

23 This is ‖the LORD's doing; [i]it is marvellous in our eyes.

other than a dishonour to God to make him in the image of man. The argument is irrefragable; "The workmen made it, and therefore it is not God," Hos. viii. 6. These idols are represented here as the most ridiculous things, a mere jest, that would seem to be something, but were really nothing; fitter for a toy-shop than a temple; for children to play with than for men to pray to. The painter, the carver, the statuary, did their part well enough: they made them with mouths and eyes, ears and noses, hands and feet, but they could put no life into them, and therefore no sense. They had better have worshipped a dead carcass, (for that had life in it once,) than a dead image, which neither has life, nor can have. "They speak not," in answer to those that consult them; the crafty priest must do it for them. In Baal's image there was "no voice, neither any that answered. They see not" the prostrations of their worshippers before them, much less their burthens and wants. "They hear not" their prayers, though ever so loud; "they smell not" their incense, though ever so strong, ever so sweet; "they handle not" the gifts presented to them, much less have they any gifts to bestow on their worshippers; they cannot "stretch forth their hands to the needy. They walk not," they cannot stir a step for the relief of those that apply to them. Nay, they do not so much as "breathe through their throat;" they have not the least sign or symptom of life, but are as dead, after the priest has pretended to consecrate them, and call a deity into them, as they were before.—Henry.

PSALM CXVI. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—9. We should not only be satisfied, and delighted, when "the LORD hath heard our voice and our supplications;" but should love him on that account, as well as for his own essential excellences, and all his innumerable benefits. But we are never so greatly affected with his condescension and kindness, as when he hath relieved us out of extreme distress. The poor sinner when awakened to a sense of his state and character, recollects that he must shortly die, and fears lest he should sink under the righteous and everlasting wrath of God; then "the sorrows of death and the pains of hell get hold of him, and he finds trouble and sorrow." Let then those "who labour, and are heavy laden, come to him that they may find rest to their souls." Let believers keep close to their rest; and if they be at all drawn from it, let them make haste to return, remembering how "bountifully the LORD hath dealt with them." Having "delivered our souls from death, our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling," we should deem ourselves bound "to walk before him," and as in his presence. But when we shall enter our heavenly rest, our deliverance from sin and sorrow will be complete; our tears will be finally wiped away, and our feet will no more slip; but we shall behold the glory, and walk in the presence, of God, in the land of the living, with inconceivable delight. Ver. 10—19. What shall the redeemed sinner, when his heart is full of joy and gratitude; or what shall any of us, who have been delivered from urgent trouble and distress, "render unto the LORD for all his benefits towards us?" We cannot, in any way, profit him, or offer him any thing which he hath not first given unto us: and our best is unworthy of his acceptance: yet we ought to devote ourselves and all we have to his service and glory.—Scott.

PSALM CXVII.—This psalm is short and sweet. I doubt the reason why we sing it so often as we do, is for the shortness of it; but, if we rightly understood and considered it, we should sing it oftener for the sweetness of it, especially to us sinners of the Gentiles, on whom it casts a very favourable eye. Here is, 1. A solemn call to all nations to praise God, ver. 1. 2. Proper matter for that praise suggested, ver. 2. We are soon weary, indeed, of well doing, if, in singing this psalm, we keep not up those pious and devout affections with which the spiritual sacrifice of praise ought to be kindled and kept burning.—Henry.

PSALM CXVIII. DAVID'S TRUST.—Ver. 6. "'The Lord is on my side.' He is a righteous God, and therefore espouses my righteous cause, and will plead it." If we are on God's side, he is on ours; if we be for him and with him, he will be for us and with us, ver. 7, "'The Lord takes my part,' and stands up for me, 'with them that help me.' He is to me among my helpers, and so one of them: he is all in all, both to them and me, and without him I could not help myself, nor could any friend I have in the world help me." Thus, ver. 14, "'The Lord is my Strength, and my Song;' I make him so: without him I am weak and sad, but on him I stay myself as my Strength, both for doing and suffering; and in him I solace myself as my Song, by which I both express my joy and ease my grief; and making him so, I find him so; he strengthens my heart with his graces, and rejoices my heart with his comforts." If God be our Strength, he must be our Song; if he work all our works in us, he must have all praise and glory from us. God is sometimes the Strength of his people, when he is not their Song; they have spiritual supports, when they want spiritual delights; but if he be both to us, we have abundant reason to triumph in him; for if he be our Strength and our Song, he is become not only our Saviour, but our Salvation; for his being our Strength is our protection to the salvation, and his being our Song is an earnest and foretaste of the salvation.—Henry.

CORNER-STONE.—Ver. 22—24. The Redeemer doubtless is also that "stone which the builders rejected," and would have thrown aside as worthless among the rubbish; but 28 My soul †melteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me according unto thy word.

29 [e]Remove from me the way of lying: and [f]grant me thy law graciously.

30 I have chosen the way of truth: thy judgments have I laid before me.

31 I have [l]stuck unto thy testimonies: O LORD, [k]put me not to shame.

32 I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt [m]enlarge my heart.

HE.

33 Teach me, O LORD, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keep it unto the end.[3]

34 Give me understanding, and [q]I shall keep thy law; yea, I shall [r]observe it with my whole heart.

35 Make me to go in [s]the path of thy commandments; for therein do I delight.

36 Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness.

37 *Turn [u]away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou me in thy way.

38 [b]Stablish thy word unto thy servant, [c]who is devoted to thy fear.

39 Turn away my reproach[4] which I fear: for thy judgments are good.

40 Behold, [f]I have longed after thy precepts: [g]quicken me in thy righteousness.

which, by the mighty power of God, and to the astonishment of the apostles and disciples, became the chief corner-stone, supporting the whole spiritual temple, and uniting the several parts of it into one building, "an habitation of God through the Spirit." And as the chief priests, scribes, and Pharisees of old refused this foundation-stone of the church: so many of the wise and learned, and professedly religious, of every age and nation, ever since, have rejected it, and numbers of them have long endeavoured to substitute some other in its place. But by the marvellous interposition of the Lord, their attempts have been frustrated, and proved ruinous to themselves and their adherents alone.—The day of thanksgiving also which David and Israel celebrated, was but a shadow of that blessed day which saw the Redeemer risen from the dead; that was indeed "the day, which the LORD had made," for his people to rejoice in; and it hath ever since been commemorated every week in the Christian church, and in most parts hath had a more solemn annual commemoration. The twenty-second and twenty-third verses are quoted six times in the New Testament, and expressly applied to Christ: nay, many of the Jewish rabbis acknowledge this to be a prediction of the Messiah.—Scott.

PSALM CXIX. ITS CONTENTS AND STYLE.—This is a psalm by itself, like none of the rest, it excels them all, and shines brightest in this constellation. It is much longer than any of them: more than twice as long as any of them. It is not making long prayers that Christ censures, but making them for a pretence: which intimates that they are in themselves good and commendable. It seems to me to be a collection of David's pious and devout ejaculations, the short and sudden breathings and elevations of his soul to God, which he wrote down as they occurred, and, toward the latter end of his time, gathered out of his day-book, where they lay scattered, added to them many like words, and digested them into this psalm, in which there is seldom any coherence between the verses, but, like Solomon's proverbs, it is a chest of gold rings, not a chain of gold links. And we may not only learn, by the psalmist's example, to accustom ourselves to such pious ejaculations, which are an excellent means of maintaining constant communion with God, and keeping the heart in frame for the more solemn exercises of religion, but we must make use of the psalmist's words, both for the exciting and for the expressing, of our devout affections; what some have said of this psalm is true, He that shall read it considerately, it will either warm him or shame him. 1. The composition of it is singular and very exact. It is divided into twenty-two parts, according to the number of the letters of the Hebrew alphabet, and each part consists of eight verses: all the verses of the first beginning with Aleph, all the verses of the second with Beth, and so on, [illegible] throughout the whole psalm. Archbishop Tillotson says, It seems to have more of poetical skill and number in it, than we at this distance can easily understand. Some have called it the saints' alphabet; and it were to be wished we had it as ready in our memories, as the very letters of our alphabet, as ready as our A B C. Perhaps the penman found it of use to himself to observe this method, as it obliged him to seek for thoughts, and search for them, that he might fill up the quota of every part: and the letter he was to begin with might lead him to a word, which might suggest a good sentence: and all little enough to raise any thing that is good in the barren soil of our hearts. However, it would be of use to the learners, a help to them, both in committing it to memory, and in calling it to mind upon occasion; by the letter the first word would be got, and that would bring in the whole verse: thus young people would the more easily learn it by heart, and retain it the better even in old age. If any censure it as childish and trifling, because acrostics are now quite out of fashion, let them know that the royal psalmist despises their censure; he is a teacher of babes, and if this method may be beneficial to them, he can easily stoop to it; if this be to be vile, he "will be yet more vile." 2. The general scope and design of it is to magnify the law, and make it honourable; to set forth the excellency and usefulness of divine revelation; and to recommend it to us, not only for the entertainment, but for the government of ourselves, by the psalmist's own example, who speaks by experience of the benefit of it, and of the good impressions made upon him by it; for which he praises God, and earnestly prays, from first to last, for the continuance of God's grace with him, to direct and quicken him in the way of his duty. There are ten several words by which divine revelation is called in this psalm; and they are synonymous, each of them expressive of the whole compass of it, (both that which tells us what God expects from us, and that which tells what we may expect from him,) and of the system of religion which is founded upon it, and guided by it. The things contained in the Scripture, and drawn from it, are here called, 1. God's law, because they are enacted by him as our Sovereign. 2. His way, because they are the rule both of his providence and of our obedience. 3. His testimonies, because they are solemnly declared to the world, and attested beyond contradiction. 4. His commandments, because given with authority, and (as the word signifies) lodged with us as a trust. 5. His precepts, because prescribed to us, and not left indifferent. 6. His word, or saying, because it is the declaration of his mind, and Christ, the essential Eternal Word, is all in all in it. 7. His judgments, because framed in infinite wisdom, and because by them we must both judge and be judged. 8. His righteousness, because it is all holy, just, and good, and the rule and standard of righteousness. 9. His [illegible] because they are [illegible] and [illegible] obligation. 10. His [illegible]

44 So shall I keep thy law continually for ever and ever.

45 And I will walk [t]at liberty: [p]for I seek thy precepts.

46 I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and [r]will not be ashamed.

47 And I will delight myself in thy commandments, [s]which I have loved.

48 My hands also will I lift up[s] unto thy commandments, which I have loved; and [t]I will meditate in thy statutes.

ZAIN.

49 Remember the word unto thy servant, [u]upon which thou hast caused me to hope.

50 [v]This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me.

51 The proud have had me greatly in derision: [w]yet have I not declined from thy law.

52 I remembered thy judgments of old, O LORD; and have comforted myself.

53 [x]Horror hath taken hold upon me, because of the wicked that forsake thy law.

54 Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage.[6]

55 I have remembered thy name, O LORD, in the night, and have kept thy law.

56 This I had, because I kept thy precepts.

CHETH.

57 Thou art my portion, O LORD: I have said that I would keep thy words.

58 I entreated thy [§]favour with my whole heart: be merciful unto me according to thy word.

59 I [q]thought on my ways, and [r]turned my feet unto thy testimonies.

60 I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.

61 [t]The ‖bands of the wicked have robbed me: but I have not forgotten thy law.

62 At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto thee because of thy righteous judgments.

63 I am [s]a companion of all them that fear thee, and of them that keep thy precepts.

64 The earth, O LORD, is full of thy mercy: teach me thy statutes.

TETH.

65 Thou hast [c]dealt well with thy servant, O LORD, according unto thy word.

66 Teach me good judgment and knowledge:[7] for I have believed thy commandments.

67 Before I was afflicted I went astray: [z]but now have I kept thy word.

68 Thou art [h]good, and doest good: [i]teach me thy statutes.

69 [k]The proud have forged a lie against me: but [l]I will keep thy precepts [m]with my whole heart.

70 Their heart is as fat as grease,[8] but I delight in thy [o]law.

71 It is [p]good for me that I have been afflicted: that I might learn thy statutes.

72 The law of thy mouth is better unto me than [r]thousands of gold and silver.

JOD.

73 Thy hands have made me and fashioned me: give me understanding, [u]that I may learn thy commandments.

74 They that fear thee will be glad when they see me; because [y]I have hoped in thy word.

75 I know, O LORD, that thy judgments are *right, and that [a]thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me.

76 Let, I pray thee, thy merciful kindness be [†]for my comfort, according to thy word unto thy servant.

77 Let thy tender mercies come unto me, that I may live: for thy law is my delight.

78 Let the proud be ashamed; for they dealt perversely with me without a cause: but [g]I will meditate in thy precepts.

79 Let [h]those that fear thee turn unto me, and those that have known thy testimonies.

80 Let my heart be [i]sound in thy statutes; [k]that I be not ashamed.

CAPH.

81 My soul [l]fainteth for thy salvation: [m]but I hope in thy word.

82 Mine eyes fail for thy word, saying, [o]When wilt thou comfort me?

83 For I am become [p]like a bottle in the smoke;[9] [q]yet do I not forget thy statutes.

84 [r]How many are the days of thy servant? [s]when wilt thou execute judgment on them that persecute me?

85 The proud have digged pits for me, [u]which are not after thy law.

86 All thy commandments are [‡]faithful: [y]they persecute me wrongfully; [z]help thou me.

87 They had [a]almost consumed me [b]upon earth; [c]but I forsook not thy precepts.

88 [d]Quicken me after thy lovingkindness; [e]so shall I keep the testimony of thy mouth.

LAMED.

89 [f]For ever, O LORD, thy word is settled in heaven.

90 Thy [g]faithfulness is [§]unto all generations: [h]thou hast established the earth, and it ‖abideth.

91 They [i]continue[10] this day according to thine ordinances: for [k]all are thy servants.

92 Unless [l]thy law had been my delights, [m]I should then have perished in mine affliction.

93 I [n]will never forget thy precepts: for with them thou hast quickened me.

94 [o]I am thine, save me: [p]for I have sought thy precepts.

law is built, are eternal truths. And I think there is but one verse (it is ver. 122) in all this long psalm, in which there is not one or other of these ten words; only in three or four they are used concerning God's providence or David's practice, as ver. 75, 84, 121, and, ver. 132, they are called God's name. The great esteem and affection David had for the word of God, is the more admirable, considering how little he had of it, in comparison with what we have; no more perhaps, in writing, than the first books of Moses, which were but the dawning of this day; which may shame us who enjoy the full discoveries of divine revelation, and yet are so cold towards it. In singing this psalm, there is work for all the devout affections of a sanctified soul; so copious, so various is the matter of it. We here find that in which we must give glory to God, both as our Ruler and great Benefactor; that in which we are to teach and admonish ourselves and one another; (so many are the instructions which we here find about a religious life;) and that in which we are to comfort and encourage ourselves and one another; so many are the sweet experiences of one that lived such a life. Here is something or other to suit the case of every Christian. Is any afflicted? Is any merry? Each will find that here which is proper for them. And it is so far from being a tedious repetition of the same thing, as may seem to those who look over it cursorily, that, if we duly meditate upon it, we shall find almost every verse has a new thought, and something in it very lively. And this, as many other of David's psalms, teaches us to be sententious in our devotions, both alone, and when others join with us; for, ordinarily, the affections, especially of weaker Christians, are more likely to be raised and kept by short expressions, the sense of which lies in a little room, than by long and laboured periods.

Counsel for the Young.—Ver. 9. Here is, 1. A weighty question asked; By what means may the next generation be made better than this? "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?" Cleansing implies that it is polluted. Beside the original corruption we all brought into the world with us, (from which we are not cleansed unto this day,) there are many particular sins which young people are subject to, by which they defile their way; "youthful lusts;" 2 Tim. ii. 22; these render their way offensive to God, and disgraceful to themselves. Young men are concerned to cleanse their way—to get their hearts renewed, and their lives reformed; to make clean, and keep clean, from the "corruption that is in the world through lust," that they may have both a good conscience and a good name. Few young people do themselves inquire by what means they may recover and preserve their purity; and therefore David asks the question for them. 2. A satisfactory answer given to this question. Young men may effectually "cleanse" their "way, by taking heed thereto according to" the "word" of God; and it is the honour of the word of God, that it has such power and is of such use both to particular persons, and to communities, whose happiness lies much in the virtue of their youth. (1.) Young men must make the word of God their rule, must acquaint themselves with it, and resolve to conform themselves to it: that will do more toward the cleansing of young men, than the laws of princes, or the morals of philosophers. (2.) They must carefully apply that rule, and make use of it; they must take heed to their way, must examine it by the word of God, as a touchstone and standard: must rectify what is amiss in it by that regulator, and steer by that chart and compass. God's word will not do without our watchfulness, and a constant regard both to it and to our way, that we may compare them together. The ruin of young men is either living at large, or by no rule at all, or choosing to themselves false rules; let them ponder the path of their feet, and walk by Scripture rules; so their way shall be clean, and they shall have the comfort and credit of it here and for ever.

Important Prayer to the Student of Scripture.—Ver 18. Observe here, 1. That there are "wondrous things" in God's "law," which we are all concerned, and should covet to "behold;" not only strange things, which are very surprising and unexpected, but excellent things, which are to be highly esteemed and valued, and things which were long "hid from the wise and prudent," but are now "revealed unto babes." If there were wonders in the law, much more in the gospel, where Christ is all in all, whose name is "Wonderful." Well may we, who are so nearly interested, desire to behold these wondrous things, when the angels themselves reach "to look into them," 1 Pet. i. 12. 2. Those that would see the wondrous things of God's law and gospel, must beg of him to "open their eyes," and to give them an understanding. We are by nature blind to the things of God, till his grace cause the scales to fall from our eyes; and even those in whose hearts God has said, "Let there be light," have yet need to be further enlightened, and must still pray to God to open their eyes yet more and more, that they who at first "saw men as trees walking," may come to "see all things clearly:" and the more God opens our eyes, the more wonders we see in the word of God which we saw not before.

The Right Choice.—Ver. 30. 1. Those who will make any thing to purpose of their religion must first make it their serious and deliberate choice: so David did; "I have chosen the way of truth." Note, (1.) The way of serious godliness is the "way of truth:" the principles it is founded on are of eternal truth, and it is the only true way to happiness. (2.) We must therefore choose to walk in this way, not because we know no other way, but because we know no better; nay, we know no other safe and good way. Let us choose that way for our way, which we will walk in, though it be narrow. 2. That those who have chosen "the way of truth" must have a constant regard to the word of God as the rule of their walking; "Thy judgments have I laid before me;" as he who learns to write lays his copy before him, that he may write according to it, as the workman lays his model and platform before him, that he may do his work exactly. As we must have the word in our heart, by an habitual conformity to it, so we must have it in our eye, by an actual regard to it upon all occasions, that we may walk accurately and by rule. 3. That those who make religion their choice and rule are likely to adhere to it faithfully; "I have stuck to thy testimonies' with an unchanged affection, and an unshaken resolution; stuck to them at all times, through all trials.

SPIRITUAL BOLDNESS.—Ver. 46. "I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings." Before David came to the crown, kings were sometimes his judges, as Saul and Achish; but, if he were called before them to give a reason of the hope that was in him, he would "speak of God's testimonies," and profess to build his hope upon them, and make them his council, his guards, his crown, his all. We must never be afraid to own our religion, though it should expose us to the wrath of kings, but speak of it as that which we will live and die by, like the three children before Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iii. 16; Acts iv. 20. After David came to the crown, kings were sometimes his companions, they visited him, and he returned their visits; but he did not, in complaisance to them, talk of every thing but religion, for fear of affronting them, and making his conversation uneasy to them; no, God's testimonies shall be the principal subject of his discourse with the kings, not only to show that he was not ashamed of his religion, but to instruct them in it, and bring them over to it. It is good for kings to hear of "God's testimonies," and it will adorn the conversation of princes themselves to speak of them.—Henry.

THE TRUE PORTION.—Ver. 57—63. In the former section, the psalmist stated the chief sources of his consolation: in this, he expresses his full confidence, that God was his "portion;" and "the reason of this hope that was in him." He had formed, and avowed, his purpose of adhering to the words of God, keeping them as his valued treasure, and observing them in his habitual conduct. He had earnestly from his inmost soul sought the favour of God, and the mercy promised in his word. He had thought on his ways, in order that he might repent of all his sins, and do works meet for repentance; forsaking every evil course, and turning his feet into the paths of truth and holiness. Having "come to himself," and "considered his ways;" he made no delay to comply with the dictates of his conscience, in obeying God's commandments. And when the wicked laid snares for him, robbed him, or persecuted him, he was not by this unmerited ill usage so discomposed as to forget the law of God; or to forsake the rule of his conduct. Nay, his distresses and dangers rendered him more diligent in his religion; and every interposition of God for his deliverance and the confusion of his persecutors; and the recollection of the Lord's righteous judgments of old, excited in him such lively gratitude, that he often arose even in the middle of the night to bless and thank his God. At the same time, he chose for his companions, not the most wealthy, ingenious, or valiant, but the most pious persons whom he knew; and, while, hated by the wicked, he was welcomed with affection and reciprocal regard by all who feared God and kept his precepts.—Scott.

SANCTIFIED AFFECTION.—Ver. 67. David here tells us what he had experienced, 1. Of the temptations of a prosperous condition; "'Before I was afflicted,' while I lived in peace and plenty, and knew no sorrow, 'I went astray' from God and my duty." Sin is going astray; and then we are most apt to wander from God, when we are easy, and think ourselves at home in the world. Prosperity is the unhappy occasion of much iniquity; it makes people conceited of themselves, indulgent of the flesh, forgetful of God, in love with the world, and deaf to the reproofs of the word. See Ps. xxx. 6. It is good for us, when we are afflicted, to remember how, and wherein, we went astray, "before we were afflicted," that we may answer the end of the affliction. 2. Of the benefit of an afflicted state; "'Now have I kept thy word,' and so have been recovered from my wanderings." God often makes use of afflictions as a means to reduce those to himself who have wandered from him. Sanctified afflictions humble us for sin, and show us the vanity of the world; they soften the heart, and open the ear to discipline. The prodigal's distress brought him to himself first, and then to his father.

DAVID'S ABJECT CONDITION.—Ver. 83. Lord, make haste to help me, "for I am become like a bottle in the smoke," a leathern bottle, which, if it hung any while in the smoke, was not only blackened with soot, but dried, and parched, and shrivelled up. David was thus wasted by age, and sickness, and sorrow. See how affliction will mortify the strongest and stoutest of men! David had been of a ruddy countenance, as fresh as a rose; but now he is withered, his colour is gone, his cheeks are furrowed. Thus does man's beauty consume under God's rebukes, as a moth fretting a garment. A bottle, when it is thus wrinkled with the smoke, is thrown by, and there is no more use of it. Who will put wine into such old bottles? Thus was David, in his low estate, looked upon as a despised, broken vessel, and as a vessel in which there was no pleasure. Good men, when they are drooping and melancholy, sometimes think themselves more slighted than really they are.

THE WORD—A LAMP.—Ver. 105. Observe here, 1. The nature of the word of God, and the great intention of giving it to the world; it is a lamp and a light, it discovers to us that, concerning God and ourselves, which [illegible] shows us what to [illegible] and a dark place indeed the world would be without it; it is a lamp which we may set up by us, and take into our hands for our own particular use, Prov. vi. 23. The commandment is a lamp kept burning with the oil of the Spirit; it is like the lamps in the sanctuary, and the pillar of fire, to Israel. 2. The use we should make of it. It must be not only a "light to our eyes," to gratify them, and fill our heads with speculations, but a "light to our feet" and "to our path," to direct us in the right ordering of our conversation.

ILLUMINATION OF THE WORD.—Ver. 130. Even "the entrance of God's word gives light." If we begin at the beginning, and take it before us, we shall find that the very first names of the Bible give us surprising, and yet satisfying, discoveries of the origin of the universe, about which, without that, the world is utterly in the dark. As soon as the word of God enters into us, and has a place in us, it enlightens us; we find we begin to see, when we begin to study, the word of God. The very first principles of the oracles of God, the plainest truths, the milk appointed for the babes, bring a great light into the soul, much more will the soul be illuminated by the sublime mysteries that are found there. The exposition or explication of thy word giveth light; then it is most profitable, when ministers do their part "in giving the sense." Neh. iii. 8.

PRAISE.—Ver. 164. David, in this psalm, is full of complaints, yet those did neither put out his praises, nor put him out of tune for them; whatever condition a child of God is in, he does not want matter for praise, and therefore should not want a heart. See here, 1. How often David praised God; "Seven times a day," very frequently, not only many day, but often every day. Many think that once a week will serve, or once or twice a day, but David would praise God "seven times a day" at least. Praising God is a duty which we should very much abound in. We must praise God at every meal, [illegible] upon all occasions, in every thing give thanks. Hezekiah, under [illegible] the subject can never be exhausted, [illegible] 62. 7. What he praised God for, [illegible] praise God for his promises,

PSALM CXX. SONGS OF DEGREES.—This psalm is the first of those fifteen which are here put together under the title of "songs of degrees." It is well that it is not material what the meaning of that title should be, for nothing is offered toward the explanation of it, no, not by the Jewish writers themselves, but what is conjectural. These psalms do not seem to be composed all by the same hand, much less all at the same time. Four of them are expresaly ascribed to David, and one said to be designed for Solomon, and perhaps penned by him; yet Ps. cxxvi. and Ps. cxxix., seem to be of a much later date, some of them are calculated for the closet, as Ps. cxx. cxxx., some for the family, as Ps. cxxvii. cxxviii., some for the public assembly, as Ps. cxxii. cxxxiv., and some contrived as Ps. cxxiv. cxxxii. So that, it should seem, they had not this title from the authors but from the publisher. Some conjecture that they are so called from their singular excellency; as the song of songs, so the song of degrees, is a most excellent song, in the highest degree. Others, from the tune they were set to, or the musical instruments they were sung to, or the raising of the voice in singing them. Some think they were sung on the fifteen steps or stairs, by which they went up from the court of the temple to the inner; others, at so many stages of the people's [illegible] returned out of captivity. I shall only observe, 1. That they are all [illegible] but one very short, three of them have but seven verses apiece,) and that [illegible] next to Ps. cxix., which [illegible] the longest of all. How [illegible] divided into many [illegible]

PSALM CXXII.

David professeth his joy for the church, and for placing the ark in Zion, 1; he prayeth for the place thereof, 6.

A Song of degrees of David.

I WAS glad when they said unto me, [c]Let us go into the house of the LORD.

2 Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem.

3 Jerusalem is [c]builded as a city that is compact[1] together:

4 Whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the LORD, unto the testimony of Israel, to give thanks unto the name of the LORD.

5 For [1]there [*]are set thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David.

6 [1]Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: [m]they shall prosper that love thee.

7 Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity [c]within thy palaces.

8 For [p]my brethren and companions' sakes, I will now say, Peace be within thee.

9 Because of the house[2] of the LORD our God [r]I will seek thy good.

PSALM CXXIII.

The godly profess their confidence in God, 1, and pray to be delivered from contempt, 3.

A Song of degrees.

UNTO thee lift I up mine eyes, [c]O thou that dwellest in the heavens.

2 Behold, as the eyes of servants[1] look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; so our eyes wait upon the LORD our God, until that he have mercy upon us.

3 Have mercy upon us, O LORD, have mercy upon us: [s]for we are exceedingly filled with contempt.

4 Our soul is exceedingly filled [h]with the scorning of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud.

PSALM CXXIV.

The godly bless God for a miraculous deliverance, 1; they declare their great danger, 4; they praise God, 6.

A Song of degrees of David.

IF it had not been the LORD who was on our side, [c]now may Israel say;

2 If it had not been the LORD who was on our side, when men rose up against us:

3 Then they had swallowed us up quick, when [s]their wrath was kindled against us:

4 Then [h]the waters[1] had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul:

5 Then the proud waters had gone over our soul.

6 Blessed be the LORD, [k]who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth.

7 Our [1]soul is escaped [m]as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped.

8 Our help is in the name of the LORD, who made heaven and earth.

PSALM CXXV.

The safety of such as trust in God, 1. A prayer for the godly, and against the wicked, 4.

A Song of degrees.

THEY that trust in the LORD shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, [d]but abideth for ever.

2 As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the LORD is round about his people from henceforth, even for ever.

3 For [s]the rod of [*]the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous; lest the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity.

4 [h]Do good, O LORD, unto those that be good, and to them that are [1]upright in their hearts.

5 As for such as turn aside unto their [1]crooked ways, the LORD shall lead them forth[1] with the workers of iniquity: but peace shall be upon Israel.

PSALM CXXVI.

The church, celebrating her incredible return out of captivity, 1, prayeth for, and propheseth the good success thereof, 4.

A Song of degrees.

WHEN the LORD [*]turned again the captivity of Zion, we were [h]like them that dream.

2 Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing: then said they among the heathen, The LORD hath [†]done great things for them.

3 The LORD hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad.

4 Turn again our captivity, O LORD [s]as the streams in the south.[1]

5 They [h]that sow in tears shall reap in [‡]joy.

6 He [1]that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing [§]precious seed, [k]shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

PSALM CXXVII.

The vanity of human endeavours without God's blessing, 1. Children are his gift, 3.

A Song of degrees [*]for Solomon.

EXCEPT the LORD [c]build the house, [d]they labour in vain that [†]build it: [e]except the LORD keep the city, [f]the watchman waketh but in vain.

2 It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat [1]the bread of sorrows: [k]for so he giveth his beloved sleep.

3 Lo, [1]children are an heritage of the LORD: and the fruit of the womb is his reward.

4 As [m]arrows are in the hand of a mighty man; so are children of the youth.[1]

5 [c]Happy is the man that hath [‡]his quiver us." And the like in most of them, if not all. Perhaps for one of these reasons they are called "Songs of Degrees."—Henry.

PSALM CXXI. GOD A SHIELD.—Some call this the soldier's psalm, and think it was penned in the camp, when David was jeoparding his life in the high places of the field, and thus trusted God to cover his head in the day of battle. Others call it the traveller's psalm, (for there is nothing in it of military dangers,) and think David penned it when he was going abroad, and designed it, pro vehiculo—for the carriage, for a good man's convoy and companion in a journey or voyage. But we need not thus appropriate it; wherever we are, at home or abroad, we are exposed to danger more than we are aware of; and this psalm directs and encourages us to repose ourselves and our confidence in God, and by faith to put ourselves under his protection, and commit ourselves to his care, which we must do, with an entire resignation and satisfaction, in singing this psalm. 1. David here assures himself of help from God, ver. 1, 2. 2. He assures others of it, ver. 3—8.—Henry.

PSALM CXXII. ITS NATURE.—This psalm seems to have been written for the use of the Israelites, when they went up to Jerusalem to celebrate their sacred feasts, (after the ark was removed thither,) and to have communion with God and with their brethren. Their journey would often be inconvenient, wearisome, and expensive: but the holy joy and benefit, which thence accrued, would amply repay them. Jerusalem was typical both of the church of true believers, and of the heavenly state; and the solemnities of Israel were like our public ordinances, acts of sacred worship, and when attended on in faith and love, earnests and foretastes of the worship and joy of heaven.—It may be supposed that the psalmist greatly rejoiced, not only in anticipating the pleasure of attending on the ordinances of God, but also in perceiving the people, generally and zealously, disposed to the duties of religion.—Scott.

PSALM CXXIII.—Ver. 1. Some think that this psalm was composed for the use of the church, during the Babylonish captivity, or when persecuted by Antiochus Epiphanes: but others suppose it to have been written by Isaiah, on occasion of the scoffing boasts and menaces of Sennacherib and Rabshakeh; while others are of opinion that David wrote it during Absalom's rebellion. Ver. 2. "Behold we wait on thee, submitting ourselves to this severe punishment, as poor slaves to the stroke of their offended master or mistress; and resolving to bear it patiently, till thou in mnca pity remove it." [Bp. Patrick.]—The expectation of deliverance from God under the injuries of men; as faithful servants depend on their masters for redress and protection, seems more especially meant. Ver. 3, 4. These verses represent the psalmist, and those in whose name he speaks, as living on scorn and contempt, (even as a man lives on his daily provisions,) till they were satiated with them, and knew not how to endure any more; yet still exposed to the insulting scoffs and taunts of their prosperous and haughty oppressors.—Scott.

PSALM CXXIV.—Ver. 1—3. The title ascribes this psalm to David; so that, abiding by this authority, we must look for the occasion of it in the history of that prince; though it is not easy to determine the particular deliverance to which it refers. It may, however, be applied to any season of special danger or distress to the church, or believers, from which they have been beyond expectation rescued.—Had Israel's helper been any other than the almighty and everlasting God; their numerous, powerful, and furious enemies must at once have destroyed them. Ver. 4—8. Overwhelming torrents, or the furious waves of the stormy sea; the voracious jaws of lions, tigers, or wolves; and the craft and skill of the fowler, in deceiving and ensnaring the poor unsuspecting bird, form three striking illustrations of the danger to which the people of God had been exposed, from their fierce, violent, and deceitful enemies. Yet God had wonderfully delivered them; and they were filled with admiring gratitude, when they recollected the extreme danger to which they had been exposed, and found themselves brought into a secure and happy situation. And as God had helped them, they were determined to confide in future in his protection alone.—Scott.

PSALM CXXV.—This short psalm may be summed up in those words of the prophet, Isa. iii. 10, 11, "Say ye to the righteous, It shall be well with him. Woe to the wicked, it shall be ill with him." Thus are life and death, the blessing and the curse, set before us often in the psalms, as well as in the law and the prophets. 1. It is certainly well with the people of God; for, (1.) They have the promises of a good God, that they shall be fixed, ver. 1, and safe, ver. 2, and not always under the hatches, ver. 3. (2.) They have the prayers of a good man, which shall be heard for them, ver. 4. 2. It is certainly ill with the wicked, and particularly with the apostates, ver. 5. Some of the Jewish rabbins are of opinion that it has reference to the days of the Messiah; however, we that are members of the gospel church may certainly, in singing this psalm, take the comfort of these promises, and the more so if we stand in awe of the threatening.—Henry.

PSALM CXXVI.—RETURN FROM CAPTIVITY.—Ver. 1—3. This psalm is generally thought to have been composed when the Jews were restored to their own land, after the

PSALM CXXVIII.

The sundry blessings which follow them that fear God, and walk in his ways.

A Song of degrees.

BLESSED is every one that feareth the LORD; that walketh in his ways.

2 For [d]thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, [e]and it shall be well with thee.

3 Thy wife shall be as [f]a fruitful vine[1] by the sides of thine house: thy children like [g]olive-plants [h]round about thy table.

4 Behold, that thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the LORD.

5 The LORD shall bless thee out of Zion: and [k]thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life.

6 Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel.

PSALM CXXIX.

God's goodness in saving Israel out of their great afflictions, 1. A prayer against the haters of the church, 5.

*MANY a time [b]have they afflicted me [c]from my youth, [d]may Israel now say:

2 Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth: [e]yet they have not prevailed against me.

3 The [f]plowers plowed upon my back; they made long their furrows.

4 The LORD is righteous: he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked.

5 Let them all be confounded and turned back that hate Zion.

6 Let them be [k]as the grass upon the housetops,[1] which withereth afore it groweth up:

7 Wherewith the mower filleth not his hand; nor [l]he that bindeth sheaves his bosom.

8 Neither do they which go by say, [m]The blessing of the LORD be upon you: we bless you in the name of the LORD.

PSALM CXXX.

The psalmist in distress professeth his hope in God, trusting in his mercy for pardon, 1: his own patience in hope, 5: he exhorteth Israel to hope in God, 7.

2 LORD, hear my voice; [c]let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplications.

3 If thou, LORD, [d]shouldest mark iniquities, O LORD, who shall stand?

4 But there is forgiveness with thee, [f]that thou mayest be feared.

5 I [g]wait for the LORD, my soul doth wait, [h]and in his word do I hope.

6 My soul [i]waiteth for the LORD more than they that watch for the morning: I say, more than they *that watch for the morning.

7 Let Israel hope in the LORD: for with the LORD there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption.

8 And he shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities.

PSALM CXXXI.

David, professing his humility, 1, exhorteth Israel to hope in God, 3.

A Song of degrees of David.

LORD, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: neither do I *exercise myself in great matters, or in things too †high for me.

2 Surely I have behaved and [d]quieted †myself, [e]as a child that is weaned of his mother; my soul is even as a weaned child.[1]

3 Let Israel hope in the LORD [§]from henceforth and for ever.

PSALM CXXXII.

David in his prayer commendeth unto God the religious care he had for the ark, 1: his prayer at the removing of the ark, 8, with a repetition of God's promises, 11.

A Song of degrees.

LORD, remember David, and all his afflictions:

2 How [d]he sware unto the LORD: and vowed unto [e]the mighty God of Jacob;

3 Surely [f]I will not come into the tabernacle of my house, nor go up into my bed;

4 I will not [g]give sleep to mine eyes, or slumber to mine eyelids,

5 Until I find out a place for the LORD, *an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob.

6 Lo, we heard of it at [l]Ephratah:[1] [m]we found it in the fields of the wood.

7 We will go into his tabernacles: we will [o]worship at his footstool.

8 Arise, O LORD, into thy rest; thou, and the ark of thy strength.

9 Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness; and let thy saints shout for joy.

10 For thy servant David's sake [x]turn not away the face of thine anointed.

11 The LORD hath [y]sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; [z]Of the fruit of thy †body will I set upon thy throne.

12 If thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for evermore.[2]

13 For the LORD hath chosen Zion; [d]he hath desired it for his habitation.

14 This is my rest for ever: [f]here will I dwell; [g]for I have desired it.

15 I will ‡abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread.

16 I will also clothe her priests with salvation: and her saints shall shout aloud for joy.

Babylonish captivity. Their restoration was effected in so sudden and extraordinary a manner, and was so delightful to them, that it seemed more like a pleasant dream than a reality. Ver. 4. The torrent, or brooks, in the southern deserts run off, or dry up, in the summer months; but after the periodical rains they return again, and the channels are filled for the refreshment of the thirsty traveller: thus the Jews who were settled in their own country, prayed that their brethren might be brought back to replenish the land, which had lain so many years desolate. Ver. 5, 6. The tears with which the poor captives at Babylon had accompanied their repentance and prayers; the grief with which on their return they beheld, and attempted to repair, the desolations of their city and temple; and all the hardships which they endured in that pious attempt, would surely issue in joy and praise. As the poor husbandman, who perhaps wants his seed-corn to feed his family, and cannot part with it and witness their hunger without tears, and who with great labour and anxiety sows his good seed; will in due time rejoice in reaping and conveying home a plenteous harvest.—Scott.

PSALM CXXVII. DOMESTIC PIETY.—This is a family psalm, as divers before were state-poems and church-poems. It is entitled, (as we read it,) "for Solomon," dedicated to him by his father. He having a house to build, a city to keep, and seed to raise up to his father, David directs him to look up to God, and to depend upon his providence, without which all his wisdom, care, and industry would not serve. Some take it to have been penned by Solomon himself, and it may as well be read, "A Song of Solomon," who wrote a great many; and they compare it with his Ecclesiastes, the scope of both being the same, to show the vanity of worldly care, and how necessary it is that we keep in with God. On him we must depend, 1. For wealth, ver. 1, 2. 2. For heirs to leave it to, ver. 3—5. In singing this psalm, we must have our eye up unto God for success in all our undertakings, and a blessing upon all our comforts and enjoyments, because every creature is that to us which he makes it to be, and no more.—Henry.

PSALM CXXVIII. MARRIAGE BLESSED.—"Some think this was a form prescribed to be used at the blessing of their marriages; when they wished the new married couple all manner of happiness; especially a long life in peaceable times." This opinion illustrates the propriety of the blessedness secured to a pious man, being here viewed with a special respect to the comforts of the married state; for on that supposition newly married persons are exclusively addressed. Yet it is worth while for those who, either from supposed religious motives, or from an idea that wives and children hinder men's interest or comfort, are averse to marriage, either in their own case, or that of others, to consider this verse, in which a faithful wife and a flourishing offspring are by the Spirit of inspiration considered as most valuable blessings; and some of the most beautiful images in nature are employed by the Holy Spirit, to show what a solace, and ornament, and comfort, they are to those who fear God. Would such language have been suggested to the inspired writers, if marriage had been a less holy, or less happy state than celibacy?—It is observable, that Solomon, who, as some think, wrote this psalm, and who multiplied wives vastly beyond all that preceded him, here speaks of one wife, and no more, as a blessing to a pious man.—Scott.

PSALM CXXIX. HOPE IN AFFLICTION.—It is not improbably conjectured, that this psalm was composed about the time when Sennacherib invaded Judah; yet this is no more than conjecture.—From the days of Jacob, the ancestor of the nation: and still more, from the time when Pharaoh and the Egyptians began to oppress his descendants; the history of Israel had been almost one uninterrupted narrative of the hardships, injuries, and oppressions, to which they had been exposed, from a variety of enemies and persecutors: and yet, God had effectually interposed in their behalf, and no assailant had so prevailed against them as to destroy them from being a people; nor indeed have they to this day.—The same may be said of the true church of God, and of every believer. "The church, now afflicted, ought to remember how that her condition hath been such from the beginning, to be molested most grievously by the wicked; yet, in time she hath ever been delivered....Many a time have the righteous been under persecution, from the hour when Cain rose up against his brother Abel to this day. Like the bush which Moses saw in the desert, the church hath burned with fire, yet hath not been consumed."—Scott.

PSALM CXXX. PARDON AND PEACE.—David is generally supposed to have been the writer of this psalm, though his name is not prefixed to it. Some think that it was composed when he was convinced of his exceedingly heinous guilt, in the matter of Uriah, and was in deep inward distress on that account; while others are of opinion that he wrote it when in danger of being overwhelmed by the persecuting rage of Saul; and indeed the general acknowledgment of criminality, in common with other men, does not well accord with David's state of mind, when crying for mercy after his most deplorable fall.—Scott.

PSALM CXXXI. HUMILITY.—David was accused by his brethren as an aspiring man, who was actuated by pride and ambition in the services which he performed; and by Saul, as aiming to dethrone him and usurp the kingdom. But he could appeal to God, that he should have been well satisfied in privacy and obscurity, and in the meaner occupations of a shepherd, without intermeddling with affairs of state, or other "matters too high or wonderful for him." Indeed, he had learned to be as indifferent about such worldly advantages, as the weaned child becomes to the milk when it has learned to relish other nutriment. "Committing myself to thy care, and depending on thy providence, as a child that is newly weaned doth upon its mother: just so do I silence my natural desires, and am content to be disposed of as thou pleasest."—Scott.

PSALM CXXXII. ZION AND ITS BLESSING.—Ver. 15. God, having chosen Zion hill, promises to bless that, 1. With the blessings of the life that now is; for godliness has the promise of them. The earth shall yield her increase; where religion is set up, there shall be provision, and in blessing God will bless it, Ps. lxvii. 6; he will surely and abundantly bless it. And a little provision, with an abundant blessing upon it, will be more serviceable, as well as more comfortable, than a great deal without that blessing. God's people have a special blessing upon common enjoyments, and that blessing puts a peculiar sweetness into them. Nay, the promise goes further: "I will satisfy her poor with bread." Zion has her own poor to keep; and it is promised that God will take care even of them. 2. By his providence they shall be kept from wanting, they shall have provision enough. If there be scarcity, the poor are the first that feel it, so that it is a sure sign of plenty if they have sufficient. Zion's poor shall not want, for God has obliged all the sons of Zion to be charitable to the poor, according to their ability, and the church must take care that they be not "neglected," Acts vi. 1. 3. By his grace they shall be kept from complaining; though they have but dry bread, yet they shall be satisfied.—Henry.

PSALM CXXXIII. LOVE.—This psalm is a brief encomium on unity and brotherly love, which, if we did not see the miseries of discord among men, we should think needless; but we cannot say too much, it were well if we could say enough, to persuade people to live together in peace. Some conjecture that David penned it upon occasion of the union between the tribes, when they all met unanimously to make him king. It is a psalm of general use to all societies, lesser and larger, civil and sacred. Here is, 1. The doctrine laid down of the happiness of brotherly love, ver. 1. 2. The illustration of that doctrine, in two similitudes, ver. 2, 3. 3. The proof of it, in a good reason given for it, ver. 3, and then we are left to make the application, which we ought to do in singing it, provoking ourselves and one another to holy love. The contents of this psalm, in our Bibles, are short, but very proper; it is the benefit of the communion of saints.—Henry.

PSALM CXXXIV.—Ver. 1—3. It seems that David appointed some of the priests and Levites to watch all night in the sanctuary by regular courses; and they are here exhorted to spend the hours in joyful songs of praise. Thus the service of the sanctuary would be a shadow of the unceasing worship of heaven. It is probable that this psalm was composed to be sung each night, when the watch was set; and that the first two verses were sung by the precentor of those who were about to leave the sanctuary, and the third verse by the Levites who succeeded them.—Scott.

PSALM CXXXV. NATURE.—Ver. 1, 2. This, perhaps, was the morning hymn, which the precentor called upon the Levites to sing at the opening of the gates of the temple, as the former was sung at the shutting up the gates in the evening." [Bp. Patrick.]

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—How lamentable it is that we should need so much exciting to praise our God, and yet be so negligent and formal as we often are, in this reasonable and delightful employment! But his servants must on earth be trained up to that holy exercise, in which they are to be occupied for ever in heaven: and in his courts, ministers must instruct, and go before them, in this sacred worship.—The essential goodness and excellency of the Lord, would entitle him to our utmost love and praise, were it possible for us to be free from other obligations to him: and the pleasantness of the work would endear it to us, if our hearts were free from the pestilence of sin. But to the Lord we owe our being, our rational powers, and all our outward comforts; which demand our warmest gratitude: and the peculiar favours vouchsafed to Britons, both in providence, and in the spiritual advantages afforded us, place us in the same relation, and under the same obligations to him, with the Israelites of old. Whilst his moderate rains fructify our land, and we are generally exempted from fatal tempests and inundations, how often have the winds from his treasuries dispersed the preparations of our formidable enemies! The tokens and wonders which he wrought for Israel, and the heritage that he gave them, were feeble shadows of the mercy which he hath shown to his true Israel, the redemption wrought out, and the inheritance prepared for them; and every past and present favour is a token and earnest of his future and eternal love. For he is immutably perfect, and the memorial of his wonders for his people shall endure throughout all generations. He will plead their cause, and judge between them and 7 Whither shall I go from thy Spirit?[1] or whither shall I flee from thy presence?

8 If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there.

9 If I take the wings of the morning,[2] and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;

10 Even [r]there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

11 If I say, *Surely the darkness shall cover me; [t]even the night shall be light about me.

12 Yea, the darkness †hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: ‡the darkness and the light are both alike to thee.

13 For [x]thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb.

14 I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works, and that my soul knoweth right well.

15 My substance was not hid from thee.

their enemies; and, though he afflict and correct them, he will repent concerning them, and not be wroth with them for ever.—Scott.

PSALM CXXXVI. CHORUS OF PRAISE.—Ver. 1—3. This psalm in many things resembles the preceding: but it is rendered remarkable by the repetition of the sweet sentence, "for his mercy endureth for ever," at the end of every verse. By mercy we understand the Lord's disposition to compassionate and relieve those whom sin has rendered miserable and vile; his readiness to forgive and be reconciled to the most provoking of transgressors, and to bestow all blessings upon them; together with all the provision which he hath made for the honour of his name, in the redemption of sinners by Jesus Christ.—"At every half verse, one half of the choir answers to the other in these words: 'For his mercy endureth for ever;' a form of acknowledgment prescribed by David to be used continually in the divine service." [Bp. Patrick.]

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Repetitions, disgustful to the fastidious, are often salutary and necessary, because we are prone to overlook or forget the Lord's goodness and mercy: yet, they convey a severe reproof, and should cause us to unite humiliation with our gratitude to our condescending instructor.—The works of creation proclaim the wisdom, power, and goodness of JEHOVAH, the "God of gods, and Lord of lords;" while the continuance of the settled course of nature, and the blessings thus communicated, by a kind Providence, to a rebellious world, are proofs of his patience and ever-enduring mercy. Nay, his denunciations of vengeance against impenitent sinners should be considered as tokens of his mercy, and improved as warnings to repent, and "to flee from the wrath to come;" and his judgment upon persecutors and oppressors is evidently the effect of his mercy to his church. The destruction of opposing kings and nations, "with a strong hand and an outstretched arm," was as conducive to the good of Israel as the manna, the water from the rock, and the conducting cloud. And in like manner, the crucifixion of our lusts, and the sharp corrections by which the Lord promotes our sanctification, are as blessed tokens of his mercy as the forgiveness of our sins, and the consolations of his Holy Spirit: and our complete salvation will be connected with the final destruction of all the enemies of God and of our souls.—Blessed be his name, [illegible] hath remembered us lost sinners in our low estate, and hath provided salvation for [illegible] through his Son, and revealed it in his holy word. May we experience his redeeming [illegible] that being [illegible] all doubt, find our souls unto eternal [illegible] and praise to his [illegible] to every lowly"

PSALM CXXXVII. SONG OF THE CAPTIVES.—Ver. 1—6. It is not known by whom this psalm was written, but the occasion is evident; and the pathetic abruptness, so suited to that occasion with which it opens, is admirably beautiful. The captive Jews, by the rivers of Babylon, sat down and wept, whilst they recollected their former prosperity; and especially, they remembered with tears the desolate state of the holy city and the temple of God, their own destitution of sacred ordinances, and the apparently ruined state of the church and people of Israel; for these calamities were brought on them by their national transgressions, to which they had all contributed. No longer therefore able to divert their melancholy by singing songs of praise, they hanged their harps upon the willows, which grew in abundance in that moistened soil, which perhaps they were employed in cultivating. But their insulting victors and oppressors demanded of them to gratify their curiosity, or administer to their entertainment, by singing "one of the songs of Zion;" by which they meant to deride their confidence in JEHOVAH, and to express their triumph over the religion, as well as over the city and country, of the poor captives. But they were not only indisposed (probably too much) for joyful praise, but they would not, they could not, profane their sacred songs to increase the insolence of their idolatrous masters; and, therefore, they said one to another, or to those who demanded this of them, "How shall we sing the LORD's song in a strange land?" Yet Jerusalem and the interests of religion were still uppermost in their thoughts and affections; and the psalmist, in the name of his brethren, declared that he would rather be deprived of his skill in music, and have "his tongue cleave to the roof his mouth," than forget the songs of Zion, or do otherwise than prefer the interests of the church to every personal advantage or pleasure.—Scott.

PSALM CXXXVIII. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We ought to glory in ascribing glory to our God; and when we can praise him with our whole heart, we need not be reluctant for the whole world to witness our gratitude and joy in him.—They who rely on his loving kindness and truth through Jesus Christ, will be sure to find him faithful to his word. In performing his promises, he more magnifies his perfections, than in all his other works; of which he hath given us an illustrious specimen and earnest, in sending the promised Saviour "to be the propitiation for our sins;" and "if he spared not his own Son, how shall he not with him freely give us all things!" Let then all, who trust in and call upon him, praise him with joyful hearts. "Let them sing in the ways of the Lord, for great is the glory of the Lord;" in order that sinners may hear, and be con[illegible] and be [illegible] to such [illegible]ce. And they will [illegible] to every lowly"

PSALM CXXXIX. OMNISCIENCE.—Ver. 4. "'Thou knowest' me in all my retirements; thou knowest 'my lying down'; when I am withdrawn from all company, and am reflecting upon what has passed all day, and composing myself to rest, thou knowest what I have in my heart, and with what thoughts I go to bed. Thou knowest me, and all I say. 'There is not a word in my tongue,' not a vain word, not a good word, 'but thou knowest it altogether;' knowest what it meant, from what thought it came, and with what design it was uttered. There is not a word at my tongue's end, ready to be spoken, yet checked and kept in, but thou knowest it." "When there is not a word in my tongue, O Lord, thou knowest all;" so some read it; for thoughts are words to God. "Thou knowest me in every part of me; 'Thou hast beset me behind and before,' so that, go which way I will, I am under thine eye, and cannot escape it. Thou hast 'laid thine hand upon me,' and I cannot run away from thee." Wherever we are, we are under the eye and hand of God. Perhaps it is an allusion to the physician's laying his hand upon his patient, to feel how his pulse beats, or what temper he is in. God knows us, as we know not only what we see, but what we feel, and have our hands upon. "All his saints are in his hand."—The psalmist specifies the most remote and distant places, and counts upon meeting God in them. 1. "In heaven, 'if I ascend' thither, as I hope to do shortly, 'thou art there;' and it will be my eternal bliss to be with thee there." Heaven is a vast large place, replenished with an innumerable company, and yet there is no escaping God's eye there in any corner, or any crowd. The inhabitants of that world have as necessary a dependence upon God, and lie as open to his strict scrutiny, as the inhabitants of this. 2. "In hell," in Sheol, which may be understood of the depth of the earth, the very centre of it. Should we dig as deep as we can under ground, and think to hide ourselves there, we should be mistaken; God knows that path which the vulture's eye never saw, and to him the earth is all surface. Or it may be understood of the state of the dead. When we are removed out of the sight of all living, yet not out of the sight of the living God; from his eye, we cannot hide us in the grave. Or, of the place of the damned, "If I make my bed in hell," (an uncomfortable place to make a bed in, where there is no rest day or night, yet thousands will make their bed for ever in those flames,) "behold thou art there," in thy power and justice. God's wrath is the fire which will there burn everlastingly, Rev. xiv. 10, 11. 3. In the remotest corners of this world; "If I take the wings of the morning" (the rays of the morning light, (called the wings of the sun, Mal iv. 2,) than which nothing more swift, and flee upon them to "the uttermost parts of the sea," or of the earth, (Job xxxviii. 12, 13;) should I flee to the utmost distant and obscure islands, (the ultima Thule, the Terra incognita,) I should find thee there; "there shall thy hand lead me," as far as I go, "and thy right hand shall hold me," that I can get no further, that I cannot go out of thy reach.—Henry.

PSALM CXL. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The seed of the old serpent, instigated by their father, will unite subtlety with violence, in executing the mischiefs which they have imagined in their hearts against the children of God: slanders will be devised to cloak their unprovoked malice; they will sharpen their tongues to ruin their reputation, as the serpent's fatal bite envenoms the blood; for "adders' poison is under their lips." Especially they will lay artful stratagems to overthrow their goings, and to betray them into some real or seeming crime, which may furnish a plausible handle against them. All this we have seen illustrated in the history of David the type, but it is still more manifest in the history of Christ, the great antitype. In such circumstances, therefore, we should especially watch and pray, that the Lord would "hold up our goings in his ways, that our footsteps slip not." He is the strength of salvation to all who trust and worship him as their God: he will hear their prayers, and cover their head in the day of battle: every former deliverance is an earnest of future and final victory: and they may unreservedly pray that he would not grant the desires of the wicked, nor further their wicked devices, lest they grow more insolent. We may also be confident, that false accusers will, by their lies and perjuries, bring mischief upon themselves, even the burning coals of divine vengeance, which will sink them into the fire and deep pit of hell, to rise no more; except timely repentance prevent the fatal doom. For "an evil speaker shall not be established in the earth; evil shall hunt the violent man, to overthrow him."—Scott.

PSALM CXLI. CHRISTIAN REPROOF.—Ver. 5. "Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness." The "righteous God;" so some. "I will welcome the rebukes of his providence, and be so far from quarrelling with them, that I will receive them as tokens of love, and improve them as means of grace, and will pray for those that are the instruments of my trouble." But it is commonly taken for the reproofs given by righteous men; and it best becomes those that are themselves righteous, to reprove the unrighteousness of others, and from them it will be best taken. But if the reproof be just, [illegible] the reprover be not so, we must make a good use of it, and learn [illegible] are here taught how to [illegible] very low: deliver me from my persecutors; [o]for they are stronger than I.

7 Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: the righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt deal bountifully with me.

PSALM CXLIII.

David prayeth for favour in judgment, 1; he complaineth of his grief, 3; he prayeth for deliverance, guidance, and support, 7-10; for the destruction of his enemies, 12.

A Psalm of David.

HEAR my prayer, O LORD, give ear to my supplications: in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness.

2 And enter not into judgment with thy servant: for [p]in thy sight shall no man living be justified.

3 For the enemy hath persecuted my soul; [q]he hath smitten my life down to the ground; [r]he hath made me to dwell[1] in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

4 Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate.

5 I remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands.

6 I stretch forth my hands unto thee: my soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. Selah.

7 [m]Hear me speedily, O LORD: my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, *lest I be like unto them that go down into the pit.

8 Cause me [q]to hear thy lovingkindness in the morning; for in thee do I trust: [r]cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; [t]for I lift up my soul unto thee.

9 Deliver me, O LORD, from mine enemies: [t]I †flee unto thee to hide me.

10 Teach me to do thy will; [x]for thou art my God: [y]thy Spirit is good; lead me into [z]the land of uprightness.[2]

11 [a]Quicken me, O LORD, for thy name's sake: for thy righteousness' sake [c]bring my soul out of trouble.

12 And of thy mercy cut off mine enemies, and destroy all them that afflict my soul: [e]for I am thy servant.

PSALM CXLIV.

David blesseth God for his mercy both to him and to man, 1; he prayeth to be delivered from his enemies, 5.

A Psalm of David.

BLESSED be the LORD *my strength, which [a]teacheth my hands †to war, and my fingers to fight;

2 My ‡goodness, [b]and my fortress; my high tower, and my deliverer; my shield, and he in whom I trust; [c]who subdueth my people under me.

3 LORD, [d]what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! [e]or the son of man, that thou makest account of him!

4 [f]Man is like to vanity: [g]his days are as a shadow that passeth away.

5 [h]Bow thy heavens, O LORD, and come down: [i]touch the mountains, and they shall smoke.

6 Cast forth lightning, and scatter them; shoot out thine arrows, and destroy them.

7 Send thine §hand from above; rid me, and deliver me out of great waters, from [o]the hand of strange children;

8 Whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand[1] is a right hand of falsehood.

9 I will sing a new song unto thee, O God: [s]upon a psaltery and an instrument of ten strings will I sing praises unto thee.

10 It is he [t]that giveth ‖salvation unto kings: [u]who delivereth David his servant from the hurtful sword.

11 Rid me, and deliver me from the hand of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood:

12 That our sons may be [y]as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be [z]as corner stones, *polished [a]after the similitude of a palace:

13 That [b]our garners may be full, affording †all manner of store; that our sheep may bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets:

14 That our oxen may be ‡strong to labour; that there be [d]no breaking in, nor going out;[2] that there be no complaining in our streets.

15 Happy is that people, that is in such a case: yea, happy is that people, whose God is the LORD.

PSALM CXLV.

David praiseth God for his fame, 1, goodness, 7, the glory of his kingdom, 11, his providence, 14, justice and holiness, 17, and for his especial favour for the righteous, 18.

David's [a]Psalm of Praise.

I WILL extol thee, my God, O King; and [d]I will bless thy name for ever and ever.

2 Every day will I bless thee, and I will praise thy name for ever and ever.

3 Great is the LORD, and greatly to be praised; §and his greatness is* unsearchable.

4 One [h]generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts.

5 I [i]will speak of the glorious honour of thy majesty, and of thy wondrous †works.

6 And [k]men shall speak of the might of thy terrible acts: and ‡I will declare thy greatness.

7 They shall [l]abundantly utter the memory[1] of thy great goodness, and shall [m]sing of thy righteousness.

8 The [n]LORD is gracious, and full of compassion; slow to anger, and §of great mercy.

9 The LORD is [o]good to all: and his tender mercies are over all his works.

it a piece of friendship; we must not only bear it patiently, but take it as a kindness; for "reproofs of instruction are the way of life," Prov. vi. 23, are means of good to us, to bring us to repentance for the sins we have committed, and to prevent relapses into sin. Though reproofs cut, it is in order to a cure, and therefore much more desirable than the kisses of an enemy, Prov. xxvii. 6, or the song of fools, Eccl. vii. 5. David blessed God for Abigail's seasonable admonition, 1 Sam. xxv. 32. We must reckon ourselves helped and healed by it; it "shall be as an excellent oil" to a wound, to mollify it, and close it up; "it shall not break my head," as some reckon it to do, who could as well bear to have their heads broken, as to be told of their faults; but says David, "I am not of that mind; it is my sin that has broken my head, that has broken my bones, Ps. li. 8. The reproof is an excellent oil, to cure the bruises sin has given me. It shall not 'break my head,' if it may but help to break my heart."—Henry.

PSALM CXLII.—This psalm is a prayer, the substance of which David offered up to God, when he was forced by Saul to take shelter in a cave, and which he afterwards penned in this form. Here is, 1. The complaints he makes to God, ver. 1, 2, of the subtlety, strength, and malice, of his enemies, ver. 3, 6, and the coldness and indifference of his friends, ver. 4. 2. The comfort he takes in God, that he knew his case, ver. 3, and was his refuge, ver. 5. 3. His expectation from God, that he would hear and deliver him, ver. 6, 7. 4. His expectation from the righteous, that they would join with him in praises, ver. 7. Those that are troubled in mind, body, or estate may, in singing this psalm, (if they sing it in some measure with David's spirit,) both warrant his complaints and fetch in his comforts.—Henry.

PSALM CXLIII. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The believer has not only the "faithfulness," but the "righteousness," of God engaged in his behalf; because he is "made the righteousness of God in Christ Jesus:" much more, then, may he be confident that he has justice on his side in those causes which are pending betwixt him and his persecutors, before the supreme Judge. But he will not forget that in himself, and in his best actions, he is a sinner, and that he cannot be justified at God's tribunal by his own obedience: and this consideration will keep him as a humble penitent, pleading guilty, crying for mercy, living by faith, and perceiving more and more preciousness in Christ to the end of his days. Nor need the trembling sinner, who hath lately discovered that he cannot stand in judgment before God, be discouraged on that account: for the greatest of saints have confessed the same. But what must be the presumption and delusion of those who despise free grace, and expect heaven as the wages of their scanty formal services! Nay, strange to say, some of them have even arrogantly thought of meriting for others also!—The justified believer, having peace with God, will experience the enmity of the world, and the temptations of Satan. This enemy, at least, will persecute our souls; and he often smites our life to the ground by his seducing and discouraging suggestions. When he can prevail with us to commit sin, and the Lord is provoked to hide his face, he next insinuates that God will no more be gracious; and thus he causes us to indulge despondency and hard thoughts of God, and we dwell in darkness as if we were cast off to perish. But meditation and prayer will recover us from these distresses: whilst we "muse on the works of God," we shall be encouraged to hope in him; and then the mourning soul strives to return to him, as the infant stretches out its hands towards an indulgent mother; and thirsts for his consolations as the parched ground for refreshing rain.—Scott.

PSALM CXLIV. NATIONAL PROSPERITY.—Ver 12—14. Let us notice the particular instances of that public prosperity which David desired for his people. 1. A hopeful progeny, ver. 12, "'That our sons and our daughters may be' in all respects, such as we could wish." He means not those only of his own family, but those of his subjects, that are the seed of the next generation. It adds much to the comfort and happiness of parents in this world, to see their children promising, and likely to do well. First, It is pleasant to see "our sons as plants grown up in their youth," as olive plants, Ps. cxxviii. 3, the "planting of the Lord," Isa. lxi. 3; to see them as plants, not as weeds, not as thorns; to see them as plants growing great, not withered and blasted; to see them of a healthful constitution, a quick capacity, a towardly disposition, and especially of a pious inclination, likely to bring forth fruit unto God in their day; to see them "in their youth," their growing time, increasing in every thing that is good, growing wiser and better, till they grow strong in spirit. Secondly, It is no less desirable to see "our daughters as corner-stones," or corner-pillars, "polished after the similitude of a palace" or temple. By daughters, families are united and connected, to their mutual strength, as the parts of a building are by the corner-stones; and when they are graceful and beautiful both in body and mind, they are then polished after the similitude of a nice and curious structure. 2. Great plenty. Numerous families increase the care, perhaps more than the comfort, where there is not sufficient for their maintenance; and therefore he prays for a growing estate with a growing family. First, That their storehouses might be well replenished with the fruits and products of the earth; "That our garners may be full," like those of the good householder, who brings out of them things new and old: those things that are best new, he has in that state. Secondly, That their flocks might greatly

PSALM CXLVII.

Exhortations to praise God for his wisdom, power, and goodness displayed in providence, &c.

PRAISE ye the LORD: for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely.

2 The LORD doth [c]build[1] up Jerusalem: [d]he gathereth together the outcasts of Israel.

3 He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their [*]wounds.

4 He [f]telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names.

5 Great is our Lord, and of great power: [†]his understanding is infinite.

6 The LORD lifteth up the meek: he casteth the wicked down to the ground.

7 Sing unto the LORD with thanksgiving; sing praise upon the harp unto our God:

8 Who covereth the heaven with clouds, who [m]prepareth rain for the earth, who maketh grass to grow upon the mountains.

9 He [n]giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry.

10 He delighteth not in the strength of the horse: he taketh not pleasure in the legs of a man.

11 The LORD taketh pleasure in them [r]that fear him, in those that hope in his mercy.

12 Praise the LORD, O Jerusalem; praise thy God, O Zion.

13 For [s]he hath strengthened the bars of thy gates; he hath blessed thy children within thee.

14 [‡]He maketh peace in thy borders, and [y]filleth thee with the [§]finest of the wheat.

15 He sendeth forth[2] his commandment upon earth: his word runneth very swiftly.

16 He [b]giveth snow like wool: he [c]scattereth the hoar frost like ashes.

17 He [d]casteth forth his ice[3] like morsels: [e]who can stand before his cold?

18 He sendeth out his word, and melteth them: he causeth his wind to blow, and the waters flow.

19 He [g]sheweth his [*]word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel.

20 He hath [1]not dealt so with any nation: and as for his judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLVIII.

The psalmist calleth upon the celestial, 1, the terrestrial, 7, and the rational creatures, 11, to praise God.

2 Praise ye him, all his angels: praise ye him, all his hosts.

3 Praise ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light.

4 Praise him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters that be above the heavens.[1] increase; "That our sheep may bring forth thousands, and ten thousands, in our" folds. Much of the wealth of their country consisted in their flocks, Prov. xxvii. 26; and of ours too, else wool would not be, as it is, a staple commodity. The increase of our cattle is a blessing in which God is to be acknowledged. Thirdly, That their beasts designed for service might be fit for it: "That our oxen may be strong to labour" in the plough; "that they may be fat and fleshy," so some; in good working case. 3. An uninterrupted peace. First, That there be no war; "no breaking in" of invaders, "no going out" of deserters. Let not our enemies break in upon us; let us not have occasion to march out against them. War brings with it abundance of mischiefs, whether it be offensive or defensive. Secondly, That there be no oppression or faction, "no complaining in our streets;" that the people may have no cause to complain, either of their government or of one another; nor may be so peevish as to complain without cause. It is desirable thus to dwell in quiet habitations.—Henry.

PSALM CXLV. DEVOTION.—The five foregoing psalms were all of a piece, all full of prayers; this, and the five that follow it to the end of the book, are all of a piece, all full of praises; and though this only is entitled David's Psalm, yet we have no reason to think but that they were all his, as well as all the foregoing prayers. And it is observable, 1. That after five psalms of prayer, follow six psalms of praise; for those that are much in prayer, shall not want matter for praise; and those that have sped in prayer must abound in praise. Our thanksgivings for mercy, when we have received it, should even exceed our supplications for it, when we were in pursuit of it. David, in the last of his begging psalms, had promised to praise God, Ps. cxliv. 9, and here he performs his promise. 2. That the book of Psalms concludes with psalms of praise, all praise, for praise is the conclusion of the whole matter, it is that in which all the psalms centre. And it intimates, that God's people, toward the end of their life, should abound much in praise, and the rather, because, at the end of their life, they hope to remove to the world of everlasting praise; and the nearer they come to heaven, the more they should accustom themselves to the work of heaven. This is one of those psalms which are composed alphabetically, (as Ps. xxv. and xxxiv. &c.) that it might be the more easily committed to memory and kept in mind. The Jewish writers justly extol this psalm as a star of the first magnitude in this bright constellation; and some of them have an extravagant saying concerning it, not much unlike some of the Popish superstitions, That whosoever will sing this psalm constantly three times a day, shall certainly be happy in the world to come. In this psalm, (1.) David engages himself and others to praise God, ver. 1, 2, 4—7. (2.) He fastens upon those things that are proper matter for praise; God's greatness, ver. 3, his goodness, ver. 8. 9, the proofs of both in the administration of his kingdom, ver. 13, the kingdom of providence, ver. 14—16, the kingdom of grace, ver. 17—20; and then he concludes with a resolution to continue praising God, ver. 21, with which resolution our hearts must be filled, and in which they must be fixed, in singing this psalm.—Henry.

PSALM CXLVI PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—In heaven, when one hallelujah closes, another commences: and sometimes the believer on earth is so carried above his fears, sorrows, and sins, as to emulate the incessant thanksgivings of "the saints in light." If we desire to praise the Lord while we live, as our most delightful occupation, we shall certainly praise him "while we have any being," even to all eternity. With these glorious prospects before our eyes, how mean do the pursuits of ambition, or connection with the great, seem to us! and how needful does it appear to dissuade men from this common, but destructive, idolatry!—Scott.

PSALM CXLVII.—This psalm is, by the Septuagint, ascribed to Haggai and Zechariah: and, indeed, many expressions in it, favour the supposition that it was composed as a song of praise for the restoration of the Jews to Jerusalem and their own land; but it seems better suited to the times of Nehemiah, when the walls were rebuilt, and the state re-established, than to the unsettled condition of the newly returned captives, when Haggai and Zechariah prophesied to them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The contrast between the majesty and the mercy of our God should never be overlooked. Whilst "he telleth the number of the stars," he condescendeth to hear the poor broken-hearted sinner, and to heal by his consolations the wounded spirit. His greatness, power, and wisdom are infinite; and he displays his justice in crushing to the earth the haughtiest and mightiest rebels: yet he lifteth up the meek from their dejection and abject misery, to the comfort of his favour here, and to the throne of glory hereafter. He provides for all creatures, by means worthy of himself; and whilst he "feeds the young ravens who cry unto him," he gives a pledge that he will not leave destitute his praying people. He delighteth not in those things in which sinners confide and glory: but his delight is in them who conscientiously fear and serve him, hoping in his mercy alone for pardon and acceptance. These are the inhabitants of Zion, who praise his name; he is their protector, and will bless them and their children with spiritual peace and abundant supplies of every good thing; whilst they that trust in chariots and horses or in their own [illegible] righteousness, will [illegible]

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

THE original name of this book is Meshalim, which seems to signify authoritative maxims, or maxims of high estimation and authority; and a great part of it is made up of detached aphorisms, containing most important practical instruction. "The proverbs generally consist of two sentences, joined in a kind of antithesis, the second being sometimes a reduplication, sometimes an explanation, and sometimes an opposition (or contrast) to the sense of the first. This style of composition produces great beauty in many other parts of Scripture where it is employed for poetical arrangement." "The wisdom of all ages, from the highest antiquity, has chosen to compress its lessons into compendious sentences, which were peculiarly adapted to the simplicity of earlier times, which are readily conceived and easily retained, and which circulate in society as useful principles, to be unfolded and applied as occasion may require." "Solomon's Proverbs are so justly founded on the principles of human nature, and so adapted to the permanent interests of man, that they agree with the manners of every age, and may be assumed as the rules for the direction of our conduct in every condition and rank of life."—GREY.

The book seems not to have been all written at any one period of Solomon's life, but from time to time, as circumstances occurred. It is, however, probable, that the first nine chapters were framed as an introduction to the whole, towards the close of his days. This is reckoned the first part of the book, or the preface to it. The second part extends from the beginning of the tenth chapter to the seventeenth verse of the twenty-second, and, more strictly speaking, contains the Proverbs. In the third part, which reaches to the end of the twenty-fourth chapter, the sacred writer again addresses his son or scholar as present, with more connected exhortations. The fourth part consists of proverbs collected by the men of Hezekiah, and reaches to the end of the twenty-ninth chapter. And the last two chapters, which bear the names of Agur and Lemuel, are regarded as the fifth part, and will be considered more properly in the exposition. There can be no doubt that the whole, or the greater part, of the book is a poetical composition; yet the nature and rules of Hebrew poetry are at present so little understood, that every attempt to alter the original, or to interpret its meaning, by reasons deduced from the metre, must, to the serious mind, be entirely unsatisfactory.

PSALM CLXVIII. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—All the works of God, above and below, (fallen rational creatures excepted,) without our exhortations, do in their way proclaim the Creator's praise; and it is worthy of notice, that men, who do not praise the Lord and obey his command, are more ungovernable than the monsters of the deep, than the raging sea itself, than the stormy wind, or the devouring flame!—But how desirable would it be, if kings of the earth, and all princes, nobles, and rulers would count it their honour to lead the chorus of praise to the Lord, and use all their authority in promoting his glory! and if all people would unite in this service! How reasonable and becoming would it be for "young men and maidens," to employ the fire and vigour of their active spirits, and to seek their pleasure and joy, in doing the will and celebrating the praises of the Lord; and for the aged to show that they are ripening for heaven, by teaching their infant posterity to lisp thanksgivings unto him! Alas! how little do any of us feel, or express, of this fervent spirit of adoring love and gratitude! and how few of the human species praise him, in concert with the angels and saints in heaven! But we are taught to pray, "Hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." Nor will our fervent prayers be always unanswered: "for all kings shall yet fall down before God our Saviour, all nations shall do him service." In the meantime, let us show that we are his saints, by praising his name continually. He is not only our Creator, but our Redeemer, who hath made us "a people near unto him," and will exalt us "above all our enemies. His name only is excellent; and his glory is above the earth and heaven;" and in redemption, those infinite excellencies, and that unspeakable glory are displayed to our view, and form the source of all our hopes and joys.—Scott.

PSALM CXLIX.—The foregoing psalm was a hymn of praise to the Creator; this to the Redeemer. It is a psalm of triumph in the God of Israel, and over the enemies of Israel. Probably it was penned upon occasion of some victory which Israel was blessed and honoured with. Some conjecture that it was penned when David had taken the stronghold of Zion, and settled his government there. But it looks further to the kingdom of the Messiah, who, in the chariot of the everlasting gospel, goes forth conquering and to conquer. To him, and his graces and glories, we must have an eye, in singing this psalm, which speaks, 1. Abundance of joy to all the people of God, ver. 1—5. 2. Matter of terror to the proudest of their enemies, ver. 6—9.—Henry.

[illegible] the two last of the psalms have both the same number of verses, [illegible]; but the scope of them is very different; the first psalm is an elaborate instruction in our duty, to prepare us for the comforts of our devotion: this is all rapture and transport, and, perhaps, was penned on purpose to be the conclusion of those sacred songs, to show what is the design of them all, and that is, to assist us in praising God. The psalmist had been himself full of the praises of God, and here he would fain fill all the world with them: again and again he calls, "Praise the Lord, praise him, praise him," no less than thirteen times in these six short verses. He shows, 1. For what, and upon what account, God is to be praised, ver. 1, 2. 2. How, and with what expressions of joy, God is to be praised, ver. 3—5. 3. Who must praise the Lord; it is every one's business, ver. 6. In singing this psalm, we should endeavour to get our hearts much affected with the perfections of God, and the praises with which he is, and shall be, for ever attended, throughout all ages, world without end.—Henry.

CHAP. I. PROVERBS—THEIR AUTHOR.—Ver. 1. They are "the proverbs of Solomon." 1. His name signifies peaceable, and the character both of his spirit and of his reign answered to it; both were peaceable. David, whose life was full of troubles, wrote a book of devotion; for, "Is any afflicted? Let him pray." Solomon, who lived quietly, wrote a book of instruction, for "when the churches had rest, they were edified." In times of peace, we should learn ourselves, and teach others, that which, in troublous times, both they and we must practise. 2. He was "the Son of David;" it was his honour to stand related to that good man, and he reckoned it so with good reason, for he fared the better for it, 1 Kings xi. 12. He had been blessed with a good education, and many a good prayer had been put up for him, Ps. lxxii. 1, the effect of both which appeared in his wisdom and usefulness. The "generation of the upright" are sometimes thus blessed, that they are made blessings, eminent blessings, in their day. Christ is often called "the Son of David," and Solomon was a type of him in this, as in other things, that he "opened his mouth in parables," or "proverbs." 3. He was "king of Israel;" a king, and yet it was no disparagement to him to be an instructor of the ignorant, and a teacher of babes; king of Israel, that people among whom God was known, and his name was great; among them he learned wisdom, and to them he communicated it.

THEIR PURPOSE.—Ver. 4. They are of use to all, but are designed especially, 1. For "the simple, to give subtilty to" them. The instructions here given are plain and easy, and level to the meanest capacity; "the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein;" and those are likely to receive benefit by them who are sensible of their own ignorance, and their need to be taught, and are therefore desirous to receive instruction; and those [illegible] these instructions, in their light and power, [illegible] terpretation; [k]the words of the wise, and their [l]dark sayings.

7 ¶ The fear of the LORD[s] is the [t]beginning of knowledge: but fools despise wisdom and instruction.

8 My son, [p]hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother:

9 For [q]they shall be [‡]an [r]ornament of grace[4] unto thy head, and chains about thy neck.

10 ¶ My son, [s]if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.

11 If they say, Come with us, [t]let us lay wait for blood, [u]let us lurk privily for the innocent without cause:

12 Let us [x]swallow them up alive as the grave; and whole, as those that go down into the pit:

13 We [a]shall find all precious substance, we shall fill our houses with spoil:

14 Cast in thy lot among us; let us all have one purse:

15 My son, walk not thou in the way with them; [c]refrain thy foot from their path:

16 For their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood.

17 Surely in vain the net is spread in the [§]sight of any bird.

18 And they [f]lay wait for their own blood; they lurk privily for their own lives.

19 So are the ways of [g]every one that is greedy of gain; which [h]taketh away the life of the owners thereof.

20 ¶ [i]Wisdom crieth without;[5] she uttereth her voice in the streets:

21 She [k]crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates: in the city she uttereth her words, saying,

22 How long, [m]ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity? and the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge?

23 Turn you at my reproof: behold, I will pour out my spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you.

24 ¶ Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded;

25 But ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof:

26 I also [y]will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh;

27 When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when [b]distress and anguish cometh upon you.

28 Then [c]shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me:

29 For [c]that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the LORD:

30 They [g]would none of my counsel: they despised all my reproof.

31 Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices.

32 For the *turning away of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them.

33 But [l]whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, [m]and shall be quiet from fear of evil.

CHAP. II.

Wisdom promiseth godliness to her children, 1, safety from evil company, 16, and direction in good ways, 20.

MY son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee;

2 So that [c]thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and [d]apply thine heart to understanding:

3 Yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and *liftest up thy voice for understanding;

4 If [f]thou seekest her as silver, and [g]searchest for her as for hid treasures;[1]

5 Then shalt thou understand the fear of the LORD, and [k]find the knowledge of God.

6 For [l]the LORD giveth wisdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding.

7 He [n]layeth up sound wisdom for the righteous: he is [o]a buckler to them that walk uprightly.

8 He keepeth the paths of judgment, [q]and preserveth the way of his saints.

9 Then [r]shalt thou understand righteousness, and judgment, and equity; yea, every good path.

10 ¶ When wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul;

11 [t]Discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee:

12 To deliver thee from the way of the evil man, [x]from the man that speaketh froward things;

13 Who [y]leave the paths of uprightness, to walk in the ways of darkness;

14 Who rejoice to do evil, [b]and delight in the frowardness of the wicked;

15 Whose ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths:

16 To [d]deliver thee from the strange woman, even from the stranger which flattereth with her words;[2]

17 Which forsaketh [f]the guide of her youth, and forgetteth the covenant of her God.

18 For her house inclineth unto death, and her paths unto the dead.

19 [i]None that go unto her return again, neither [k]take they hold of the paths of life.

20 ¶ That thou mayest walk in the way of good men, and keep the paths of the righteous.

21 For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it.

22 But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors[3] shall be [†]rooted out of it.

simple, will hereby be made subtle, graciously crafty to know the sin they should avoid, and the duty they should do, and to escape the tempter's wiles. He that is "harmless as the dove," by observing Solomon's rules, may become "wise as" the "serpent;" and he that has been sinfully foolish, when he begins to govern himself by the word of God, becomes graciously wise. 2. For young people, to give them "knowledge and discretion." Youth is the learning age, catches at instructions, receives impressions, and retains what is then received; it is therefore of great consequence that the mind be then seasoned well, nor can it receive a better tincture than from Solomon's proverbs. Youth is rash, and heady, and inconsiderate: "man is born like the wild ass's colt:" and therefore needs to be broken by the restraints, and managed by the rules, we find here. And if young people will but take heed to their ways, according to Solomon's proverbs, they will soon gain the knowledge and discretion of the ancients. Solomon had an eye to posterity in writing this book, hoping by it to season the minds of the rising generation with the generous principles of wisdom and virtue. 3. What good use may be made of them, ver. 5, 6. Those who are young and simple may by them be made wise, and are not excluded from Solomon's school as they were from Plato's. But is it only for such? No; here is not only milk for babes, but strong meat for strong men. This book will not only make the foolish and bad wise and good, but the wise and good wiser and better; and though the simple and the young man may perhaps slight those instructions, and not be the better for them, yet "the wise man will hear;" wisdom will be justified by her own children, though not by the children sitting in the market-place. Note, Even wise men must hear, and not think themselves too wise to learn. "A wise man" is sensible of his own defects, (Plurima ignoro, sed ignorantiam meam non ignoro—I am ignorant of many things, but not of my own ignorance,) and therefore is still pressing forward, that he may "increase" in "learning," may know more, and know it better, more clearly and distinctly, and may know better how to make use of it. As long as we live, we should strive to increase in all useful learning. It was a saying of one of the greatest of the rabbins, Qui non auget scientiam, amittit de ea—If our stock of knowledge be not increasing, it is wasting; and they that would increase in learning must study the Scriptures; "those perfect the man of God." A wise man, by increasing in learning, is not only profitable to himself, but to others also. As a counsellor. "A man of understanding" in these precepts of wisdom, by comparing them with one another, and with his own observations, "shall" by degrees, "attain unto wise counsels," he stands fair for preferment, and will be consulted as an oracle, and intrusted with the conduct of public affairs; he shall come to "sit at the helm," so the word signifies. Note, Industry is the way to honour: and those whom God has blessed with wisdom must study to do good with it, according as their sphere is. It is more dignity indeed to be counsellor to the prince, but it is more charity to be counsellor to the poor, as Job was with his wisdom, Job xxix. 15, "I was eyes to the blind."—Henry.

CHAP. II. BLESSEDNESS OF WISDOM.—Ver. 5—9. 1. Instruction. The means of wisdom are given to all, but wisdom itself, "sound wisdom," is laid "up for the righteous," laid up in Christ their Head, in whom "are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," and who "is made of God to us Wisdom." The same that is the Spirit of revelation in the word, is a Spirit of wisdom in the souls of them that are sanctified; that wisdom of the prudent which is to understand his way; and it is sound wisdom, its foundations firm, its principles solid, and its products of lasting advantage. 2. Satisfaction. Some read it, He "lays up substance for the righteous," not only substantial knowledge, but substantial happiness and comfort, Prov. viii. 21. Riches are things that are not, and they that have them only fancy themselves happy; but what is laid up, in the promises and in heaven, for the righteous, will make them truly, thoroughly, and eternally happy. 3. Protection. Even they who "walk uprightly" may be brought into danger for the trial of their faith, but God is, and will be, "a Buckler to them," so that nothing that happens to them, shall do them any real hurt or possess them with any terrific apprehensions; they are safe, and they shall think themselves so. "Fear not, Abraham, I am thy Shield." It is their way, the paths of judgment in which they walk, that the Lord knows, and owns, and takes care of. 4. Grace to persevere to the end.

THE STRANGE WOMAN.—Ver. 16. Let the sufferings of others be our warnings; take heed of the sin of whoredom; for, First, The ruin of those who are guilty of it is certain and unavoidable, if they do not repent. It is a sin that has a direct tendency to the killing of the soul, the extinguishing of all good affections and dispositions in it, and the exposing of it to the wrath and curse of God, and the sword of his justice. They that live in forbidden pleasures are dead while they live. Let discretion preserve every man, not only from the evil woman, but from the evil house, for the "house inclines to death," it is in the road that leads directly to eternal death; "and her paths unto Rephaim," to the giants, so some read it, the sinners of the old world, who living in luxury and excess of riot, were cut down out of time, and their foundation overthrown with a flood. Our Lord Jesus deters us from sinful pleasures, with the consideration of everlasting torments which follow them, "where the worm dies not, nor is the fire quenched." See Matt. v. 28, 29. Secondly, Their repentance and recovery are extremely hazardous; "none," or next to none, "that go unto her, return again." It is very rare that any who are caught

MY son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandments:

2 For length of days, and *long life, [d]and peace, shall they add to thee.

3 Let not mercy and truth forsake thee: [f]bind them about thy neck;[1] [g]write them upon the table of thine heart:

4 So shalt thou find favour and †good understanding in the sight of God and man.

5 ¶ Trust in the LORD with all thine heart; [k]and lean not unto thine own understanding.

6 [l]In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths.

7 ¶ [n]Be not wise in thine own eyes: fear the LORD, and depart from evil.

8 It shall be ‡health to [q]thy navel, and [s]marrow to thy bones.

9 ¶ Honour the LORD with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase:[2]

10 [t]So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.

11 ¶ My son, despise not the chastening of the LORD; [u]neither be weary of his correction:

12 For whom the LORD loveth he correcteth; even as a father the son in whom he delighteth.

13 ¶ Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that [l]getteth understanding.

14 For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold.

15 She is [a]more precious than rubies: and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her.

16 [c]Length of days is in her right hand; [d]and in her left hand riches and honour.

17 Her ways are [e]ways of pleasantness, and [f]all her paths are peace.

18 She is a tree of life[3] to them that lay hold upon her: and happy is every one that retaineth her.

19 The LORD by wisdom hath founded the earth; by understanding hath he *established the heavens.

20 By his knowledge the depths are broken up, and the clouds drop down the dew.

21 ¶ My son, [l]let not them depart from thine eyes: [m]keep sound wisdom and discretion:

22 So shall they be life unto thy soul, and [o]grace to thy neck.

23 Then [p]shalt thou walk in thy way safely, and thy foot shall not stumble.

24 When thou liest down, thou shalt not be afraid: yea, thou shalt lie down, [r]and thy sleep shall be sweet.

25 Be not afraid of sudden fear, neither of the desolation of the wicked, when it cometh.

26 For the LORD shall be thy confidence, and shall keep thy foot from being taken.

27 ¶ Withhold not good from them †to whom it is due, when it is [y]in the power of thine hand to do it.

28 Say not unto thy neighbour, [z]Go,[4] and come again, and to-morrow I will give; when thou hast it by thee.

29 ¶ ‡Devise not evil against thy neighbour, seeing he dwelleth securely by thee.

30 Strive not with a man without cause, if he have done thee no harm.

31 Envy thou not the §oppressor, and [d]choose none of his ways.

32 For the froward is abomination to the LORD: but his secret is with the righteous.

33 ¶ The curse of the LORD is in the house of the wicked: but he blesseth the habitation of the just.

34 Surely [l]he scorneth the scorners: but [k]he giveth grace unto the lowly.

35 The wise shall inherit glory: [m]but shame [l]shall be the promotion of fools.[5] in this snare of the Devil recover themselves, so much is the heart hardened, and the mind blinded, by the deceitfulness of this sin. Having once lost their "hold of the paths of life," they know not how to take hold of them again, but are perfectly besotted and bewitched with those base lusts.—Henry.

CHAP. III. ENCOURAGEMENT TO OBEDIENCE.—Ver. 2. To encourage us to submit ourselves to all the restraints and injunctions of the divine law, we are assured that it is the certain way to long life and prosperity. 1. It is the way to be long-lived. God's commandments "shall add to us length of days;" to a good useful life on earth, they shall add an eternal life in heaven, "length of days for ever and ever," Ps. xxi. 4. God shall be our Life, and the Length of our days, and that will be indeed long life, with an addition. But, because length of days may possibly become a burthen and a trouble, it is promised, 2. That it shall prove the way to be easy too, so that even the days of old age shall not be evil days, but days in which thou shalt have pleasure; "Peace shall they" be continually "adding to thee." As grace increases, peace shall; and "of the increase of Christ's government and peace," in the heart as well as in the world, "there shall be no end. Great" and growing "peace have they that love the law."

FRUIT OF WISDOM.—Ver. 15. Wisdom is here represented as a bright and bountiful queen, reaching forth gifts to her faithful and loving subjects, and offering them to all that will submit to her government. 1. Is length of days a blessing? Yes, the most valuable; life includes all good, and therefore she offers that in her right hand. Religion puts us into the best methods of prolonging life, entitles us to the promises of it, and though our days on earth should be no more than our neighbour's, yet it will secure to us everlasting life in a better world. 2. Are riches and honour accounted blessings? They are so, and them she reaches out with "her left hand." For as she is ready to embrace those that submit to her with both arms, so she is ready to give out to them with both hands. They shall have the wealth of this world, as far as Infinite Wisdom sees good for them; the true riches, however, by which men are rich toward God, are secured to them; nor is there any honour, by birth or preferment, comparable to that which attends religion; it makes the "righteous more excellent than his neighbour," recommends men to God, commands respect and veneration with all the sober part of mankind, and will in the other world make those that are now buried in obscurity to "shine forth as the sun." 3. Is pleasure courted as much as any thing? It is so, and it is certain that true piety has in it the greatest true pleasure. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness;" the ways in which she has directed us to walk, are such as we shall find abundance of delight and satisfaction in. All the enjoyments and entertainments of sense are not comparable to the pleasure which gracious souls have in communion with God and doing good. That which is the only right way to bring us to our journey's end, we must walk in, fair or foul, pleasant or unpleasant; but the way of religion, as it is the right way, so it is a pleasant way, it is smooth and clean, and strewed with roses. "All her paths are peace." There is not only peace in the end, but peace in the way; not only in the way of religion in general, but in the particular paths of that way, in all her paths, all the several acts, instances, and duties of it. One does not imbitter what the other sweetens, as it is with the alloys of this world; but they are all peace, not only sweet, but safe; the saints enter into peace on this side heaven, and enjoy a present sabbatism. 4. It is the happiness of paradise; ver. 18, "She is a tree of life." True grace is that to the soul which the "tree of life" would have been, from which our first parents were shut out for eating of the forbidden tree; it is a seed of immortality, a "well of living waters springing up to life eternal." It is an earnest of the New Jerusalem, in the midst of which is "the tree of life," Rev. xxii. 2; ii. 7. They that feed and feast on this heavenly wisdom, shall not only be cured by it of every fatal malady, but shall find an antidote against age and death; they shall "eat and live for ever." 5. It is a participation of the happiness of God himself, for wisdom is his everlasting glory and blessedness, ver. 19, 20.—Henry.

CHAP. IV. INJUNCTION TO SEEK WISDOM.—1. "Get this 'wisdom,' get this 'understanding,' ver. 5. And again, 'Get wisdom,' and 'with all thy getting get understanding, ver. 7. Pray for it, take pains for it, give diligence in the use of all appointed means to attain it, 'wait at wisdom's gate,' Prov. viii. 34. Get dominion over thy corruptions, which are thy follies, get possession of wise principles, and the habits of wisdom; get it by experience, get it 'above all thy getting,' be more in care, and take more pains to get this, than to get the wealth of this world; whatever thou forgettest, get this; reckon it a great achievement, to pursue it accordingly." True wisdom is God's gift, and yet we are here commanded to get it, because God gives it to those that labour for it: yet, after all, we must not say, "Our might, and the power of our hand, have gotten us this wealth." 2. "Forget her not," ver. 5, "forsake her not," ver. 6, "let her not go," ver. 13, "but keep her." Those that have got this wisdom must take heed of losing it again by returning to folly. That good thing which is committed to us, we must keep, and not let it drop, through carelessness, nor suffer it to be forced from us, or suffer ourselves to be wheedled out of it; never let go such a jewel. 3. "Love her," ver 6, and "embrace her," ver. 8, as worldly men love their wealth, and set their hearts upon it. Religion should be very dear to us, dearer than any thing in this world; and if we cannot reach to be great masters of wisdom, yet let us be true lovers of it; and what grace we have, be straitened; and when thou runnest, [y]thou shalt not stumble.

13 [z]Take fast hold of instruction; [a]let her not go: keep her; for [b]she is thy life.

14 ¶ Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men.

15 Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away.

16 For [c]they sleep not, except they have done mischief; and their sleep is taken away, unless they cause some to fall.

17 For they eat the bread of wickedness,[2] and drink the wine of violence.

18 But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

19 The [b]way of the wicked is as darkness: they know not at what they stumble.

20 ¶ My son attend to my words; incline thine ear unto my sayings.

21 Let them not [k]depart from thine eyes; keep them [l]in the midst of thine heart.

22 For they are [m]life unto those that find them, and *health to all their flesh.

23 ¶ Keep thy heart [t]with all diligence; [o]for out of it are the issues of life.[3]

24 [p]Put away from thee [‡]a froward mouth, and perverse lips put far from thee.

25 Let [q]thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee.

26 Ponder the path of thy feet, and [§]let all thy ways be established.

27 Turn not to the right hand nor to the left: [r]remove thy foot from evil.

Solomon exhorteth to the study of wisdom, 1; he sheweth the mischiefs of whoredom and riot, 3; he exhorteth to contentedness, liberality, and chastity, 15.

MY son, [a]attend unto my wisdom, and [b]bow thine ear to my understanding:

2 That thou mayest regard discretion, and that thy lips may keep knowledge.

3 ¶ For [d]the lips of a strange woman drop as an honeycomb, and her *mouth is [e]smoother than oil:

4 But [f]her end is bitter as wormwood, [g]sharp as a two-edged sword.

5 Her feet go down to death; her steps take hold on hell.

6 Lest thou shouldest ponder the path of life, her ways are moveable, that thou canst not know them.

7 Hear me now therefore, O ye children, and depart not from the words of my mouth.

8 Remove thy way far from her, and come not nigh the door of her house:

9 Lest [p]thou give thine honour unto others, and thy years unto the cruel:

10 Lest strangers be filled with thy [†]wealth; and thy labours be in the house of a stranger;

Against suretiship, 1, idleness, 6, and mischievousness, 12. The blessings of obedience, 20. Evils of whoredom, 25.

MY son, [a]if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger;

2 Thou art [b]snared with the words of thy mouth, thou art taken with the words of thy mouth.

3 Do this now, my son, and deliver thyself, [c]when thou art come into the hand of thy friend; [d]go, humble thyself, *and make sure thy friend.

4 Give not sleep to thine eyes, nor slumber to thine eyelids.

5 Deliver thyself as a roe from the hand of the hunter, and as a bird from the hand of the fowler.

6 ¶ Go [g]to the ant, [h]thou sluggard;[1] consider her ways, and be wise:

7 Which having no guide, overseer, or ruler,

8 Provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest.

9 [i]How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? [m]when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?

10 Yet [n]a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep:

let us embrace it with a sincere affection, as those that admire its beauty. 4. "'Exalt her,' ver. 8, always keep up high thoughts of religion, speak of it with value and veneration, and do all thou canst to bring it into reputation, and maintain the credit of it among men; concur with God in his purpose, which is, to magnify the law and make it honourable, and do what thou canst to serve that purpose." Let wisdom's children not only justify her, but magnify her, and prefer her before that which is dearest to them in this world.—Henry.

THE HEART.—Ver. 23. As the heart in the body seems the centre and fountain of life, because the blood thence circulates into every part, conveying with it health or disease, so are the affections to a man's whole conduct. If the heart, in this sense, be purified by faith and grace, and be properly kept, the tenor of the thoughts, words, and actions will be pure, for they flow from it: if it be the residence of pride, impiety, unbelief, avarice, malice, or lust, the whole conduct will be tainted with these vices; if they find admission, or prevail for a season, they will proportionably infect the tempers, conduct, and discourse. Therefore this citadel should above all things be garrisoned that it may not be seized, this spring should be watched, that it may not be poisoned; for as the heart is, so will the life be; if not openly, yet in the sight of God, before whom thoughts, desires, and dispositions decide a man's character. "For as the heart is either pure or corrupt, so is the whole course of a man's life."—Scott.

CHAP. V. PERNICIOUS RESULTS OF IMPURITY.—Ver. 3—11. The arguments which Solomon here uses to enforce this caution are taken from the same topic with those before, the many mischiefs which attend this sin. 1. "It blasts the reputation; thou wilt 'give thine honour unto others;' ver. 9, thou wilt lose it thyself, thou wilt put into the hand of each of thy neighbours a stone to throw at thee, for they will all, with good reason, cry shame on thee, will despise thee, and trample on thee, as a foolish man. Whoredom is a sin that makes men contemptible and base, and no man of sense or virtue will care to keep company with one that keeps company with harlots." 2. "It wastes the time, gives 'the years,' the years of youth, the flower of men's time, unto the cruel, that base lust of thine, which, with the utmost cruelty, wars 'against the soul;' that base harlot which pretends an affection for thee, but really hunts for the precious life." Those years that should be given to the honour of a gracious God are spent in the service of a cruel sin." 3. "It ruins the estate; ver. 10, 'strangers' will be 'filled with thy wealth,' which thou art but intrusted with as a steward for thy family; and the fruit of 'thy labours,' which should be provision for thine own house, will be in 'the house of a stranger,' that neither has right to it, nor will ever thank thee for it." 4. "It is destructive to the health, and shortens men's days; 'thy flesh and thy body' will be 'consumed' by it," ver. 11. The lusts of uncleanness not only "war against the soul," which the sinner neglects, and is in no care about, but they war against the body too, which he is so indulgent of, and is in such care to please and pamper; such deceitful, such foolish, such hurtful lusts are they. Those that give themselves to work uncleanness with greediness, waste their strength, throw themselves into weakness, and often have their bodies filled with loathsome distempers, by which the number of their months is cut off in the midst, and they fall unpitied sacrifices to a cruel lust. 5. "It will fill the mind with horror, if ever conscience be awakened. Though thou art merry now, 'sporting thyself in thine own deceivings,' yet thou wilt certainly 'mourn at the last,' ver. 11. Thou art all this while making work for repentance, and laying up matter for vexation and torment in the reflection, when the sin is set before thee in its own colours." Sooner or later it will bring sorrow; either when the soul is humbled, and brought to repentance, or when the "flesh and body are consumed;" either by sickness, when conscience flies in the sinner's face, or by the grave; when the body is rotting there, the soul is racking in the torments of hell, where the worm dies not, and, "Son, remember," is the constant peal.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—If we bow our obedient ear to wisdom, we shall both regard discretion in our own conduct, and our lips will keep knowledge for the use of others: and we always need, but especially in youth, her salutary cautions; for innumerable snares and temptations beset our path. But there is no one which hath proved fatal to greater numbers than the blandishments of strange women. Nay, this hath generally been Satan's method of drawing men off from the worship of God into idolatry, or divers forms of false religion, which are spiritual whoredom and adultery. The soothing language of these fascinating tempters, blended with flatteries, professions of love, and artful persuasions, are as pleasing to the carnal heart as honey from the comb to the palate, and are smooth and insinuating as oil. But the consequences of yielding to their enticements prove bitter as wormwood, poisonous as hemlock, and sharp as a two-edged sword; nay, the harlot's "feet go down to death, her steps take hold on hell."—Scott.

CHAP. VI. LESSON OF INDUSTRY—THE ANT.—Ver. 6. Learn to "provide meat in summer;" that is, 1. We must prepare for hereafter, and not mind the present time only; not eat up all, and lay up nothing; but in gathering time treasure up for a spending time. Thus provident we must be in our worldly affairs, not with an anxious care, but with a prudent foresight; lay in for winter, for straits and wants that may happen, and for 11 So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man.

12 ¶ A naughty person, a wicked man, [q]walketh with a froward mouth.[2]

13 He [r]winketh with his eyes, he speaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers:

14 Frowardness is in his heart, [t]he deviseth mischief continually; [u]he [†]soweth discord.

15 Therefore shall his calamity come suddenly; suddenly shall [y]he be broken without remedy.[3]

16 ¶ These [z]six things doth the LORD hate: yea, seven are an abomination [‡]unto him:

18 An [d]heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, [e]feet that be swift in running to mischief,

19 [f]A false witness that speaketh lies, and him [g]that soweth discord among brethren.

20 ¶ My son, keep thy father's commandment, and forsake not the law of thy mother:

21 Bind them continually upon thine heart, and tie them about thy neck.

22 When thou goest, it shall lead thee; when thou sleepest, it shall keep thee; and when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee.

23 For [l]the commandment is a [l]lamp; and the law is light; [m]and reproofs of instruction are the way of life:

24 To [o]keep thee from the evil woman, from the flattery *of the tongue of a strange woman.

26 For [r]by means of a whorish woman a man is brought to [s]a piece of bread: and [†]the adulteress will [t]hunt for the precious life.

27 Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned?

28 Can one go upon hot coals, and his feet not be burned?

29 So [x]he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife; whosoever [y]toucheth her shall not be innocent.

30 Men do not despise a thief, if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry;

31 But [z]if he be found, he shall restore sevenfold:[4] [a]he shall give all the substance of his house.

33 [d]A wound and dishonour shall he get; [e]and his reproach shall not be wiped away.

34 For [f]jealousy is the rage of a man: therefore he will not spare in the day of vengeance.

Solomon persuadeth to a sincere and kind familiarity with wisdom, 1. In an example of his own experience, 6, he sheweth the cunning of a lewd woman, 10, and the desperate simplicity of a wanton youth, 22.

[a]MY son, keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee.

2 Keep my commandments, and live; and my law as the apple of thine eye.

3 [f]Bind them upon thy fingers,[1] write them upon the table of thine heart.

4 Say unto wisdom, [h]Thou art my sister; and call understanding thy kinswoman:

5 That they may keep thee from the strange woman, from the stranger which flattereth with her words.

6 ¶ For at the window of my house I looked through my casement,

7 And beheld among the simple ones, I discerned among *the youths, a young man void of understanding,

8 Passing through the street [n]near her corner; and he went the way to her house,

9 In [o]the twilight,[2] in the [†]evening, in the black and dark night:

10 And, behold, there met him a woman with [p]the attire of an harlot, and [q]subtile of heart.

11 (She is [r]loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house:

12 Now is she without, now in the streets, and lieth in wait at every corner.)

13 So she caught him, and kissed him, and [‡]with an impudent face said unto him,

14 [§]I have peace-offerings with me; this day have I paid my vows.

18 Come, let us take our fill of love until the morning: let us solace ourselves with loves.

19 For [d]the goodman is not at home, [e]he is gone a long journey:

20 He hath taken a bag of money [l]with him, and will come home at *the day appointed.[4]

21 [f]With her much fair speech she caused him to yield, with the flattering of her lips she forced him.

22 He goeth after her [†]straightway, [h]as an ox goeth to the slaughter, or as a fool to [i]the correction of the stocks;

23 Till [k]a dart strike through his liver; as a bird hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life.

24 ¶ Hearken unto me now therefore, O ye children, and attend to the words of my mouth.

25 Let not thine heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths.

old age; much more in the affairs of our souls. We must provide meat and food, that which is substantial, and will stand us in stead, and which we shall most need. In the enjoyment of the means of grace, provide for the want of them; in life, for death; in time, for eternity; in the state of probation and preparation, we must provide for the state of retribution. 2. We must take pains, and labour, in our business, yea, though we labour under inconveniences; even "in summer," when the weather is hot, the ant is busy in "gathering food," and laying it up, and does not indulge her ease, nor take her pleasure, as the grasshopper, that sings and sports in the summer, and then perishes in the winter. The ants help one another; if one have a grain of corn too big for her to carry home, her neighbours will come in to her assistance. 3. We must improve opportunities, we must gather when it is to be had, as the ant does in "summer" and "harvest," in the proper time. It is our wisdom to improve the season while that favours us, because that may be done then, which cannot be done at all, or not so well done, at another time.

SINS TO BE AVOIDED.—Ver. 16. 1. Haughtiness, conceitedness of ourselves, and contempt of others; "a proud look." There are seven things that God hates, and pride is the first, because it is at the bottom of much sin, and gives rise to it. God sees the pride in the heart, and hates it there; but when it prevails to that degree, that the show of men's countenance witnesses against them, that they overvalue themselves, and undervalue all about them, this is in a special manner hateful to him; for then pride is proud of itself, and sets shame at defiance. 2. Falsehood, and fraud, and dissimulation. Next to a "proud look," nothing is more an abomination to God than a "lying tongue;" nothing more sacred than truth, nor more necessary to conversation than speaking truth; God and all good men hate and abhor lying. 3. Cruelty and blood-thirstiness. The devil was, from the beginning, a liar and a murderer, (John viii. 44,) and therefore as "a lying tongue," so "hands that shed innocent blood," are hateful to God; because they have in them the devil's image, and do him service. 4. Subtlety in the contrivance of sin, wisdom to do evil, "a heart that" designs, and a head that "devises, wicked imaginations," that is acquainted with the depths of Satan, and knows how to carry on a covetous, envious, revengeful plot, most effectually. The more there is of craft and management in sin, the more it is an abomination to God. 5. Vigour and diligence in the prosecution of sin; "feet that are swift in running to mischief," as if they were afraid of losing time, or were impatient of delay, in a thing they are so greedy of.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. THE SEDUCTRESS.—Ver. 6—23. This seems to have been an incident which Solomon had witnessed and investigated, and which he recorded as an illustration of his former observations. From his window he noticed a raw youth, whose appearance and behaviour showed him to be void of understanding. As he sauntered through the street, perhaps in quest of adventure or amusement, in the dusk of evening, before it was quite dark, he came near the house of a bad woman. It is not said that he intended to visit her, or even that he knew she lived there; but he was loitering about, in a place where he had no business, and at an unseasonable hour. Accordingly, a woman came forth to meet him, who was married, and consequently the more criminal and dangerous: for her attire was that of a harlot, and her artfulness was equal to her profligacy. Indeed, her whole character was of the same stamp; loquacious and vociferous, stubborn and untractable, she hated confinement and employment, and was perpetually gadding abroad in every place where she had no business, except to work iniquity. Observing, it seems, the youth to be bashful, she threw aside all regard to decency, and behaved and conversed with him in the most shameless manner. To represent her prosperity, and the plentiful entertainment she could give him, she stated that she had been offering a peace-offering in the performance of a vow, and was about to feast upon the sacrifice. Nor will it appear wonderful that these sacred ordinances should give occasion to carnal feasts, attended with every vice, when we reflect how all kind of sensuality is indulged in, under pretence of commemorating the nativity of Christ, who was "manifested to destroy the works of the devil!"—This wicked woman pretended that she came forth on purpose to meet the youth from a peculiar affection; and that her husband, whom she seems to speak of with contempt, was gone a long journey with a bag of money, perhaps intimating that he neglected her, and went abroad to indulge himself; so that there was no danger of interruption or detection. By such enticements she overcame his reluctance and timidity, and compelled him with her flattering words to accompany her. Thus he was suddenly induced to commit a crime, punishable with death by the magistrate, and exposing him to the wrath of God; and if he escaped death at that time, it would serve as an introduction to further crimes, and would probably end in his ruin. So that, (however light licentious poets, actors, and artists, and those who delight in their works and exhibitions, may make of such incidents,) the wisdom of God declares, that the youth went "as an ox to the slaughter, or as a fool," (or drunkard, who knows not what is going forward,) to be set in the stocks and scourged. Nor would he be aware of his danger, "till a dart should strike through his liver:" and he was as a bird that "hasteth to the snare," for the sake of the bait, "and knoweth not that it is for his life." Ver. 26. Wounded. Samson, David, and even Solomon himself, were grievously wounded, and numbers of eminent men have been totally ruined, through such tempters. This seems to intimate that these chapters were written towards the close of Solomon's life. His

2 She standeth in the top of high places, by the way in the places of the paths:

3 She [b]crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in at the doors:

4 Unto you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of man.

5 O ye simple, understand wisdom [i] and, ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart.

6 ¶ Hear; [c]for I will speak of excellent things; and [f]the opening of my lips shall be right things.

24 When there were no depths, [n]I was brought forth; when there were no fountains abounding with water.

25 Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth:

26 While as yet he had not made the earth, nor the [†]fields, nor the [‡]highest part of the dust of the world.

27 When [q]he prepared the heavens, I was there: when he set a [§]compass upon the face of the depth:

33 Hear instruction, and be wise, and [a]refuse it not.

34 Blessed is the man that heareth me, [b]watching daily at my gates, waiting at the posts of my doors.[4]

35 For [c]whoso findeth me findeth life, and shall [f]obtain [d]favour of the LORD.

CHAP. VIII. THE DIVINE WISDOM, OR WORD.—Ver. 15, 16. Christ is called "the WORD OF GOD," and is just after said to have "on his vesture a name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords," Rev. xix. 13, 16. Accordingly, he here reveals himself as the source of power and authority, as well as of counsel and wisdom. All kings and judges are his deputies, dependent on him, and accountable to him. Magistracy is his appointment, and the benefits of it to fallen man are fruits of his mediation. Ver. 22. "In the beginning of his way, before his works of old," must mean "the eternal counsels and purposes of God."—"He declareth hereby the divinity and eternity of this wisdom, which he magnifieth and praiseth through this book; meaning thereby the eternal Son of God, Jesus Christ our Saviour, whom St. John calleth "the word that was in the beginning."—The whole plan of creation and providence was evidently formed, in relation to him, through whom all the perfections of the Godhead were to be displayed and glorified for ever. Ver. 23. The word rendered set up, is by some translated anointed, and by others obtained the dominion. It is used in the second psalm, concerning the Messiah, "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." In the purpose and counsel of God, the divine Redeemer was from everlasting appointed to the mediatorial throne. Ver. 24, 25. The word repeatedly rendered brought forth is translated in the old version begotten, (which in this agrees with the Septuagint,) and the language accords to several expressions in the New Testament. But whatever term is employed, it must always be remembered, that no human language can convey to us adequate ideas of the incomprehensible mysteries of God. Such a declaration as these verses contain, cannot be made concerning the written word of God; and it is not capable of a very easy and natural application to wisdom as a divine attribute; but it has a peculiar energy and propriety, when applied to the person and work of Christ, as the grand centre or scope of all the works of God. Ver. 30. "Then was I present by him, as one that was coeternal with him; and we did mutually and infinitely solace each other from everlasting." [Bp. Hall.]—The word rendered brought up with him, is by some translated cherished as in his bosom. Wisdom had said that she was begotten; now she adds, that she was in the bosom of the Father. Thus the apostle, John i. 18, "the only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father;" "who never was separated from the Father, always saw the Father; who 'seeth what the Father doeth, that he may do the like,' (with the same will and power;) in whom the Father places his pleasure and delight; willing that, by the Son, we should approach to him, in the Son we should honour and adore him, and honour the Son as himself."—Some, however, render the word actively, a nourisher or a chief worker; "signifying that this wisdom, even Jesus Christ, was equal with God the Father; and createth, preserveth, and still worketh with him."—It is observable, that some of those learned men who seem inclined to exclude this interpretation, pass over these remarkable expressions without much notice; and, indeed, deal in general language, to which the reader finds it difficult to annex any precise meaning, except that he will perceive that the divine attribute of wisdom is supposed to be the speaker; but it is not determined in what way her instructions are communicated.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. WISDOM'S INVITATION.—Ver. 4. 1. We are invited to Wisdom's house; turn in hither. I say we are, for which of us is there that must not own the character of the invited, that are "simple and want understanding?" Wisdom's doors stand open to such, and she is desirous to have some conversation with them, one word for their own good, nor has she any other design upon them. 2. We are invited to her table, ver. 5, "Come eat of my bread," taste of the true pleasures that are to be found in the knowledge and fear of God. By faith acted on the promises of the gospel, applying them to ourselves, and taking the comfort of them, we feed, we feast, upon the provisions Christ has made for poor souls. What we eat and drink we make our own, and are nourished and refreshed by it, and so are our souls by the word of God; it has that in it that is "meat and drink" to those that understand themselves.—Henry.

THE FOOLISH WOMAN.—Ver. 13—18. The foolish woman seems here to be an emblem, either of sensual pleasures, and the cares, interests, and pursuits of the world: or, of those idolatrous and erroneous religions, which, making large allowances to men's depraved inclinations allure them from "the truth as it is in Jesus." In this foolish woman, clamorousness and ignorance unite with high pretensions and noisy declamations and boasting, that mean nothing. She is represented as continually seated in the high places of the city, to draw aside those who were before going on their way; as the harlot entices men who were following their business without previous bad intentions. Some think that she represents the conscientious scruples of those whom she addresses, as simplicity and want of understanding, in the manner that the bashful virtuous youth is often made the fool in a comedy: or it is shown that she singles out and prevails against such as are destitute of wisdom and grace, alluring them into the ways of sin, with an enchanting delineation of the pleasure to be found in prohibited indulgences: as if the forbidden fruit were to be desired above any in the garden of God.—Scott.

16 [z]Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither: and as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him,

17 [a]Stolen waters are sweet, and bread [†]eaten in secret is pleasant.

18 But he knoweth not that [c]the dead[3] are there; and that her guests are in the depths of hell.

CHAP. X.

From this chapter to the five-and-twentieth are sundry observations of moral virtues and their contrary vices.

THE Proverbs of Solomon. [b]A wise son maketh a glad father: but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother.

2 [c]Treasures of wickedness profit nothing: but righteousness delivereth from death.

3 The LORD [e]will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish: but he casteth away [*]the substance of the wicked.

4 He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand:[1] [h]but the hand of the diligent maketh rich.

5 He that [i]gathereth in summer is a wise son: but he that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame.

6 Blessings are upon the head of the just: but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

7 The [n]memory of the just is blessed: but [o]the name of the wicked shall rot.

8 The [p]wise in heart will receive commandments: [q]but [†]a prating fool shall [‡]fall.

9 He [r]that walketh uprightly walketh surely: [s]but he that perverteth his ways shall be known.

10 He [t]that winketh with the eye causeth sorrow:[2] [u]but a prating fool shall [§]fall.

11 The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life: but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

12 Hatred stirreth up strifes: but love covereth all sins.

13 In the lips of him that hath understanding wisdom is found: but [c]a rod is for the back of him that is void of [‖]understanding.

14 Wise men [d]lay up knowledge: but the mouth of the foolish is near destruction.

15 The [f]rich man's wealth is his strong city: [g]the destruction of the poor is their poverty.

16 The [h]labour of the righteous tendeth to life: [i]the fruit of the wicked to sin.

17 He is in the way of life that keepeth instruction: but [l]he that refuseth reproof [*]erreth.

18 He [m]that hideth hatred with lying lips, and he [n]that uttereth a slander, is a fool.

19 In [o]the multitude of words there wanteth not sin: [p]but he that refraineth his lips is wise.

20 The tongue of the just is as choice silver: the heart of the wicked is little worth.

21 The lips of the righteous [s]feed many: but fools die for want of [†]wisdom.

22 The blessing of the LORD, [u]it maketh rich, and [x]he addeth no sorrow with it.

23 It is [y]as sport to a fool to do mischief: but a man of understanding hath wisdom.

24 The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him: but the desire of the righteous shall be granted.

25 As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more: but the righteous is [c]an everlasting foundation.

26 As [d]vinegar to the teeth,[3] and [e]as smoke to the eyes, [f]so is the sluggard to them that send him.

27 The fear of the LORD [‡]prolongeth days: but the years of the wicked shall be shortened.

28 The [i]hope of the righteous shall be gladness: [k]but the expectation of the wicked shall perish.

29 The way of the LORD is strength to the upright: but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.

30 The righteous shall never be removed: but [o]the wicked shall not inhabit the earth.

31 The mouth of the just bringeth forth wisdom: but the froward tongue shall be cut out.[4]

32 The lips of the righteous [r]know what is acceptable: but the mouth of the wicked speaketh [§]frowardness.

CHAP. XI.

2 When pride cometh, then cometh shame: [c]but with the lowly is wisdom.

3 [d]The integrity of the upright shall guide them:[1] but the perverseness of transgressors shall destroy them.

4 Riches profit not in the day of wrath: but righteousness delivereth from death.

5 The righteousness of the perfect shall [‡]direct his way: but the wicked shall fall by his own wickedness.

rich, are in a fair way to "become poor;" those "who deal with a slack hand," who are careless and remiss in their business, and never mind which end goes foremost, nor ever set their hands vigorously to their work, or stick to it; "who deal with a deceitful hand," so it may be read, those who think to enrich themselves by fraud and tricking, will, in the end, impoverish themselves, not only by bringing the curse of God on what they have, but by forfeiting their reputation with men; none will care to deal with those who deal with slight of hand, and are honest only with good looking to. Who they are, who, though poor, are in a fair way to become rich; those who are diligent, and honest, who are careful about their affairs, and what their hands find to do, do it with all their might, in a fair and honourable way, those are likely to increase what they have. "The hand of the acute," so some; of those who are sharp, but not sharpers; "the hand of the active," so others; the stirring hand gets a penny.

MEMORY OF THE JUST.—Ver. 7. Good men are, and ought to be, well-spoken of when they are gone; it is one of the blessings that "comes upon the head of the just," even when their head is laid. Blessed men leave behind them blessed memories. 1. It is part of the dignity of the saints, especially those who excel in virtue, and are eminently useful, that they are remembered with respect when they are dead; their good name, their name with good men, for good things, is then in a special manner as "precious ointment," Eccl. vii. 1. Those that honour God, he will thus honour, Ps. cxii. 3, 6, 9. "The elders" by faith "obtained a good report," Heb. xi. 2, and, being dead, are yet spoken of. 2. It is part of the duty of the survivors; "Let the memory of the just be blessed," so the Jews read it; and observe it as a precept, not naming an eminently just man that is dead, without adding, "Let his memory be blessed." We must delight in making an honourable mention of good men that are gone; bless God for them, and for his gifts and graces that appeared in them; and especially be followers of them in "that which is good."

LOQUACITY.—Ver. 19. We are here admonished concerning the government of the tongue, that necessary duty of a Christian. 1. It is good to say little, because "in the multitude of words their wanteth not sin," or "sin doth not cease." Usually, they that speak much, speak much amiss; and among many words there cannot but be many idle words, which they must shortly give an account of. They that love to hear themselves talk, do not consider what work they are making for repentance; for that will be wanted, and, first or last, will be had, where "there wanteth not sin." 2. It is therefore good to "keep our mouth as with a bridle;" "He that refrains his lips," that often checks himself, suppresses what he has thought, and holds in that which would transpire, he is a wise man; it is an evidence of his wisdom, and he therein consults his own peace. Little said, soon amended, Amos v. 13; Jam. i. 19.

GOD'S ENRICHING BLESSING.—Ver. 22. Worldly wealth is that which most men have their hearts very much upon, but they generally mistake both in the nature of the thing they desire, and in the way by which they hope to compass it; we are therefore told here, 1. What that wealth is which is indeed desirable; not having abundance only, but having it, and "no sorrow with it;" no disquieting care to get and keep it; no vexation of spirit in the enjoyment of it; no tormenting grief for the loss of it; no guilt contracted by the abuse of it. To have it, and to have a heart to take the comfort of it; to do good with it, and to serve God with joyfulness and gladness of heart in the use of it. 2. Whence this desirable wealth is to be expected; not by making ourselves drudges to the world, Ps. cxxvii. 2, but by "the blessing of God," that is it that "makes rich, and adds no sorrow;" what comes from the love of God, has the grace of God for its companion.—Henry.

CHAP. XI. HONESTY.—Ver. 1. Nothing is more offensive to God than deceit in commerce. "A false balance" is here put for all manner of unjust and fradulent practices in dealing with any person, which are all "an abomination to the Lord," and render those abominable to him that allow themselves in the use of such cursed arts of thriving. It is an affront to justice, which God is the patron of, as well as a wrong to our neighbour, whom God is the protector of. Men make light of such frands, and think there is no sin in that which there is money to be got by, and, while it passes undiscovered, they cannot blame themselves for it.

SURETYSHIP.—Ver. 15. There is danger of bringing ourselves into trouble by it, and our families too, when we are gone; "He that is surety for a stranger," for any one that asks him, and promises him to be bound for him another time, for one whose person perhaps he knows, and thinks he knows his circumstances, but is mistaken, he "shall smart for it," Contritione conteretur—He shall be certainly and sadly crushed and broken by it, and perhaps become a bankrupt. Our Lord Jesus was Surety for us when we were strangers, nay, enemies, and he smarted for it; it pleased the Lord to bruise him. He that resolves against all such suretyship keeps upon sure grounds, which a man may do, if he take care not to launch out any further into business than his own credit will carry him, so that he needs not ask others to be bound for him.

LIBERALITY.—Ver. 24. Note, 1. A man may grow rich by prudently spending what he has; may scatter in works of piety, charity, and generosity, and yet may increase; nay, by that means may increase as the corn is increased by being sown. By cheerfully using what we have, our spirits are exhilarated, and so fitted for the business we have to do; by minding which closely what we have is increased; it gains a reputation which contributes to the increase. But it is especially to be ascribed to God; he blesses the giving hand, and so makes it a getting hand, 2 Cor. ix. 10. "Give and it shall be given you." 2. A man may grow poor by meanly sparing what he has, "withholding more than is meet," not paying just debts, not relieving the poor, not providing what is convenient for the family, not allowing necessary expenses for the preservation of the goods; this "tends to poverty;" it cramps men's ingenuity and industry, weakens their interest, destroys their credit, and forfeits the blessing of God: and let men be ever so saving of what they have, if God blast it, and blow upon it, it comes to nothing.

WINNING SOULS.—Ver. 30. This shows what great blessings good men are, especially those that are eminently wise, to the places where they live, and therefore how much to be valued. 1. The righteous are as "trees of life;" the fruits of their piety and charity, their instructions, reproofs, examples, and prayers, their interest in heaven, and their influence upon earth, are like the fruits of that tree, precious and useful, contributing to the support and nourishment of the spiritual life in many; they are the ornaments of paradise, God's church on earth, for whose sake it stands. 2. The wise are something more, they are as trees of knowledge, not forbidden, but commanded, knowledge. "He that is wise," by communicating his wisdom, "wins souls;" wins upon them to bring them in love with God and holiness, and so wins them over into the interests of God's kingdom among men. The wise are said to "turn many to righteousness," and that is the same with winning souls here, Dan. xii. 3. Abraham's proselytes are called "the souls that he had gotten," Gen. xii. 5.—Henry.

CHAP. XII. THE VIRTUOUS WOMAN.—Ver. 4. 1. He that is blessed with a good wife is as happy as if he were upon the throne, for she is no less than "a crown" to him. "A virtuous woman," that is pious and prudent, ingenious and industrious, that is active for the good of her family, and looks well to the ways of her household, that makes conscience of her duty in every relation, a woman of spirit, that can bear crosses without disturbance, such a one owns her husband for her head, and therefore she "is a crown" to him; not only a credit and honour to him, as a crown is an ornament, but supports and keeps up his authority in his family, as a crown is an ensign of power. She is submissive and faithful to him, and therefore teaches his children and servants to be so too. 2. He that is plagued with a bad wife is as miserable as if he were upon the dunghill; for she is no better than "rottenness in his bones," an incurable disease; moreover, "she makes him ashamed."—Henry.

VAIN PRIDE.—Ver. 9. Many persons who have been brought up in the higher ranks of life, but have not proportionable wealth, are too proud to employ themselves in inferior occupations; and thus they become miserably poor, want things necessary for themselves and families, spunge upon their friends, and even defraud their creditors, to maintain a vain appearance of dignity. But he who is despised for engaging in a mean employment, and wearing a homely appearance, but by so doing can have the comforts of life without dependence or disingenuous arts, is more happy, wise, useful, and respectable, than "he that honoureth himself, and lacketh bread."—The old translation (with which many versions agree) gives a different sense to this proverb. "He that is despised, and is 'his own servant,' is better than he that boasteth himself, and wanteth bread." The poor man, who is despised, yet lives by his honest labour, is more valuable and happy than the proud boaster.—Scott.

FALSEHOOD.—Ver. 22. We are here taught, 1. To hate lying, and to keep at the utmost distance from it, because it is an abomination to the Lord, and renders those abominable, in his sight, that allow themselves in it; not only because it is a breach of his law, but because it is destructive to human society. 2. To make conscience of truth, not only in our words, but in all our actions; because those that "deal truly" and sincerely, in all their dealings, are "his delight," and he is well pleased with them. We delight to converse with, and make use of, those that are honest, and that we may put a confidence in; such, therefore, let us be, that we may recommend ourselves to the favour both of God and man.

DILIGENCE.—Ver. 24. 1. Industry is the way to preferment. Solomon advanced Jeroboam, because he saw that he was an industrious young man, and minded his business, 1 Kings xi. 28. Men that take pains in study and serviceableness, will thereby gain such an interest and reputation as will give them a dominion over all about them, by which means many have risen strangely. He that has been "faithful in a few things" shall be made "ruler over many things." The elders, that "labour in the word and doctrine," are "worthy of double honour;" and those that are diligent when they are young will get that which will enable them to rule, and so to rest, when they are old. 2. Knavery is the way to slavery; "The slothful" and careless, or rather the "deceitful, (for so the word signifies,) shall be under tribute." Those that, because they will not take pains in an honest calling, live by their shifts and arts of dishonesty, are paltry and beggarly, and will be kept under. Those that are diligent and honest, when they are apprentices, will come to be masters; but those that are otherwise are the fools which, all their days, must be "servants to the wise in heart."—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. THE WISE SON.—Ver. 1. Among the children of the same parents, it is no new thing for some to be hopeful, and others the contrary; now here we are taught 18 There is [n]that speaketh like the piercings of a sword: [o]but the tongue of the wise is health.

19 The [p]lip of truth shall be established for ever: [q]but a lying tongue[4] is but for a moment.

20 Deceit is in the heart of them that imagine evil: but to the counsellors of peace is joy.

21 There shall no evil happen to the just: but the wicked shall be filled with mischief.

22 Lying lips are abomination to the LORD: but they that deal truly are his delight.

23 A prudent man concealeth knowledge: but the heart of fools proclaimeth foolishness.

24 The hand of the diligent shall bear rule: but the *slothful shall be under tribute.

25 [d]Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop: [e]but a good word maketh it glad.

26 The righteous is more †excellent than his neighbour: but the way of the wicked seduceth them.

27 The [h]slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting: [i]but the substance of a diligent man is precious.

28 In the way of righteousness is life; and in the pathway thereof there is no death.

CHAP. XIII.

A WISE son heareth his father's instruction: [b]but a scorner heareth not rebuke.

2 A man shall [c]eat good by the fruit of his mouth: but the soul of the transgressors shall eat violence.

3 He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life: but he that openeth wide his lips shall have destruction.

4 The soul of the sluggard desireth, and hath nothing: [g]but the soul of the diligent shall be made fat.

5 A righteous man hateth lying: but a wicked man [k]is loathsome, [l]and cometh to shame.

6 Righteousness keepeth him that is upright in the way: but wickedness overthroweth *the sinner.

7 There is that maketh himself rich,[1] yet hath nothing: there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches.

8 The [p]ransom of a man's life are his riches: but the poor heareth not rebuke.

9 The light of the righteous rejoiceth:[2] but the †lamp of the wicked shall be put out.

10 [u]Only by pride cometh contention: but [x]with the well advised is wisdom.

11 Wealth gotten by vanity shall be diminished: but [z]he that gathereth ‡by labour shall increase.

12 Hope deferred maketh the heart sick: but [b]when the desire cometh, it is [c]a tree of life.

13 Whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed: but he that feareth the commandment shall [§]be rewarded.

14 The law of the wise[3] is a fountain of life, [h]to depart from the snares of death.

15 Good understanding giveth favour: but the way of transgressors is hard.

16 Every prudent man dealeth with knowledge: but a fool [l]layeth open his folly.

17 A [n]wicked messenger falleth into mischief: [o]but *a faithful ambassador is health.

18 Poverty and shame shall be to him that refuseth instruction: but he that regardeth reproof shall be honoured.

19 [r]The desire accomplished is sweet to the soul: but it is abomination to fools to [t]depart from evil.

20 He that walketh with wise men shall be wise: [x]but a companion of fools shall be †destroyed.

21 Evil pursueth sinners: but to the righteous good shall be repaid.

22 A good man [a]leaveth an inheritance to his children's children: and the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

23 Much food is in the tillage of the poor; but there is that is destroyed for want of judgment.

24 He that [e]spareth his rod[4] [f]hateth his son: [g]but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes.

25 The [h]righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul: but [i]the belly of the wicked shall want.

CHAP. XIV.

EVERY [a]wise woman buildeth her house: but the foolish plucketh it down with her hands.

2 He [c]that walketh in his uprightness feareth the LORD: but he that is perverse in his ways despiseth him.

3 In the mouth of the foolish is a rod of pride:[1] but the lips of the wise shall preserve them.

4 Where no oxen are, the crib is clean: [h]but much increase is by the strength of the ox.

5 A faithful witness will not lie: but a false witness will utter lies.

6 A scorner seeketh wisdom, and findeth it not:[2] but knowledge is easy unto him that understandeth.

7 Go [m]from the presence of a foolish man, when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge.

8 The wisdom of the prudent is to understand his way: but [o]the folly of fools is deceit.

9 [p]Fools make a mock at sin: but [q]among the righteous there is favour.

10 The [r]heart knoweth *his own bitterness; and a stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy.

to distinguish, 1. There is great hope of those that have a reverence for their parents, and are willing to be advised and admonished by them. He is "a wise son," and is in a fair way to be wiser, that "hears his father's instruction," desires to hear it, regards it, and complies with it, and does not only give it the hearing. 2. There is little hope of those that will not so much as "hear rebuke" with any patience, but scorn to submit to government, and scoff at those that deal faithfully with them. How can those mend a fault who will not be told of it, but count those their enemies who do them that kindness?—Henry.

PRIDE.—Ver. 10. "Only by pride will a man engage in contention," &c. The various quarrels which disquiet the world, whether in families, churches, or communities, or between nations, with all the fatal consequences of them, are in general excited and perpetuated by pride. From that odious principle arise resentment, revenge, envy, and ambition; and though other vicious dispositions excite contentions, yet disputes would more easily be prevented or terminated, if pride did not intervene. Some point of honour must be maintained, some affront must be resented, some rival must be crushed or eclipsed, some renowned character emulated, or some superior equalled and surpassed. But they who hear prudent counsel, will show their wisdom by avoiding quarrels and disputes. "They whose minds are infected with a vain opinion of themselves, either cannot see the truth, or if they do, they will not acknowledge it, for fear they should yield and confess themselves overcome."

PARENTAL AUTHORITY.—Ver. 24. The perverseness of our fallen nature renders correction necessary to children. He, therefore, who indulges his son, connives at his perverseness, suffers him to contract vicious habits, and to grow stubborn in rebellion, for want of correction; acts as if he hated him, because he permits those diseases of the mind to gather strength, which will prove the sources of inexpressible sorrow to him in this world, and perhaps of eternal misery. Whereas the parent, who wisely loves his child, will early begin to teach him submission, application, and the government of his passions; and having thus bent the tender twig, and established his authority, he will gradually be enabled to rule him more by persuasion and argument, and to treat with the lenity of a kind and prudent friend. But when children are permitted to get the mastery in their tender years, they can scarcely ever after be taught submission; and the attempt is often [illegible] which is both perilous and [illegible] [illegible] ver. 30. "[illegible] but he

CHAP. XIV. THE WISE WOMAN.—Ver. 1. Note, 1. A good wife is a great blessing to a family; by a fruitful wife a family is multiplied and replenished with children, and so built up; but by a prudent wife, one that is pious, industrious, and considerate, the affairs of the family are made to prosper, debts are paid, portions raised, provisions made, the children well educated and maintained, and the family has comfort within doors and credit without: thus is the house built. She looks upon it as her own to take care of, though she knows it is her husband's to bear rule in, Esth. i. 22. 2. Many a family is brought to ruin by ill housewifery, as well as by ill husbandry. A foolish woman, that has no fear of God, nor regard to her business, that is wilful, and wasteful, and humorsome; that indulges her ease and appetite, and is all for jaunting and feasting, cards and the playhouse; though she come to a plentiful estate, and to a family beforehand, she will impoverish and waste it, and will as certainly be the ruin of her house as if she "plucked it down with her hands;" and the husband himself, with all his care, can scarcely prevent it.—Henry.

THE SCORNER.—Ver. 6. "A scorner" is one who treats divine things with profane contempt. He thinks his own understanding equal to the investigation, and even comprehension, of every subject; he therefore rejects as false what he cannot account for, and finds contrary to his preconceived sentiments or vain reasonings; and, indeed, all that tends to condemn his conduct, or expose his folly. In this presumptuous frame he may seek for wisdom, even in the Scriptures, without success. The state of his heart disposes him to despise the sacred mysteries, the humbling doctrines, and the holy precepts of revelation; he will, therefore, by criticisms and bold conjectures, alter the text, or explain away its meaning. Or, disgusted by finding that those doctrines, which he dislikes, are certainly contained in the Bible, he will at length take shelter in infidelity. These are indeed modern ways in which "scorners seek wisdom, and find it not;" but doubtless the scorners of former days had methods equally successful of evading conviction, and closing their eyes against the light of truth.—"He that comes to seek after knowledge with a mind to scorn and censure, shall be sure to find enough for his humour, but none for his instruction." [Lord Bacon.]—"This humour of deriding, springs from a great pride and conceit of their own wit, which disposes them to seek wisdom, not from others, but wholely from themselves; and so they are not likely to find it, where it is not to be had."

A [a]SOFT answer turneth away wrath: but [b]grievous words stir up anger.

2 The tongue of the wise useth knowledge aright: but the mouth of fools *poureth out foolishness.

3 The eyes of the LORD are in every place, beholding the evil and the good.

4 [†]A wholesome tongue is a tree of life:[1] but perverseness therein is [f]a breach in the spirit.

5 A fool despiseth his father's instruction: [h]but he that regardeth reproof is prudent.

6 In [i]the house of the righteous is much treasure: but [k]in the revenues of the wicked is trouble.

7 The lips of the wise disperse knowledge: but the heart of the foolish doeth not so.

8 The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the LORD: but the prayer of the upright is his delight.

9 The way of the wicked is [q]an abomination unto the LORD: but [r]he loveth him that followeth after righteousness.

10 [‡]Correction is [s]grievous unto him that forsaketh the way: [t]and he that hateth reproof shall die.

11 [u]Hell and destruction are before the LORD: how much more then the hearts of the children of men?

12 A [y]scorner loveth not one that reproveth him: [z]neither will he go unto the wise.

13 A [a]merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance: but [b]by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken.[2]

14 The heart of him that hath understanding seeketh knowledge: but the mouth of fools feedeth on foolishness.

15 All the days [e]of the afflicted are evil: [f]but he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast.

16 Better is [g]little with the fear of the LORD, than great treasure and trouble therewith.

17 Better is [l]a dinner of herbs where love is,[3] than a stalled ox and hatred therewith.

18 A [k]wrathful man stirreth up strife: but [l]he that is slow to anger appeaseth strife.

19 The [m]way of the slothful man is as an hedge of thorns: but the way of the righteous is [§]made plain.

20 A [o]wise son maketh a glad father: but a foolish man [p]despiseth his mother.

21 Folly is joy to him that is [*]destitute of wisdom: but a man of understanding walketh uprightly.

22 [s]Without counsel purposes are disappointed: but in the multitude of counsellors they are established.

union, and competency. Moreover, they ensure the Divine blessing to the community, which must needs exalt any nation. But every kind of sin has the contrary tendency; the prevalency of vice and impiety is a national reproach; conduces to disunion, weakness, and disgrace; and exposes any people to the wrath and vengeance of God.—The word translated reproach is the same which is commonly rendered mercy or goodness, and this has given rise to other interpretations of the latter clause; as if it meant that mercy was as a sin-offering for any people, where it prevailed; and the margin of the old translation renders it "but the mercy of the people is the sacrifice for sin."—Others think it relates to the Gentiles, (the word people being plural,) and they render it, "The goodness of the nations is sin; meaning that the religion and virtues of idolaters, instead of righteousness, are sinful in the sight of God.—This interpretation is, doubtless, more scriptural than the preceding; but as the word in question does in one place evidently mean reproach or atrocious wickedness; ("a wicked thing,") Lev. xx. 17; and as a verb from the same root has clearly a similar meaning even in this book, chap. xxv. 10; so there appears no sufficient reason for altering our translation, and departing from the interpretation above given. The word indeed, (like some others in different languages,) seems to mean what is uncommon, either of goodness or of baseness; but more generally it is used in the former sense.—Scott.

CHAP. XV. MEEKNESS.—Ver. 1. Solomon, as conservator of the public peace, here tells us, 1. How the peace may be kept, that we may know how in our places to keep it; it is by soft words. If wrath be risen like a threatening cloud, pregnant with storms and thunder, "a soft answer" will disperse it and turn it away. When men are provoked, speak gently to them, and give them good words, and they will be pacified; as the Ephraimites were by Gideon's mildness, Judg. viii. 1—3; whereas, upon a like occasion, by Jephthah's roughness, they were exasperated, and the consequences were bad, Judg. xii. 1—3. Reason will be better spoken, and a righteous cause better pleaded, with meekness than with passion; hard arguments do best with soft words. 2. How the peace will be broken, that we, for our parts, may do nothing toward the breaking of it. Nothing stirs up anger and sows discord, like "grievous words," calling foul names, as "Raca," and "Thou fool," upbraiding men with their infirmities and infelicities, their extraction or education, or any thing that lessens them, and makes them mean; scornful, spiteful reflections, by which men affect to show their wit and malice, and stir up the anger of others, which does but increase and inflame their own anger. Rather than lose a jest some will lose a friend and make an enemy.—Henry.

HYPOCRISY.—Ver. 8, 9. The most costly sacrifices of the wicked, under the Mosaic law, must have been an abomination to the Lord; because their whole way was abominable to him, and because of their corrupt motives: and the case is precisely the same, with all external acts of worship, nay, with the largest oblations and most liberal alms, of the impenitent and unbelieving, under the Christian dispensation. For, by them, they either mean nothing determinate, or they intend to cover their sins, to bribe their Judge, to make compensation for past, or to purchase indulgences for future, transgressions; they put their vices in the stead either of Christ's atonement, or of holy obedience; they present them with hypocritical hearts; and they grossly afront the holy God, by supposing that he can be imposed on by forms or gifts, or pleased by them, whilst they are enemies to his justice, his authority, and his grace. But will the greatest of sinners, if he desires to repent, or seek salvation, be rejected?—Scott.

CHEERFULNESS.—Ver. 13. Here, 1. Harmless mirth is recommended to us, as that which contributes to the health of the body, making men lively, and fit for business, and to the acceptableness of the conversation, making the face to shine, and rendering us pleasant one to another. A cheerful spirit, under the government of wisdom and grace, is a great ornament to religion, puts a further lustre upon the beauty of holiness, and makes men the more capable of doing good. 2. Hurtful melancholy is what we are cautioned against, as a great enemy to us, both in our devotion and in our conversation; "By sorrow of the heart," when it has got dominion, and plays the tyrant, as it will be apt to do, if it be indulged a while, "the spirit is broken" and sunk, and becomes unfit for the service of God. "The sorrow of the world works death." Let us therefore "weep as though we wept not," in justice to ourselves, as well as in conformity to God and his providence.

LOVE AND HARMONY.—Ver. 17. Next to the fear of God, peace with all men is necessary to the comfort of this life. 1. If "brethren dwell together in unity," if they are friendly, and hearty, and pleasant, both in their daily meals and in more solemn entertainments, that will make "a dinner of herbs" a feast sufficient; though the fare be coarse, and the estate so small, that they can afford no better, yet love will sweeten it, and they may be as merry over it as if they had all dainties. 2. If there be mutual enmity and strife, though there be a whole ox for dinner, a fat ox, there can be no comfort in it; the leaven of malice, of hating and being hated, is enough to sour it all. Some refer it to him that makes the entertainment; better have a slender dinner, and be heartily welcome, than a table richly spread with a grudging evil eye.

A WORD IN SEASON.—Ver. 23. "Then" we speak wisely, when we speak seasonably; "The answer of the mouth" will "then" be our credit and joy, when it is pertinent, and to the purpose, and is "spoken in due season," when it is needed, and will be regarded, and, as we say, hits the joint. Many a good word comes short of doing the good it might have done, for want of being well-timed. Nor is any thing more the beauty of discourse than to have a proper answer ready off-hand, just when there is occasion for it, and it comes in well.—Henry.

CHAP. XVI. PRUDENCE.—Ver. 1. 1. "Man purposes;" he has a freedom of thought, and a freedom of will permitted him; let him form his projects, and lay his schemes, as he thinks best: but after all, 2, "God disposes;" man cannot go on with his business without the assistance and blessing of God, who "made man's mouth," and teaches us what we shall say. Nay, God easily can, and often does, cross men's purposes, and break their measures. It was a curse that was prepared in Balaam's heart, but the answer of the tongue was a blessing.—Henry.

ROYAL ANGER.—Ver. 14, 15. The monarchs of the east had the power of life and death, without any check or control, and often sent messengers to inflict vengeance at once on such as had offended them. A wise man would therefore be very careful not to provoke one so powerful; or, if he had inadvertently given offence, he would make every allowable submission, in order to pacify him: and many would be candidates for the favour of a sovereign who could so much promote their prosperity. But this ought to have been an additional reason to these princes why their frowns and favours should be directed entirely according to the good or bad behaviour of those around them.—The word rendered "pacify" is the same as that before translated "purge" iniquity, but here man, not God, is spoken of. We may compensate for our offences against our fellow-creatures, but not for our sins against God.—Scott.

PRIDE.—Ver. 18. Pride will have a fall. Those that are of a "haughty spirit," that think of themselves above what is meet, and look with contempt upon others, that with their pride affront God and disquiet others, they will be brought down, either by repentance or by ruin. It is the honour of God to humble the proud, Job xl. 11, 12. It is the act of justice, that those who have lifted up themselves should be laid low. Pharaoh, Sennacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, were instances of this. Men cannot punish pride, but either admire it or fear it, and therefore God will take the punishing of it into his own hands. Let him alone to deal with proud men.

PIETY IN OLD AGE.—If old people "be found in the way of righteousness," their age will be their honour. Old age, as such, is honourable, and commands respect; "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head," Lev. xix. 32, but if it be found in the way of wickedness, its honour is forfeited, its crown profaned, and laid in the dust, Isa. lxv. 20. Old people, therefore, if they would preserve their honour, must still hold fast their integrity, and then their gray hairs are indeed "a crown" to them; they are "worthy of double honour." Grace is the glory of old age.

SELF-COMMAND.—Ver. 32. This recommends the grace of meekness to us, which will well become us all, particularly "the hoary head," ver. 31. Observe, 1. The nature of it; it is to be "slow to anger," not easily put into a passion, nor apt to resent provocation; taking time to consider, before we suffer our passion to break out, that it may not transgress due bounds; so slow in our motions towards anger, that we may be quickly stopped and pacified. 2. The honour of it: He that gets, and keeps, the mastery of his passions, he "is better than the mighty," better "than he that" by a long siege "takes a city," or by a long war subdues a country. Behold, a greater than Alexander or Cæsar is here! The conquest of ourselves, and our own unruly passions, requires more true conduct, and a more steady, constant, and regular management, than the obtaining of a victory over the forces of an enemy. A rational conquest is more honourable to a rational creature, than a brutal one. It is a victory that does nobody any harm; no lives or treasures are sacrificed to it, but only some base lusts. It is harder, and therefore more glorious, to quash an insurrection at home, than to resist an invasion from abroad; nay, such are the gains of meekness, that by it "we are more than conquerors."—Henry.

CHAP. XVII. OMNISCIENCE.—Ver. 3. Men both prove and refine the precious metals, by the furnace. Thus the Lord, by his providential dispensations, make an experimental trial of the hearts of rational creatures: he searches out and brings to light what was before concealed; and by manifold experiments he hath shown, that there is no dependence to be placed on any creature, left to itself. In like manner, he has shown what desperate wickedness the human heart contains, and of what enormities it is capable when exposed to suitable temptations, and detected the hypocrisy of many who were before unsuspected. By similar means he discovers the remaining evil concealed in the heart of true believers; he evidences the reality and the power of his grace in his servants; he makes them sensible, that they need constant watchfulness and dependence, and have great reason to be humble and thankful; and thus he purifies them from pride and sin, forms them to himself a peculiar people to show forth his praise, and prepares them for eternal glory. By these manifold trials of the heart, the Lord also discovers, and will discover to all the world, the justice and holiness, mercy, truth, and wisdom, of his final dealings with all his creatures.—Scott.

STRIFE.—Ver. 14. Here is, 1. The danger that there is in "the beginning of strife;" one hot word, one peevish reflection, one angry demand, one spiteful contradiction, begets another, and that a third, and so on, till it proves like the cutting of a dam; when the 6 Children's children are [h]the crown of old men; and the glory of children are their fathers.

18 A man void of [u]understanding striketh hands, and becometh surety in the presence of his friend.

19 He loveth transgression that loveth strife: and [v]he that exalteth his gate seeketh destruction.

20 [w]He that hath a froward heart findeth no good: and he that hath a perverse tongue falleth into mischief.

21 He [x]that begetteth a fool doeth it to his sorrow: and the father of a fool [y]hath no joy.

22 A merry heart doeth good [z]like a medicine: but [a]a broken spirit drieth the bones.

27 He that hath knowledge spareth his words: and a man of understanding is of [*]an excellent spirit.

28 Even a fool when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise: and he that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of understanding.

*THROUGH desire a man, having separated himself, [a]seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom.

2 A fool hath no delight in understanding, [d]but that his heart may discover itself.

3 When the wicked cometh, then cometh also contempt, and with ignominy reproach.[1]

4 The words of a man's mouth are as deep waters, and the wellspring of wisdom as a flowing brook.

5 It is [e]not good to accept the person of the wicked, [b]to overthrow the righteous in judgment.

6 A [i]fool's lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for strokes.

7 A fool's mouth is [k]his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul.

8 The [n]words of a [†]talebearer are [‡]as wounds,[2] and they go down into the [§]innermost parts of the belly.

9 He also that is slothful in his work is brother to him that is a great waster.

10 The name of the LORD is [r]a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is [s]safe.

11 The rich man's wealth is his strong city, and as an high wall in his own conceit.

12 Before destruction the heart of man is haughty, [x]and before honour is humility.

13 He [y]that [*]answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him.

14 The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity; but a wounded spirit who can bear?

15 The heart of the prudent getteth knowledge; and the ear of the wise seeketh knowledge.

16 A man's gift maketh room for him, and bringeth him before great men.

17 He [d]that is first in his own cause seemeth just; but his neighbour cometh and searcheth him.

18 The [e]lot causeth contentions to cease,[3] and parteth between the mighty.

water has got a little passage, it does itself widen the breach, bears down all before it, and there is then no stopping it, no reducing it. 2. A good caution inferred thence, to take heed of the first spark of contention, and to put it out as soon as ever it appears. Dread the breaking of the ice, for, if once broken, it will break further; therefore leave it off, not only when you see the worst of it, for then it may be too late, but when you see the first of it; Obsta principiis—Resist its earliest display; leave it off even "before it be meddled with;" leave it off, if it were possible, before you begin.

FRIENDSHIP.—Ver. 17. 1. Friends must be constant to each other "at all times;" that is not true friendship which is not constant; it will be so, if it be sincere, and actuated by a good principle. They that are fanciful or selfish in their friendship, will love no longer than their humour is pleased, and their interest served, and therefore their affections turn with the wind, and change with the weather; swallow-friends, that fly to you in summer, but are gone in winter; such friends there is no loss of. But if the friendship be prudent, generous, and cordial, if I love my friend because he is wise, and virtuous, and good, as long as he continues so, though he fall into poverty and disgrace, still I shall love him. Christ is a friend that loves at all times, John xiii. 1, and we must so love him, Rom. viii. 35. 2. Relations must in a special manner be careful and tender of one another in affliction; "A brother is born" to succour a brother or sister in distress, to whom he is joined so closely by nature, that he may the more sensibly feel from their burthens, and be the more strongly inclined and engaged, as it were by instinct, to help them. We must often consider what we were "born for," not only as men, but as in such a station and relation. "Who knows but we came" into such a family, "for such a time as this?" We do not answer the end of our relations, if we do not do the duty of them. Some take it thus; "A friend that loves at all times, is born," becomes "a brother in adversity," and is so to be valued.—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. GOD'S NAME OUR REFUGE.—Ver. 10. Here is, 1. God's sufficiency for the saints; His "name is a strong tower" for them, in which they may take rest when they are weary, and take sanctuary when they are pursued, where they may be lifted up above their enemies, and fortified against them. There is enough in God, and in the discoveries which he has made of himself to us, to make us easy at all times; the wealth laid up in this tower is enough to enrich them, to be a continual feast, and a continuing treasure, to them; the strength of this tower is enough to protect them; the name of the Lord is all that whereby he has made himself known as God, and our God, not only his titles and attributes, but his covenant and all the promises of it, these make up a tower, a strong tower, impenetrable, impregnable for all God's people. 2. The saints' security in God. It is a strong tower to those who know how to make use of it as such; the righteous, by faith and prayer, devotion toward God, and dependence on him, run into it as their city of refuge; having made sure their interest in God's name, they take the comfort and benefit of it; they go out of themselves, retire from the world, live above, dwell in God, and God in them, and so they are safe, they think themselves so, and they shall find themselves so.

A WOUNDED SPIRIT.—Ver. 14. The grievances of the spirit are of all others most heavy and hardly to be borne; these make sore the shoulders which should sustain the other infirmities. If the spirit be wounded by the disturbance of the reason, dejection under the trouble, whatever it is, and despair of relief; if the spirit be wounded by the amazing apprehensions of God's wrath for sin, and the fearful expectations of judgment and fiery indignation, "who can bear" this? Wounded spirits cannot help themselves, nor do others know how to help them. It is therefore wisdom to keep conscience void of offence.

THE BROTHER OFFENDED.—Ver. 19. Note, 1. Great care must be taken to prevent quarrels among relations, and those that are under special obligation to each other, not only because they are most unnatural and unbecoming, but because between such, things are commonly taken most unkindly, and resentments are apt to be carried too far. Wisdom and grace would indeed make it most easy to us to forgive our relations and friends, if they offend us, but corruption makes it most difficult to forgive them; let us therefore take heed of disobliging a brother, or one that has been as a brother; ingratitude is very provoking. 2. Great pains must be taken to compromise matters in variance between relations, with all speed, because it is a work of so much difficulty, and, consequently, the more honourable if it be done. Esau was a "brother offended," and seemed harder to be won than a "strong city," yet, by a work of God upon his heart, in answer to Jacob's prayer, he was won.—Henry.

CHAP. XIX. WEALTH AND POVERTY.—Ver. 4. 1. We may see how strong is men's love of money, that they will love any man, how undeserving soever he be otherwise, if he has but a deal of money, and is free with it, so that they may hope to be the better for it. Wealth enables a man to send many presents, make many entertainments, and do many good offices, and so gains him many friends, who pretend to love him, for they flatter him, and make their court to him, but really love what he has; or rather love themselves, hoping to get by him. 2. We may see how weak is men's love of one another; he who, while he prospered, was loved and respected, if he fall into poverty, is "separated from his neighbour," is not owned or looked upon, not visited or regarded,

BETTER is the poor that walketh in his integrity, than he that is perverse in his lips, and is a fool.

2 Also, [c]that the soul be without knowledge, it is not good; [d]and he that hasteth with his feet sinneth.

3 The foolishness of man perverteth his way:[1] and his heart fretteth against the LORD.

4 Wealth [g]maketh many friends; but [h]the poor is separated from his neighbour.

5 A false witness shall not *be unpunished; and he that speaketh lies shall not escape.

10 [t]Delight is not seemly for a fool; [u]much less for a servant to have rule over princes.[2]

11 The [§]discretion of a man deferreth his anger; [y]and it is his glory to pass over a transgression.

12 The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion; but his favour is as dew upon the grass.

16 He that keepeth the commandment [i]keepeth his own soul; but [k]he that despiseth his way shall die.

17 He [l]that hath pity upon the poor [m]lendeth unto the LORD; and [l]that which he hath given will he pay him again.

18 [n]Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare *for his crying.

19 A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment: for if thou deliver him, yet thou must [†]do it again.

20 Hear counsel, and receive instruction, that thou mayest be wise in the latter end.

21 There are [r]many devices in a man's heart: nevertheless the counsel of the LORD,[4] that shall stand.

22 The desire of a man is his kindness: and a poor man is better than a liar.

23 The fear of the LORD tendeth to life: and he that hath it [y]shall abide satisfied; [z]he shall not be visited with evil.

24 A slothful man hideth his hand in his bosom, and will not so much as bring it to his mouth again.

25 [b]Smite a scorner, and the simple will [‡]beware:[5] and [c]reprove one that hath understanding, and he will understand knowledge.

26 He that wasteth his father, and chaseth away his mother, is a son that causeth shame, and bringeth reproach.

27 [f]Cease, my son, to hear the instruction that causeth to err from the words of knowledge.

28 [§]An ungodly witness [g]scorneth judgment: and [h]the mouth of the wicked devoureth iniquity.

29 Judgments are prepared for scorners, [k]and stripes for the back of fools.

4 The sluggard will not plow by reason of the *cold;[1] [g]therefore shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing.

5 Counsel in the heart of man is like deep water, but a man of understanding will draw it out.

6 Most men will [l]proclaim every one his own goodness: [†k]but a faithful man who can find?

7 The just man walketh in his integrity: his children are blessed after him.

is bid to keep his distance, and told he is troublesome; even one that has been his neighbour and acquaintance, shall turn his face from him, and pass by on the other side; because men's consciences tell them they ought to relieve and succour such, they are willing to have this excuse, that they did not see them.—Henry.

IMBECILITY.—Ver. 10. Prosperity and abundance do not become foolish and wicked men: they behave themselves unseemly in circumstances which increase their insolence and presumption, and enable them to be more extensively mischievous, and in the event render them still more contemptible and miserable. Much less is it fit for men of low extraction and base spirits, to have influence over princes, or to domineer over those to whom eminent places properly belong. This is not uncommonly the folly of a weak prince, who makes some worthless minion his favourite, merely for his external embellishments, flattery, or willing subserviency to his pleasures. And thus he gives himself up to be ruled by his own servant, who engrosses all authority, and serves his own selfish purposes, at the expense of both king and people; and treats with insolence the most eminent and respectable persons; till jealousies are excited, parties formed, conspiracies and insurrections resolved on, and the state is thrown into convulsions.—"No man is fit to govern another who cannot govern himself."—Scott.

KINDNESS TO THE POOR.—Ver. 17. Here is, 1. The duty of charity described. It includes two things: (1.) Compassion; which is the inward principle of charity in the heart: it is to "have pity on the poor;" those that have not a penny for the poor, yet may have pity for them, a charitable concern and sympathy; and if a man "give all his goods to feed the poor," and have not this charity in his heart, "it is nothing," 1 Cor. xiii. 3. We must "draw out our souls to the hungry," Isa. lviii. 10. (2.) Bounty and liberality. We must not only pity the poor, but give, according to their necessity and our ability, Jam. ii. 15, 16. "That which he has given." Margin, "His deed." It is charity to do for the poor, as well as to give; and thus, if they have their limbs and senses, they may be charitable to one another. 2. The encouragement of charity. (1.) A very kind construction shall be put upon it; what is given to the poor, or done for them, God will place it to account as lent to him, lent "upon interest," so the word signifies; he takes it kindly, as if it were done to himself, and he would have us to take the comfort of it, and to be as well pleased as ever any usurer was when he had let out a sum of money into good hands. (2.) A very rich recompense shall be made for it; "he will pay him again," in temporal, spiritual, and eternal blessings. Alms-giving is the surest and safest way of thriving.—Henry.

SOUND DOCTRINE.—Ver. 27. "Cease, my son, from hearkening to instruction, in order to wander from the words of knowledge." "In order to profit by good instructions, no longer regard such as are of a contrary nature and tendency." As many turn away "their ears from the truth, and are turned unto fables;" so they that would hearken to the truth must turn away their ears from lies, especially such as are most plausible and agreeable, and set off with the greatest show of wit, genius, eloquence, and learning. —"Take heed what you hear;" and "Take heed how you hear." Mark iv. 24; Luke viii. 18. Insinuating infidels, sceptics, and ungodly men, who endeavour to argue young persons out of their religious scruples, and excite their contempt of their pious parents, or teachers, under the pretence of enlarging their minds, and freeing them from the shackles of prejudice and superstition; with all those ministers of religion, however distinguished, whose instructions are unscriptural, answer the description here given. They administer poison instead of medicine; and their books, sermons, harangues, and conversation should carefully be shunned.—"To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Scott.
